Mr. WADSWORTH. I think they received the 20 per cent extra foreign-service pay.

Mr. HARRISON. I have understood that they only receive now $60 a month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the lowest grade.

Mr. HARRISON. Most of them are in the lowest grade, are they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume so. That is always the case in any military establishment.

Mr. President, I rise, first, to a parliamentary inquiry. My recollection is that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] offered two amendments to this amendment upon the first day that the bill was brought up, first changing the 20 per cent in line 9 to 30 per cent, and that was voted upon, and then moving to strike out the proviso, and that was voted upon and defeated. Is it in order to move again to strike out the proviso?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I submit that the amendment as proposed in its present form raises a different question from the amendments as offered heretofore. It fixes a different percentage, and it couples them together, and they stand together. In the other instance they stood separate and apart. In other words, the test would be whether or not this amendment would carry with it a different effect from that which the other amendment would carry if adopted; and as a matter of fact it would carry with it a different effect if adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The former amendment was to strike out "20" and insert "30."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is to insert "31."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Then a motion was made to strike out the proviso, and that was voted upon and failed of passage. Now the Senator from Florida moves to strike it out again as part of another amendment. That question has already been voted upon by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the motion to strike out "20" and insert "31" is in order; that the rest of the motion, to strike out the proviso, is not in order in the Committee of the Whole; that the only way in which the question can be raised is to reserve a separate vote upon it when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope very much that the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] will be adopted. I think we all recognize the fact that the pay of officers and of men should be increased. I think it should be increased, and it seems to me the increases provided in the bill for the officers are reasonable and fair, and I intend to vote for that provision as far as the officers are concerned; but I think it is absolutely fair to the men that their compensation should be increased also. Their salaries are very small. They get $360 per year. We are having difficulty about getting troops for the Army, and no wonder, with the pay as small as it is. The increase provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Florida is only $117.50 for each man.

I think it is no more than fair that we should treat the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the same basis. We do not change their relative pay at all. The Senator from Oregon suggested that the position of the Senator from Florida was that we ought to increase the pay of privates to the same point as the pay of officers. I did not understand the Senator from Florida to make any such claim at all. His purpose was merely to raise them horizontally all along the line, recognizing the differences that now exist in the pay.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator? I did not claim that the Senator from Florida insisted upon raising the enlisted men's pay as high as the pay of the commissioned personnel. I said his logic led to that conclusion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator, then. I thought he said that the Senator from Florida had suggested doing that. Now, I think it is but fair that whatever rate of increase is given to the officers, we should provide the same increase for the men. It is because of the high cost of living that we are doing this thing. Very well; the same high cost of living applies to the enlisted men in the Army just exactly as it does to the officers, and the same rule ought to be applied. We ought not to have one yardstick by which to increase the pay of the officers and another one by which to increase that of the men.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the Army pays for the clothing of the men, furnishes them their food, and furnishes them their quarters, so that the high cost of living has absolutely nothing to do with their living expenses, whereas with the officers they have to furnish their own clothing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; the high cost of living does have everything to do with the living expenses of the men. We know that the very small allowance given the men is not sufficient to support them properly, and we are having great trouble in the Army to-day because we can not get more recruits, and we ought to have them. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Florida will be agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment may not prevail. I speak from the standpoint of the enlisted man. The idea of the private soldier not receiving any additional compensation now applies only to the men when they first go in. In the first place, they can not be married men when they go in, because the rules prevent that. They go in usually as young men for the first term as apprentices, for what they can learn and what they can see, and, if they remain longer, they receive an increase in pay. If they become good soldiers, they become privates of the first class and then are promoted up through the several grades—corporal, sergeant, and so on. So the class to which the proposed increase of pay does not apply are merely the ones who are there to-day and perhaps to-morrow, but usually for a short time, or for only a short time at that salary.

As to the cost of living, they not only get their clothing but they get their food; they get it cooked and delivered to them; they have their beds to go to; while an officer has all of that to provide for himself. The commissioned officers do not reach the rate of pay that has been mentioned by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] until they have served a long time. For instance, the pay of $4,000 for a major is the maximum after he has served some 20 years. For the first five years he receives only $3,000 per annum, a lieutenant colonel only $3,500, a colonel only $4,000 after that length of time. Whether men in the Army are officers or not, they are likely to be married and have families. This bill provides very heavy increases of pay for those enlisted men who may have families and have served a long time.

The term "private" is entirely different from the term "enlisted man," because the latter term covers a large proportion of higher-paid men; it covers a much larger number of first-class privates and noncommissioned officers than of privates proper.

These men not only have their clothing and their food furnished them but they have the very best of medical attention; they have the best of dental attention; they have the education there for them if they will take it—vocational and otherwise. Thus the high cost of living for the enlisted man is all borne by the Government, and this of itself amounts to a very large increase in pay. In fact, except in times of war—when, of course, all soldiers have to take like risks—life is made as easy for them as anyone could naturally expect if they have no especial duties to perform. It means merely that they get an amount of training that keeps them in a healthful and fit condition and that educates them.

As I said before, thousands of these men enlist and go into the Army for the time being, with no intention of serving longer than the one term, and if they had no pay at all they would consider that there was no loss but that there was some gain, because, as has been asked by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], how many of the clerks in Washington are laying up money? How many spend as they go everything they make? A soldier has what is paid to him absolutely clear. There is no occasion for him to spend a nickel except for postage or for tobacco, if he uses it; and his tobacco, or much of it, is furnished him by the Red Cross, Salvation Army, Young Men's Christian Association, and other associations.

When an enlisted man is a good soldier he almost immediately rises above the first-grade payment. If he is a marksman, he receives more each month for that. If he reenlists, he receives more. If he becomes a first-class private, he receives more, and, of course, much more as a noncommissioned officer. In fact, a great many of the enlisted men receive and save more than it is possible for any officer to save during a year, no matter what his rank may be.

The man who enlists in the Army goes in of his own accord. He knows what the future is; he knows there is a chance to rise. The officer goes into the Army and takes his chances of rising. It takes time, long service, continual education. He becomes married, has a family, spends as he goes, and, as we all know, the officers at retirement time are almost always without any competence and have hardly enough to make good the fall between full pay and the three-quarters pay of retirement.

When a private goes in and remains a private, does not rise to the rank of private of the first class, almost always it is his own fault, lack of application. But take the ne'er-do-wells who go into the Army, and they are becoming fewer and fewer, their service does not always last even a great proportion of the term of enlistment.

The officers of the Army have not, since the remembrance of anyone in this Chamber, had any rise in salary except in 1908, a rise that averaged less than 10 per cent. Ordinary privates in the ranks had a rise since that time from $13 to $15, and that has been doubled since, and first-class privates and all the other enlisted men have had still higher rates of increase. There is also provision for 20 per cent extra pay for foreign service, whether in war or in peace. So that so far as the conditions relatively are concerned they have had their salaries doubled and nearly trebled, while the officers have had merely an increase of 10 to 20 per cent.

The men in the ranks may be concerned in the high cost of living if they have families, but otherwise it is no concern of theirs, so far as their own salaries and the opportunity to save those salaries are concerned.

The officers, I submit, who have had one increase of 10 or 15 per cent and now have another one offered are relatively worse treated than are the privates. But when one considers that of the privates some 40 per cent are the only ones who draw about $30 or $33, and that a great proportion of the enlisted force are receiving two, three, and some of them about four times that increase, one can see that the purpose is to provide for the soldier, first, to make him fit, and second, to provide for those who have increasing responsibilities with age and accumulation of family.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and in just a word or two I wish to give my reasons for not voting for it.

This increase for the officers is intended to meet the increased cost of living. That is largely the reason given. I would be glad to see the increase limited to two years, with a view of continuing it if the present cost of living continues as it is, but when things get to be normal, to return to the old figures of pay.

But as to the privates, the increased cost of living does not reach them. That percentage of increase falls on the Government. They get the increase by reason of the fact that it costs the Government an amount beyond what it formerly cost to feed and clothe them. As the cost of food has increased, as the cost of clothing has increased, these elements that affect the cost of living, privates receive by the Government paying for it. The Government does not furnish the officers food and clothing. So I think the privates get their increase due to the increased cost of living paid by the Government for the cost of their living.

Again, Mr. President, my hope for the Army is that the enlistments will be for short service, made up of young men who have finished the grammar schools, but have not funds to continue their education. With the liberal provision that has been carried in a recent bill for training outside of the military training to be given privates in the service, as we settle down to normal conditions and have the men in camps and not in active service, I hope that substantial benefits may come to the privates from the educational opportunities for character building and vocational training that has been provided. If with proper enthusiasm that kind of service is given to the privates it will be worth the while of the young men who have not the opportunity to go beyond the grammar school in their educational preparation for life to spend a couple of years in the Army, with their expenses paid, and take advantage of what I hope will be the substantial facilities afforded for special training for different lines and callings.

The situation differentiates the private entirely from the officer, and the reason for the percentage of increase to the officer in no sense applies to the private. It is the officer's life business. I hope that with most of the privates it will be a temporary training school. One is the business of the man for life; the other, I trust, may be a training school, helpful to young men between the ages of 18 and 21, and so helpful to them that the button which shows that a young man served as a private in the Army means that that young man has learned the importance of discipline, of self-denial, of respect for authority; and also that he has had special training in some vocational line that will fit him the better for civil life.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Chair to a recent ruling on this proposition. The Chair has ruled that since we voted on the proviso another vote can not be taken on it, but a vote can be taken on raising the per cent from 20 to 31. That places me in this attitude:

Personally, I am in favor of the increase from 20 to 31 per cent and striking out the proviso, because I think it ought to apply to all the privates and not to a part of the privates. But if we are defeated, for instance, in the amendment now pending, raising the 20 per cent to 31 per cent, without a vote on the proviso, and it gets into the Senate, then the vote will come, say, on the 20 per cent and the proviso together, and if we vote against it, it leaves in the bill the 50 per cent increase; that is, if the committee amendment is not carried.

It does seem to me that we ought to have an opportunity to vote on the whole amendment, because we have not done that. We have voted only on the increase from 20 to 31 per cent. At another time we voted on whether or not the proviso should be incorporated in the bill. Those were separate amendments. We have never voted on the proposition to strike out 20 per cent and insert 31 per cent, and in the same amendment to strike out the proviso. Consequently, when the bill comes into the Senate, under the rules of the Senate we will be in a position where we must vote against the committee amendment and leave in the bill the original provision of 50 per cent.

Personally, I am not in favor of raising it to 50 per cent, because that would be much more than the increase provided for the officers. But I am in favor of making the increase for the privates as much as the increase for the officers, namely, 31 per cent. However, under the ruling of the Chair, unless we can vote on the proposition as now offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] raising the 20 per cent to 31 per cent and striking out at the same time the proviso, we will never have an opportunity in the Senate of voting for that proposition.

So I submit to the Chair that in view of that state of affairs we ought to be permitted to vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

In further discussion of the matter, I may say that there may be Senators who would have voted against increasing the amount to 31 per cent from 20 per cent, but who would have voted to strike out the proviso, and vice versa, so we ought to have an opportunity of voting straight on the proposition of reducing it from a 50 per cent increase as originally proposed in the bill and increasing the 20 per cent as suggested by the committee to 31 per cent, and on the proviso at the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think that the right is foreclosed to raise those questions in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that we can ask it in the Senate. For instance, if the amendment, as proposed by the Senator from Florida, to the committee amendment is defeated, the 20 per cent increase remains in the bill. We have already voted on the proviso and it remains in the bill. Therefore when we get into the Senate we can vote on the proposition of striking out all the Senate committee amendment, namely, the 20 per cent increase and the proviso; but if we should strike it out it would leave in the bill the 50 per cent increase. Some of us are not in favor of the 50 per cent increase, but we are in favor of giving them a 31 per cent increase.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not see any reason why the Senator can not offer an amendment to that effect in the Senate. Why not?

Mr. HARRISON. That is very satisfactory, if we can do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Committee of the Whole business is utter folly. It has been carried down through generations, but it is utter folly and ought to have been done away with years ago. The Committee of the Whole originated in legislative bodies when there were no such things as committees to consider bills. A bill was introduced, the body resolved itself into committee of the whole, the regular presiding officer left the chair, and the committee of the whole, acting as Senate committees now act, made amendments and reported them then to the body. The Committee of the Whole ought to have been abolished long ago. The only thing it does is to give a double chance. If you get cleaned out in Committee of the Whole, you can start in and try it again in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the ruling of the Chair when cleaned out in Committee of the Whole the same proposition can be renewed in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt at all that if the 31 per cent proposition failed, and if the proviso was adopted, you could have a seperate vote on the proviso when it came into the Senate, and if it fails there you can move to strike out 50 per cent and insert 31 per cent. You can do anything in the Senate that you can do in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRISON. The thing I want to get at is, if the 31 per cent amendment fails, the proviso as already carried being then in the bill, will we be permitted in the Senate to offer an amendment increasing the 20 per cent to 31 per cent, and vote on that together with the proviso at one and the same time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee, whatever they may be, when we get through the Committee of the Whole, you can move to insert something else. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. If that is the ruling of the Chair, it is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was to prevent three votes instead of two on the question that the Chair ruled. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I am released on this vote and at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. GAY's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GAY] on business of the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I have agreed to take care of him by a pair during his absence, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I learn that that Senator has not voted. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSDELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of illness, of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

The roll call resulted—yeas 18, nays 28, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment proposed by the committee the yeas are 18 and the nays are 28. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] being present make a quorum. The amendment to the amendment is rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to reserve the right to have a separate vote on the amendment in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that it is desired to reserve a vote in the Senate on the amendment just acted upon.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to reserve a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment, or to offer an amendment in the Senate increasing the percentage of increase for privates from 20 per cent to 31 per cent, and also to strike out the proviso.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the other amendments to the bill which have been made as in Committee of the Whole. Without objection, they are concurred in. The question now recurs on concurring in the reserved committee amendment. Is the Senator from Mississippi now prepared to offer his amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I am. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 1, line 9, before the word "per cent," to strike out "20" and to insert "31," and also to strike out the proviso beginning in line 10, on page 1, and going down to the end of line 2, on page 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute amendment for the committee amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in reference to my pair and its transfer as I previously made, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the same announcement regarding my pair and its transfer as previously made, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding the transfer of my pair as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Reiterating my previous announcement upon the last vote concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. RANSDELL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. BECKHAM. Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I find that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the negative). The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], to whom I transferred my pair, having returned to the Chamber and voted, I now transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and will permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29, as follows:

So Mr. HARRISON'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the committee amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the bill subject to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the bill by adding a new section, as follows:

This act shall expire by limitation June 30, 1922.

The proposed amendment continues the act in force for two years. It seems to me that at the expiration of that time conditions will be so changed as to require new legislation. In my opinion it would be unwise to fasten this bill upon the country for an indefinite period. If it be conceded that there should be an increase in the pay of officers and others who are in the military and naval service of the country, because of the high cost of living, then, I submit, there should be a time limit upon the measure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that, of course, is a question of judgment. It is pretty hard for us to say what is going to happen two years from now, but I venture to say to the Senator from Utah that when the two-year period shall have expired the Congress of that day will not reduce the pay of anybody, no matter what has happened in the interim.

The important thing in this bill is that the great bulk of the increase in pay is brought about through the payment of a commuted ration, so that if the cost of living has gone down when two years shall have expired the Government's outlay probably will decrease by just that much, because it will cost that much less to purchase and distribute the rations to the officers and to the men. If the life of the proposed act is limited to a fixed period the doors will be thrown open all over again, and if a new arbitrary adjustment is attempted by legislation expressed in dollars and cents to conform with the changed living conditions of that period, if they shall have been changed, Congress will be confronted with the same old difficulty of trying to figure out how much money in cash shall be paid to a man in order to give him what is known as a living wage. The plan of affording an increase by a commutation of rations gives him a living wage, no matter what the living cost, and I had hoped that feature would become permanently fixed in the pay schedules of the Army and Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the arguments which have been made in support of this bill are that the low compensation allowed officers, coupled with the very great increase in the cost of living, has made it impossible for them to remain in the Army and that many of them are resigning. There is a great deal to be said in favor of allowing some increase in the compensation of officers, but the conditions that will prevail two years from now, of course, no one knows. It seems to me that when we get back to normal conditions many things will need readjustment, and I believe that with this act in force for two years we can see its virtues and its infirmities, and at the end of the two years we will be prepared to deal justly and fairly with the officers and the privates of the Army. I am not satisfied with this bill and will feel constrained to vote against it; but if the tendered amendment is adopted, I should feel strongly inclined to vote for it. If conditions at the end of the two-year period have so changed that the compensation prescribed by this bill be too great, then Congress can deal with it in a suitable manner. If Congress were not constantly in session, it would be a different proposition; but we know from the history of the past few years that Congress will be in session practically all the time, and with the experience under this bill we will be enabled to deal fairly and justly with the situation when we are confronted with it.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service."

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1699, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Beckham	Harding	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	Myers	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	New	Thomas
Capper	Henderson	Norris	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dillingham	King	Pomerene	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Ransdell	Williams
Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ga.

Mr. GRONNA. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. ASHURST and Mr. PITTMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. PHIPPS, and Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it proper in the midst of the roll call to make a motion to adjourn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 4, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 3, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Milton O. Beebe, Chaplain of the United States Army, as follows:

Our Father, it is with a sense of gratitude for Thy past mercy and dependence upon Thee for present blessings that we call upon Thy name this morning. Help us to go forth to the duties of to-day unafraid, with a consciousness of Thy presence ever with us, knowing that until the evening shadows fall, indeed forever, Thou wilt be our guide. Give us strength to do only those things Thou wouldst have us to do and which will reflect honor on Thy holy name among our fellows. For our Nation we pray that it may be Christian in every essential. For those who create our policies and establish our laws we pray for divine guidance and wisdom. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HELIUM GAS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a brief statement as to the discovery, use, and production of helium, a non-combustible gas, about which there is much misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of helium gas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

To Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby resign as member of Committee on Agriculture, to take effect at once.

E. J. JONES,
Twenty-first District, Pennsylvania.

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House, Capitol.

MY DEAR SIR: I respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the following-named committees: Invalid Pensions, Census, Insular Affairs, Expenditures of the Department of Commerce.

Respectfully, yours.

WILLIS J. HULINGS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby present my resignation as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Very truly, yours,

HENRY W. WATSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following nominations for election to membership of committees, and move their election.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL moves the election of the following Members to the standing committees of the House:

HENRY W. WATSON, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

EVAN J. JONES, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

WILLIS J. HULINGS, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

LEONARD S. ECHOLS, of West Virginia, to be chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for a quarter of a minute in order to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent to proceed for a quarter of a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. How soon may the House expect the vacancy on the Military Affairs Committee to be filled on the majority side?

Mr. MONDELL. When the committee on committees shall have acted.

Mr. BLANTON. These vacancies were filled so promptly I thought that maybe we could expect equally prompt action as to the Military Committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Members nominated will be elected.

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday the last paragraph on page 20 had been read and a point of order was pending against the paragraph. Unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] cares to be heard on the point of order the Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] made the point of order that the paragraph is not in order because the latter portion of the paragraph makes the appropriation available during the fiscal year 1921. It is contended that the subject matter of this amendment being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, is in order on a deficiency bill, although it operates beyond the current fiscal year. The Chair is unable to find any case directly in point. The case cited by the gentleman from Virginia on yesterday enunciates the principle, although the case itself might perhaps be differentiated from the case now pending.

In the syllabus of the citation referred to—Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3562—this proposition is enunciated:

Appropriations for the continuation of work on a public building, and not intended to supply any actual deficiencies, belong to the sundry civil bill, not to general deficiency bills.

Pending the consideration of the bill, Mr. Butterworth, of Ohio, offered the following amendment:

For completing the customhouse and post-office building at Cincinnati, Ohio, $150,000, said appropriation to be immediately available.

Against this amendment Mr. Joseph C. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky, made the point of order under Rule XXI.

The Chairman ruled:

Although the bill under consideration is not, technically speaking, a general appropriation bill, yet Rule XXI of the old series was always held to apply to bills of this character, as well as to original appropriation bills. The difficulty with the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio seems to be that it does not come from any committee having any jurisdiction of the subject. The right of individuals upon their own responsibility to offer amendments to appropriation bills has been very much restricted by the third clause of Rule XXI of the new rules. Without commenting upon that clause, the Chair holds that the amendment is not in order, coming from an individual Member of the House and not from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, having called attention to the fact that this was a public work or object already in progress, the Chairman said:

There is now a law making an appropriation for the work upon the Cincinnati customhouse and courthouse for the present fiscal year. This bill is one making appropriations for deficiencies only. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio is not to supply any actual deficiency, but to make provision for the completion of the work. If the bill under consideration was the sundry civil appropriation bill, a bill which properly relates to these subjects, the Chair would hold that such an amendment would be in order although offered by an individual.

As the Chair stated at the outset this case can be differentiated to some extent from the case now pending, but is analogous in principle.

One more brief citation from the precedents. It is found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3746:

The general deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration, and Mr. Steele, of Indiana, offered an amendment to insert an appropriation for the Marion Branch of the Soldiers' Home for the construction of a storehouse and repairing the old storehouse and constructing fireproof vaults therein for offices.

Mr. Bartlett, of Georgia, made the point of order that there was no legislation authorizing the appropriation, and Mr. Livingston raised the further point of order that the appropriation was not in order on this bill.

After debate the Chairman—and I may say that the Chairman was Mr. James S. Sherman, later Vice President of the United States—said:

The Chair held in a former Congress, in reference to Annapolis Academy, that an amendment providing for an additional building there was in order. The Chair stated at the time he held so in deference to former decisions, not because he would have so held had it originally come before the present occupant of the chair. If there was no other question involved now than the question of the enlargement of the plant, the necessary enlargement, the Chair would be inclined to hold that it was in order, following the precedent established in the Naval Academy case and cases upon which it was based. * * * If the Chair may suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, it seems to him that in the preservation of harmony between the bills that this item in all fairness ought to be on the sundry civil bill and not on the general deficiency bill. The Chair is unable to find any ruling which holds one way or the other upon the proposition.

The present occupant of the chair is almost in the same situation in which Mr. Sherman found himself at that time, so far as precedents are concerned, except such support as is given by the rulings in the two somewhat analogous cases just cited. In the interest of orderly legislation in the future, it seems to the Chair that the principle announced by Mr. Carlisle in his ruling and again enunciated in the ruling of Mr. Sherman should prevail. This item, which it is conceded is not a deficiency and which might be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1921, should not, in the interest of orderly legislation, be in order on a deficiency appropriation bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amount which may be expended during the fiscal year 1920 for expenses of branch offices from the appropriation "to further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States" is increased from $60,000 to $62,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Why was not the phraseology in this paragraph just to put in an appropriation of $2,000, which would be an increase, so that there could not be any misunderstanding about the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. That is carried just as the Department of Commerce requested.

Mr. BLANTON. It would have answered the same purpose to put it at $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. They have the money. It is just an increase of the limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. It is only $2,000 that we are appropriating?

Mr. GOOD. We are not appropriating anything. They have the money, but they can not spend more than $60,000 for office rent in branch offices.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I am making is that this only authorizes an increase of $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. No; it does not do that. It authorizes them to expend $2,000 more than they are now authorized to expend out of the present appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I was trying to get at.

Mr. GOOD. They have money enough. This increases the limitation from $60,000 to $62,000. They have a large appropriation and enough money to pay the $2,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Damage claims: For payment to the Metropolitan Coal Co., Boston, Mass., for damage to wharf belonging to that company at Chelsea, Mass., by collision of light vessel No. 66 on April 10, 1917, $150.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if this claim of $150 is one that has been passed on by the department under authority of law to settle claims up to a certain amount.

Mr. GOOD. It is. The department has authority to settle claims not exceeding $500, and this claim has been settled by virtue of that authority.

Mr. WALSH. This award is satisfactory, I assume, to the coal company?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose so. It is an audited claim.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, some days ago I discussed the cost of a system of universal compulsory military training. Since that time I have been somewhat surprised to hear, from sources that ought to be well informed, the assertion that such a system if inaugurated would enable us to largely reduce the regular Military Establishment and thus bring about economies which would largely offset the cost of such a system.

The fact is that the adoption of a system of universal compulsory military training of the youth of the land would not in and of itself make possible any appreciable reduction of the regular Military Establishment. Its tendency would rather be to necessitate an increase in that establishment, and the facts that lead to this conclusion are so clear and apparent that there is very little ground for any difference of opinion.

Years ago, before we had taken on obligations in the Philippines, Hawaii, and the Canal Zone, a soldier to a thousand of the population was generally accepted as the very minimum of a military organization. That would mean 110,000 soldiers for our present population on that old basis before we had assumed any of our later-day obligations and before we had developed our modern coast defenses.

Since then we have come into our responsibilities in the Philippines, Hawaii, and the Canal Zone. A division is the War Department's estimate of a garrison for each of those places, and estimating a division at 27,000 men we have 81,000 as overseas garrisons. Add to this the small garrisons of Alaska and a division of men available for border service, and we have in the neighborhood of 225,000 men of the line.

To put it another way, let us estimate the overseas garrisons at 81,000 men, replacement troops in equal number, who during their term of duty at home are performing a variety of services at home, and we have a total of 162,000. Add to these 30,000 as the very smallest peace detail for our coast defenses, and we have 192,000, and adding to this number about a division of troops for the border and for a variety of services and we arrive at about the same number, 225,000, as the approximate minimum number of the line of the Army. Adding to these the various staff corps, we have somewhere between 225,000 and 275,000 as the minimum for line and staff of the Regular Establishment while we have our present responsibilities overseas, and particularly as long as we have the present unsettled conditions on the border.

No system of military training, unless it be a system of military service under the guise of training, can effect a reduction of the comparatively small Regular Establishment necessary to man coast defenses, to patrol the border, for garrisons overseas, to provide even a skeleton organization for Army posts and training schools, to afford details of instructors for educational institutions, and to form the nucleus of an armed, trained, and organized force in the case of emergency.

On the other hand, the adoption of a system of universal compulsory military training would have a tendency to and would, in my opinion, result in some increase both of the enlisted force and the officers of the Regular Establishment. My estimate of $700,000,000 as the annual cost of a system of universal compulsory military training, involving the training of 600,000 men annually, was based on the same percentage of officers for the troops in training as are provided for the regular organizations. As a matter of fact that estimate is too low, as to the number of officers and as to the cost, for it would require more officers for the proper intensive training of a given number of men than would be required for a force of equal size in the Regular Establishment, and furthermore, while the men would only be under training six months the officers, or a large part of them, would necessarily be under pay the entire year. These training officers would, as a matter of fact, be a part of the Regular Establishment, but in my estimate I do not add them to the cost of the Regular Establishment, because I had charged that cost in my estimates against the cost of training, where it belongs.

Furthermore, the actual training, at least the initial training, in small bodies, of men in training would largely fall to the lot of the noncommissioned men of the Regular Establishment, and I do not know how these men could be taken from the Regular Army without necessitating an increase of the Regular Establishment by the number of men required to replace these men taken from their organizations for this special work.

It is further true, moreover, that a system of universal compulsory military training would necessitate some additional Regular Army organizations to serve in various capacities in and around the training camps and cantonments, and this in addition to the regular commissioned and noncommissioned officers who would be detached for service with the men in training.

It is true that the Secretary of War has submitted estimates for a Regular Army of approximately 570,000 men, but nobody, outside of the administration and the General Staff of the War Department, is in favor of any such force, and the estimate presented for this, as submitted by the Secretary of War, amounted to $989,578,657.21, not a dollar of which was to cover the cost of a military training system.

In conclusion, may I sum up the facts of the situation? The Secretary of War has recommended an Army of 570,000 men, to cost nearly a billion dollars. Nobody, outside of the General Staff and the administration, is considering any such establishment. The committees of the House and Senate are likely to provide for a Regular Establishment somewhere between 225,000 and 275,000 officers and men, line and staff. At the present cost this would involve appropriations of from $425,000,000 to $475,000,000. This force could not be reduced by any system of military training, unless by military training is meant military service. The tendency would be to increase it, as I have suggested. A system of universal compulsory military training, such as has been proposed, would cost at least $700,000,000 per year, after the first year. Add to this the cost of the Regular Establishment at the lowest figure suggested, $425,000,000, and we have a total of $1,125,000,000 as the lowest annual cost of a moderate Regular Establishment and system of universal compulsory military training such as is proposed, without taking into consideration the expenditure of at least $300,000,000 to prepare the camps for the system of training.

This estimate is, however, much below the cost of the Regular Establishment proposed by the bill now before the Senate and the universal compulsory military training system which it provides. The regular Military Establishment provided for in that bill, without any military training whatever, will cost at least $600,000,000. Add to this $700,000,000 as the cost of the universal compulsory military training system which that bill provides, and we have a total cost of $1,300,000,000 as the minimum cost of the military program outlined in the Senate bill.

This total is much more than our entire average annual Federal expenditures for all purposes prior to our entry into the European war. At a time when, on the basis of present estimates, we are facing a deficit of nearly $3,000,000,000, such expenditures are, of course, unthinkable. As no one anticipates putting any kind of a training system into operation at this time there is no reason why the matter should be determined upon one way or another, until we shall find ourselves in better financial condition.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

COMMISSIONERS OF CONCILIATION.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, for per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, and not to exceed $1,500 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $25,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that we are wasting about $200,000 per year on this Board of Conciliation, and that this is absolutely a waste of public money to give them an additional $25,000, as proposed by this section, as it brings no service of any value whatsoever to the people of this country. I want to quote from the Philadelphia Public Ledger of the other day the following, showing exactly what I state is true:

CITY TAILORS ASK QUICK DISMISSAL OF UNITED STATES MEDIATOR—WILL SPURN SERVICES OF LENNON, SENT BY SECRETARY WILSON TO SETTLE STRIKE—CALL CHIEF CONCILIATOR A PARTISAN SYMPATHIZER—SEND LABOR CHIEF LETTER TO SHOW UNION BIAS DISPLAYED BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEE.

A letter asking the immediate dismissal of John B. Lennon, conciliator of the Department of Labor, was sent to Washington yesterday by merchant tailors of this city, who say that Mr. Lennon is a partisan labor sympathizer. Mr. Lennon had just been designated as mediator in the strike between journeymen and master tailors that has been in progress in this city since September 18.

After failure to settle the matter in conference to avoid court proceedings, the merchant tailors asked William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, to take a hand in the matter, stating that the "merchant tailors had given in to the strikers on all points except that of the open and closed shop."

Yesterday morning Philip R. Muller, a tailor, at 1527 Walnut Street, received a letter from the Secretary of Labor saying that Mr. Lennon had been designated as mediator. Mr. Lennon has been associated with the interests of labor for many years. He was treasurer of the American Federation of Labor from 1909 to 1917; editor of the Tailor, a union newspaper, from 1886 to 1910, and general secretary of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America from 1886 to 1910.

Mr. Muller immediately answered the Secretary of Labor, saying:

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 31 on the subject of the tailor strike in Philadelphia and note that you offer a representative of your department as conciliator in this matter.

"I further note that you state John B. Lennon, commissioner of conciliation, has been detailed by you to make this investigation. I call your attention to the position taken by Mr. Lennon in the following letter, dated December 13, 1919, and published in a paper called 'The Tailor,' the official organ of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America——

Mr. BANKHEAD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, what is the matter before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of a point of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He did not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. I am proceeding on a reservation of a point of order under the direction of the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the point of order that he reserves?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the point of order, and when the times comes I shall probably make it, but I want to see if I can get some light from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Alabama does not want any light on the question. He seeks to protect the Department of Labor, when, from letters received from his district, his constituents do not seem to agree with him. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this paragraph seeking to appropriate $25,000 is not a deficiency; it is unauthorized by law and it is new legislation. I think it is so clearly out of order that I do not care to argue it; but I do ask unanimous consent to put the balance of this article in the RECORD, showing that conciliation as conducted by Secretary of Labor Wilson is a farce in this Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation is clearly authorized by law.

The act of March 4, 1913, creating the Department of Labor, provides:

The Secretary of Labor shall have power to act as mediator and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever in his judgment the interest of industrial peace require it to be done.

The Secretary of Labor has appointed 28 commissioners under that authority. The appropriation for this year is not sufficient. The estimate for a deficiency was $50,000, and the committee reported out one-half the amount for which the Secretary asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been an appropriation for this purpose heretofore?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; an appropriation of $175,000 for the current year, which is not sufficient, according to the statement of the Secretary of Labor, who made a regular estimate for a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. I move first to strike out this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will now read the article from the Philadelphia Public Ledger which I started a while ago:

CITY TAILORS ASK QUICK DISMISSAL OF UNITED STATES MEDIATOR—WILL SPURN SERVICES OF LENNON, SENT BY SECRETARY WILSON TO SETTLE STRIKE—CALL CHIEF CONCILIATOR A PARTISAN SYMPATHIZER—SEND LABOR CHIEF LETTER TO SHOW UNION BIAS DISPLAYED BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEE.

A letter asking the immediate dismissal of John B. Lennon, conciliator of the Department of Labor, was sent to Washington yesterday by merchant tailors of this city, who say that Mr. Lennon is a partisan labor sympathizer. Mr. Lennon had just been designated as mediator in the strike between journeymen and master tailors that has been in progress in this city since September 18.

After failure to settle the matter in conference to avoid court proceedings, the merchant tailors asked William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, to take a hand in the matter, stating that the "merchant tailors had given in to the strikers on all points except that of the open and closed shop."

Yesterday morning Philip R. Muller, a tailor, at 1527 Walnut Street, received a letter from the Secretary of Labor saying that Mr. Lennon had been designated as mediator. Mr. Lennon has been asssociated with the interests of labor for many years. He was treasurer of the American Federation of Labor from 1909 to 1917; editor of The Tailor, a union newspaper, from 1886 to 1910, and general secretary of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America from 1886 to 1910.

Mr. Muller immediately answered the Secretary of Labor, saying:

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 31 on the subject of the tailor strike in Philadelphia and note that you offer a representative of your department as conciliator in this matter.

"I further note that you state John B. Lennon, commissioner of conciliation, has been detailed by you to make this investigation. I call your attention to the position taken by Mr. Lennon in the following letter, dated December 13, 1919, and published in a paper called 'The Tailor,' the official organ of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America:

"'THOMAS SWEENEY,

"'General Secretary Journeymen Tailors' Union of America.

"'DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am more than proud of the fight our international union is making for free shops, weekly wages, eight-hour day, etc. Great results have already been secured and the remainder of the fight the tailors are going to win sure. The response of our local unions with the cash makes that a certainty. My contribution has gone in to you and to-morrow I will pay some more to the secretary of No. 24.

"'This fight must be won and will be won clear from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and when won the tailors will have one of the best and most effective unions in the United States, and I am sure that victory is on the way and that the J. T. U. of A. will soon achieve a splendid and complete triumph.

"'My best wishes to every member, and particularly to the men and women on the picket line.

"'Very truly, yours,

"'JOHN B. LENNON.'

"I am loath to believe," the Muller letter continues, "the charges made upon the floor of the Senate that the Department of Labor contains radicals and Bolshevists, and I can hardly think that the Department of Labor would employ men as conciliators in settling a strike who have publicly expressed themselves in favor of that strike.

"Might I suggest that the immediate dismissal of Mr. Lennon from the position of a commissioner of conciliation would go far to reestablish the confidence the public should have in the department?

"Very truly, yours,

"PHILIP R. MULLER."

That Mr. Lennon will fail as a mediator is the conclusion of the merchants, for last night William H. Dixon, chairman of the strike committee of the Merchant Tailors' Association, said that they would have nothing to do with Mr. Lennon when he arrives.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is not the information contained in the above article from the Philadelphia Public Ledger pertinent to the proposal in this bill to increase the two hundred-odd thousand dollars we have already appropriated for the purpose of conciliating labor for the present fiscal year by giving them now an additional $25,000? Is this a subject which does not interest the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]? Out of the 6,000 strikes which occurred during the war, between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, only a comparatively few were settled through conciliation, and then they were settled only by the Government conciliators allowing every demand made by the strikers.

Now, take the case cited by the Philadelphia Ledger. The employers had granted every single demand numerously made by the striking tailors, except the one question of closed shop. The employers had the right to expect from the Secretary of Labor, provided he was running the United States Department of Labor in the interest of all the people and not in the interests of unions, that the Secretary of Labor would send an unbiased conciliator who would give the right of an employer to maintain an open shop proper consideration. All the employers asked was the privilege of running their own business and of employing tailors whether they belonged to unions or not. And the Secretary of Labor sent them Mr. John B. Lennon. Was he a fair conciliator? Was he an unbiased conciliator? Was he a Government conciliator from whom these employers could expect any assistance in obtaining from their employees, to whom they had already granted every other of their numerous demands, the sole right of employing some nonunion tailors if they desired?

Let me read you again the letter from John B. Lennon published in the union's official organ, The Tailor, which letter was dated as late as December 13, 1919, on that very subject:

THOMAS SWEENEY,

General Secretary Journeymen Tailors' Union of America.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am more than proud of the fight our international union is making for free shops, weekly wages, eight-hour day, etc. Great results have already been secured and the remainder of the fight the tailors are going to win sure. The response of our local unions with the cash makes that a certainty. My contribution has gone in to you and to-morrow I will pay some more to the secretary of No. 24.

This fight must be won and will be won clear from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and when won the tailors will have one of the best and most effective unions in the United States, and I am sure that victory is on the way and that the J. T. U. of A. will soon achieve a splendid and complete triumph.

My best wishes to every member, and particularly to the men and women on the picket line.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN B. LENNON.

Mr. Chairman, we are appropriating several hundred thousands of dollars for this Board of Conciliation year after year, and we are asked now, as a deficiency, to give them $25,000 more. The question is, Are we going to waste it? The people of the United States are getting no benefit from it. The Secretary of Labor is running this, as well as every other of the various departments under him, in the interest of labor unions, and not in the interest of labor in its broad sense. The Department of Labor is improperly named, and should be called the department of union labor, and Secretary Wilson should be more properly called the secretary of union labor. John B. Lennon had indorsed this very strike; had called the strikers brothers; had called their strike his strike; had called their fight his fight; had said that he was proud of their contending for closed shops, which he designated as free shops—free of unorganized labor—and was proud of all of their other contentions; had contributed his money to their cause, and in his letter promised that he would contribute more money, he stating, "This fight must be won, and won clear from the Atlantic to the Pacific," and sent his best wishes to the pickets surrounding the employers' places of business. Was John B. Lennon a proper Government conciliator? Do you approve of the Secretary of Labor sending that kind of a man on Government expense? It is up to you, good Republican colleagues of mine, to decide this question, because you are in the saddle with respect to legislation, and your steering committee can pass any kind of legislation here it wants. Are you willing longer to continue this wasteful farce? The people of this country are going to get tired of this some day. They are slowly organizing and locating responsibility for these conditions. They are going to rise up some day at the primaries and at the general election and they are going to make some of your faces scarce on the floor of the House if you do not pay some attention to some of these things that are going on in this country. Mark my prediction! You have had 5,000,000 organized men, organized like men never have been organized before, who have been attending to the elections heretofore and having legislators obey their will, but, you mark me, not very long from now you are going to have 110,000,000 of people attending to the election; and you had better look out, you had better pay some attention, because when at elections the whole American people begin to speak you will not have any chance to answer, because after the primary is over and after the general election is over some of you will be gone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there is truth in what the gentleman has said, but I think he exaggerated the case. I have not been in sympathy with some of the men who have been appointed as conciliators. I think in some instances, in quite a number, the Secretary of Labor appointed men who were not in a position, because of their attitude toward the employer, to sit in judgment on his case, but that is not a question for Congress to determine. All Congress can do is to provide the funds. If the funds have been misused, as the gentleman from Texas would have us believe and states, that is a matter that Congress can not very well regulate when we have a department like this. But when we give great power to an executive—and you must give great power to the executive—if he abuses this power and does not appoint the proper persons, are we going to punish the men who compose either the employer class or the employee class when real labor disputes do exist by not providing the machinery that was authorized by this act?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. If the executive of that department is crooked, and we know it, are we not responsible when we continue to put funds in his hands?

Mr. GOOD. I would not want to charge that the Secretary of Labor is crooked. I served with him in the House. I would not make that charge. I thought he was a very able and straightforward and honorable man.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not keeping up with his record in the Labor Department.

Mr. GOOD. Be that as it may, they ask for $50,000 here. Notwithstanding the fact that there may be some of this fund expended as the gentleman has said, the committee felt that this department would need $25,000 for the rest of the year, and that it ought to get along with $25,000. I think perhaps they do at times employ more conciliators than are necessary, but I am not in charge of the department. I do not execute this appropriation; neither does the gentleman from Texas. We have given the authority to the Secretary of Labor, and in a large measure we have to submit to what he does.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is the chairman of the committee entirely satisfied that the work of the conciliation board has been of value?

Mr. GOOD. I think on the whole they have done a great deal of good work. I think there are cases where they have done very questionable things. For instance, a man came to me a year ago and said that one of the conciliators, Mr. Fred Feick, as I recall, a State senator from Indiana, who lives down, I believe, at Garrett, Ind., went among the employees of two or three of the factories at some town in Indiana there and told them that they ought to be dissatisfied with the hours of labor and with their wages. He left, and in about a week they all struck, and then the Secretary of Labor sent this same man Feick, who had stirred up the strike, back there as a conciliator. Of course, I do not approve a thing of that kind. I do not believe the Secretary himself would approve of a thing of that kind if he knew it. But notwithstanding that, we have had manufacturers come before us, and manufacturers have written us, saying that they have been benefited by this service, and labor organizations and laborers outside of organizations have said to the committee and its members that this law has been of great benefit in settling disputes. I do not approve, of course, the misuses to which the funds are placed at times, but I think there was good reason and wisdom in the law, and that the abuses of the law are the exception and not the rule.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I rise in opposition to the amendment. This item of $25,000 provides for the maintenance of a service that should be maintained by this Government. During the war $2,000,000 was spent by what is known as the War Labor Board for mediation and conciliation. Since the end of the war the work has devolved upon the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. The work of mediation in connection with the Shipping Board has also devolved upon them. They handled 1,780 cases, and in practically every one of the 1,780 disputes intrusted to them a strike was prevented and an economic loss to the country prevented.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I will not yield.

The duty of acting as a mediator and conciliator in an industrial dispute is always an unenviable duty. The man must necessarily incur the displeasure of one side or the other. It is inevitable that some gentleman, dissatisfied with the settlement of a dispute, should write to a Member of Congress, as the gentleman from Texas says he was written to, to advise him that he was dissatisfied with the settlement of the dispute.

He says a member of organized labor should not be sent. I presume he thinks that no one but a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of the United States should be sent to settle a dispute between labor and capital. But the Department of Labor can not do that. I do not contend that in every instance they should send a man who is identified with organized labor, but certainly if they hope to bring the warring factions together they must send some man who has the confidence of the laborers as well as of the employers.

The gentleman says that some gentleman from Indiana before the committee referred to the conduct of a man who encouraged men to become dissatisfied with their jobs. I never heard that man testify. I wish I had. Any gentleman can make an ex parte statement, but I would have liked to cross-examine him. If convinced he was telling the truth I would certainly have disapproved of such conduct as much as any man in this House.

But the fact is that this board, employing commissioners, has been able to satisfactorily settle nearly 2,000 disputes. Since the 1st of January there has been a great reduction in the number of strikes in this country, and this service has contributed to that happy result at a time when unrest exists all over the world. If this board can settle one industrial dispute, can prevent one strike, it has more than justified its existence and justifies the expenditure of $200,000 a year for its maintenance. In so far as what the gentleman says about the Secretary of Labor, I want to say this: The Secretary of Labor, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has said, served as a Member of this House. The gentleman from Texas says he is crooked, but there is not a man in this House who served with Mr. Wilson who will believe for an instant what the gentleman from Texas says. [Applause.] There is not a fair or an honest man in this country, either in the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, in the American Federation of Labor, or among any other class of people, who believes Secretary Wilson is crooked. They may disagree with him in his policies; they may disapprove of his appointments; but they will never believe him "crooked." I do not approve of some of his policies, but, in common with all Americans, I have unbounded confidence in his integrity. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may we have an agreement as to the time? I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 10 minutes, to be divided between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it is not unusual for executive officers to be criticized. Wholesale criticism, however, the assailing of a man and accusations of being crooked, ought to have behind them some evidence of a character that would address itself to the membership of the House. I have no doubt but that this committee or commission on conciliation has done much good. There have been mistakes, perhaps, in the personnel of its appointments. But it is a rare thing in executive departments when some mistakes are not made in regard to personnel.

However, my attention was attracted to the criticism upon Mr. Feick, of Garrett, Ind. I know Mr. Feick very well. He is a hard hitter against Republicans in that district, and therefore I hold no special brief in his interest. But it does seem to me that when the name of a man is used on the floor of this House and his activities are thus directly brought into question there should be some supporting evidence for the criticism against him. Knowing Mr. Feick as well as I do, and not being by any means anxious that he should be particularly defended by me, I have wondered if, after all, a little statement like that going out through the RECORD might not do a man a great injury when really the facts in the case did not warrant the statement. I understand that the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] said that he had heard of the incident he mentioned, or did it appear in the record of some hearing? Will the chairman state?

Mr. GOOD. The matter was brought to my attention by a man who claimed to be a manufacturer of that locality, claiming to know the facts; and when the hearings were had a year ago I asked Mr. Samuel J. Gompers, the chief clerk, what the facts were, and he said he did not know. The understanding was that there would be a note put in the record of the hearing, but there was no defense made or explanation made to the charge. You will find it in the hearings on the legislative bill last year. If the statement was not true, it was never corrected by the Department of Labor or anybody else. It was made right to the Department of Labor by this man who called it to my attention, and he claims to have been injured by it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I know the man has been very active in labor circles and has been sent here and there in conciliation work. I do not know how effective he has been, but he has been retained, as I understand, upon the commission for that purpose.

What I really intended to say is that perhaps what brings this Congress and every Congress into disrepute throughout the country is the wild accusations that are made again and again against men without any basic evidence to sustain them. My own judgment is that this country is big enough and our legislative duties are onerous enough to make it desirable that no reflection should be cast from the floor of this House upon any man unless one felt impelled thereto by the necessity of protecting the public. [Applause.] When that becomes a habit here you will find the Congress will enjoy a higher regard in the minds of the people of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, like the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD], I thought the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made a strong point by the recital he made in support of his motion to strike out this paragraph. One inadvertent statement by him, however, weakens his case very materially, in my opinion.

Many years ago there came to this country a poor boy from a foreign land. Being poor, he sought honest labor as a means of livelihood. Upon his earnings he supported a family. A coal miner, working most of his time out of human sight, or at least out of the sight of most people, yet by his demeanor, by his upright character, by his integrity, and his native honesty he won the confidence and esteem of the people of a great congressional district in the State of Pennsylvania. Those people several times elected him to membership in this great legislative assembly. Here he so demeaned himself and proved himself possessed of such great and striking ability that he was appointed to one of the most important committees of the House. There he associated with gentlemen of distinction and won their favor and their applause. From this House he was chosen by the President of the United States, by reason of his ability and his integrity of character, to fill the exalted position of Secretary of Labor.

I say such a man, with such a history, is never a crooked man, and I dissent with all the emphasis I can employ from that part of the gentleman's argument. [Applause.] I say in corroboration and support of what has been said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] that every man who knows Secretary Wilson knows that he is an honest man, a worthy man, and a capable public official. [Applause.] That he has made mistakes I am not here to deny, but in the estimate of some people I have made mistakes; the gentleman from South Carolina may have made mistakes; even the distinguished gentleman from Indiana may have made mistakes; but I do not think either of them has made any mistakes; and some people think the distinguished gentleman from Texas sometimes makes mistakes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes to reply to the gentleman. I have been criticized here very severely.

Mr. GOOD. The time has been fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one minute of the time fixed remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Let the gentleman take time on the next paragraph. I shall not object to his taking time on the next paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Labor Administration: To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry on the work of mediation and conciliation in labor disputes, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $39,912.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen, I did not make an idle statement in regard to the Secretary of Labor. I had plenty of foundation for it. The record shows beyond any question of doubt that he has spent several thousand dollars of the people's money of this Government unauthorized in behalf of an anarchist, the bomb-throwing anarchist Mooney, in California. The record shows that he has sent his employees unauthorized out to California at the expense of the Government and had them install dictograph machines in the district attorney's office to help anarchists escape the proper punishment of the law. The record shows that he has filled his department down here with representatives of various labor unions over the land on big salaries, paid by the Government, with big expense accounts for traveling, not for the Government but in the interest of various unions. The record shows that in the 6,000 strikes that occurred throughout the war, from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, he has sent as conciliators not men who were unprejudiced but men who were highly prejudiced in favor of one side of the controversy alone, the side of the union, and that a strike has been settled only when every single contention of the strikers has been allowed.

The record, not coming from me but coming from the best friend he ever had on earth, one of the heads of his department, John B. Densmore, shows that this great Secretary had to run away from his own State of Pennsylvania and that he went out to Iowa under shadow and stayed in Iowa for several years until the clouds could blow over before he could go back to his home State. I could recount record after record where he has placed such men in office as Frederick C. Howe as immigration commissioner at New York, whom we Democrats finally had to admit had helped thousands of anarchists to escape deportation, and the President had to remove from office this Frederick C. Howe, who has since been placed in charge of the Plumb Plan League by organized labor. When his old colleagues and brother members of the United Mine Workers of America called a strike, designated as unlawful and without excuse by both the President and the courts, this Secretary of Labor, without any authorization of law whatever, immediately promised said brother miners a flat increase in wages of 31 per cent, when finally the President's commission allowed only 14 per cent; and this member of the Cabinet, Secretary of Labor Wilson, almost disrupted the Cabinet of the United States trying to defend these miners in their unlawful undertakings and tried to force the Cabinet to do that which was not right when these miners were trying to freeze to death millions of helpless women and innocent little children. And this Secretary of Labor Wilson waited weeks, months, and years, until he has lately been confronted with his confederation, with anarchists, to hold, as he has done within the last few days, that to be a member of the communist organization, which seeks to overthrow and destroy this Government by physical force and violence, is cause for deportation. Oh, if I had time I could give plenty of reasons for asserting that the Secretary of Labor is crooked. Any Cabinet officer of this Government that fraternizes with, helps, aids, and assists anarchists who are trying to overthrow this Government is crooked.

Why, every posted person knows that William Z. Foster is an anarchist, and every person posted knows that John L. Lewis had to sit up all night debating the question whether he would disregard the law and risk severe punishment from the courts administered by Judge Anderson before he decided that "he could not fight his beloved Government" and decided that he would obey the law. And we know that Secretary Wilson fraternizes with such men.

I know that these anarchistic labor leaders do not like me, because in my fight for a square deal for all the people I have given them cause to dislike me. And I know that in this House whenever any of them are attacked there is always somebody ready to take their part and always somebody to applaud them, because Samuel Gompers is always ready and willing to pat them on the back and cause them to be reelected.

My standing is not good with the Anarchist Thomas Mooney, who in cold blood murdered with bombs many innocent people, and my standing with Secretary Wilson and Samuel Gompers, who are friends of Thomas Mooney and who are aiding him to escape proper punishment, is not good. I have no standing with anarchists, either singly or collectively.

When I cite these facts I do not expect any standing with such men as William Z. Foster, who has the approval of Secretary Wilson and his associates. I do not expect approval from the anarchistic leaders of labor of this country, because I have been fighting them here in behalf of the people. I do not expect any standing with them. I do not expect any standing with some of the men in this House who seem ready at all times to lick the foot soles of Samuel Gompers and Secretary Wilson whenever they are justly assailed in this House. I do not expect any standing from that kind of cattle; but I have got a standing with my many brave, honest colleagues of this House and the honest, loyal American citizenship throughout the United States, whose good opinion is worth while, and if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] could see the indorsements that I have gotten from his State and every State in this Union, and if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] could only read some of the letters I have received from his district indorsing the fight that I have been making on this floor, and if my good friend from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER]—and he is my friend—could see the splendid letters of indorsement that I have gotten from some of the best men in Missouri in behalf of my stand, these three gentlemen would find that my standing outside of these labor unions and their satellites and their friends and the men who do their bidding is a pretty good standing after all in the country.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will have to decline, as I have not the time. I have only a few minutes. This is not a personal fight I am making. I am making a fight to clean up these departments of improper people in charge of them. It is a fight to rid my Government of anarchy. It is a fight in behalf of the whole people of this country and not in behalf of a little organized clique of 5,000,000 men whose anarchistic leaders are running this Government. You know they are running it as well as I know it. You look into my eyes and you know that every time Samuel Gompers comes in here and tells us to do something he stampedes Congress. Why, Dr. FESS, the gentleman from Ohio, a short time ago got up here and made the best speech I ever heard a man make one day, and said we ought to be men, that we ought to put all men on the same footing, and that we ought not to exempt organized unions from the law; and in the Committee of the Whole House, where no record is made of how each Member votes, we stood by him; the Republicans stood by him, the Democrats stood by him, and we refused to exempt members of labor unions from the provisions of law. Then Mr. Gompers and his American Federation of Labor came in and gave the membership of this House his orders, and the mouthpiece of organized labor, the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], called for a record vote in the House, and the great majority of you bowed your heads, obeyed orders, complied with the dictates of the dictator, and once more exempted members of organized labor from the provisions of general law. [Applause.] How long are you going to keep it up? How much longer is this Government and Congress going to be of, for, and by Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor?

I sympathize with and feel sorry for some of you colleagues of mine, for I know that you want to be reelected, and I know just what troubles you. Here is a sample of what you are afraid of:

In the Federal Employee, the official magazine of the National Federation of Federal Employees, for June, 1918, the vote cast by each Congressman on the Borland amendment, requiring the 240,000 Government employees to work eight instead of only seven hours per day, is given, with the following comment:

If a Congressman's votes and policies have been against the interests of employees this fact should be made known throughout his district, and if he has shown an attitude offensive toward organized labor every voter in his district should know it.

And this red-flag admonition to all organized labor voters was sent broadcast into the districts of the various Congressmen who had dared to vote to require employees to work eight hours a day during war times.

Again, from the September, 1918, issue of the Federal Employee I quote:

THE DEFEAT OF REPRESENTATIVE BORLAND, AS TOLD BY ONE OF OUR BRETHREN WHO WAS IN THE FRAY—A REMARKABLE DEMONSTRATION OF THE VALUE OF UNION SOLIDARITY AND AFFILIATION.

[By Gilbert E. Hyatt, president of National Federation of Postal Employees.]

Those ultraconservative members of the civil service who have not realized the value of organization, particularly in its inevitable and most beneficial aspect, that of affiliation with the other great organized agencies under the banner of the American Federation of Labor, have been given a demonstration so plain that he who runs may read of what these things mean and of the real spirit of unionism.

No Federal employee is ignorant of the constant persecution of his brothers in the District of Columbia under the guise of establishing what Mr. Borland was pleased to name an eight-hour day. The single-minded persistence of the advocate of this measure, culminating in the veto by President Wilson of the appropriation bill carrying the amendment in question, is too well known in all details to need repetition, but the story of Borland's rebuke and defeat by organized labor simply on this ground is a lesson that every member of the civil service should ponder on, for in it is contained the secret of any future defense that they will make and of any future gains for their cause. * * *

An appeal was made to organized labor and every legislative agent in Washington responded. President Gompers sent a scathing telegram to the Central Labor Union of Kansas City (Borland's home), and the legislative agents of the railroad brotherhoods went on record in the plainest language. The writer of this article had the honor, as a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of bearing their personal message to the railroad men of Kansas City. As a result the Kansas City central body passed a resolution without a dissenting word or vote at a crowded meeting condemning Borland and instructing their legislative committee to organize the campaign for his defeat. A joint committee of railroad men was formed to do a like service for their members, and the outcome was the overwhelming defeat now passed into history. * * *

It should be fully appreciated by the civil-service employees that these men had not one iota of personal interest in the point at issue, and that they had no personal contact with the class of workers attacked. * * * Mr. Borland had done many favors of a personal nature for members of organized labor in his district, and many of the men who worked for his defeat expressed friendship for him, but factional alignments, craft divisions, and personal friendships were thrown aside to fight for a basic standard of their doctrine.

I quote the concluding paragraph of the said telegram sent by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, also published in this magazine, which is as follows:

Let the inspiring word go forth, "We stand by our friends," and administer a stinging rebuke to men of any party who are either indifferent or hostile.

What was Congressman Borland's crime committed for which his office was taken away from him as a punishment? He merely asked that Government employees in war times work eight instead of seven hours per day. He conscientiously believed that when we required our soldier boys to work sometimes 24 hours out of the 24, sometimes in trenches drenched and knee deep in mud, on $33 per month, who, if he momentarily slept from exhaustion or should demand a single dollar more pay, would be stood up against a wall and shot in eternal dishonor, that it was not unreasonable to demand of Government employees, many of whom were filling the jobs vacated by these soldier boys, and who were working under pleasant surroundings and safe environments, that in war times especially they should work eight instead of seven hours. By a roll-call vote the House of Representatives twice went on record supporting Mr. Borland in his contention.

Now, let me put into the RECORD again a few matters of history from the RECORD:

NUMBER OF WAR STRIKES CERTIFIED TO BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 6, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 23, 1919, addressed to Hon. W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, is received. In reply thereto I will say that the Bureau of Labor Statistics of this department compiles, from various newspapers and other sources, as complete a list as possible of all strikes that occur. This list is not complete, and it may also contain some duplications, because it is not always possible to tell from newspaper reports whether the report is concerning a new strike or whether it refers to a strike previously reported. Therefore the figures given can not be more than an approximation. After eliminating duplicates as far as possible this list shows that there were approximately 6,000 strikes between April 6, 1917, and November, 1918, the average duration of which was approximately 17 or 18 days.

Regretting that I am unable to furnish you more accurate information, and trusting that this approximate figure may be of some value to you, I am,

Very truly, yours,

H. L. KERWIN,
Assistant to the Secretary.

In his autobiography Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor states that since November, 1873, he has been a member of the Mine Workers' Union, and has taken an active part in trade-union affairs ever since, and was international secretary of the United Mine Workers of America from 1900 to 1908. In his address published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 24, 1919, page 1712, Secretary Wilson says:

I make no hesitancy in saying that I am a trade-unionist myself. I believe in trade-unionism. * * * When the demand for shipworkers and shipbuilders came from Seattle our employees in the interior of the country said to those who were applicants for employment that "it is not advisable to go to Seattle unless you are either a union man or willing to join the union," and we are held up as a trade-union department because we made that statement. We continued to make it. We are making it now. We will continue to make it. * * * If there was an industrial dispute in existence we would not be the agency through which labor could be furnished to that industrial dispute.

On June 27, 1919, before the Joint Committee on Labor hearings, Director Densmore testified (pp. 233–234):

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, are you a relative of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. DENSMORE. I am not any relative of the Secretary of Labor, as has been reported.

Senator KENYON. How do you think that story arose, Mr. Densmore? Did you live where he lived, in Iowa?

Mr. DENSMORE. Well, Senator, Secretary Wilson, when I was about 5 years old, as you have asked the question, was blacklisted in Pennsylvania, and he could not get any kind of a job, not only in the city where he was but in the coal mines or elsewhere, and he had to leave——

Senator KENYON. I did not ask you about that.

Mr. DENSMORE. But I want to tell the story. He came to Iowa and he came to my father. My father was the superintendent of the water-supply system of the Illinois Central Railroad, from your city, Fort Dodge, Senator KENYON, to our city, Waterloo, Iowa, at that time, and he got Mr. Wilson a job as a fireman on the Illinois Central, and enabled him to support his family until things blew over in Pennsylvania, when he went back, and it is true that he did live at our house.

What do you suppose that Director Densmore meant when he said that Secretary Wilson was "blacklisted in Pennsylvania, and he could not get any kind of a job, not only in the city where he was but in the coal mines and elsewhere, and he had to leave"? Blacklisted for what? What had he done that prevented his getting work in Pennsylvania and caused him to go to Iowa? I mention the above, because it may throw some light on late actions of the Secretary of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR ASSISTING MOONEY.

Mr. Speaker, on June 21, 1919, I stated that it was a strange situation when we were appropriating $1,400,000 additional to apprehend anarchists, while at the same time Secretary Wilson was reported to have spoken at Atlantic City from the same platform with Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted anarchist, intimating that he was still trying to get Mooney a new trial, and I cited excerpts from the following papers:

[Daily Oregonian, Portland, Oreg., June 13, 1919.]

Secretary of Labor Wilson, speaking before the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, urged organized labor to refuse to support the nation-wide strike which has been proposed as a protest against the conviction of Thomas J. Mooney. Mr. Wilson told the delegates that the Government was investigating the claim that new evidence justified a new trial, and that he was devoting much time to the case.

The Secretary declared that so far the Government's inquiry had shown that the judge and jury before whom Mooney was tried had conducted themselves properly and that on the evidence the jury had to convict.

Note the statement that "he—Secretary Wilson—was devoting much time to the case."

WILSON HINTS AT A NEW TRIAL IN MOONEY CASE—CABINET MAN TELLS LABOR CONVENTION EVIDENCE IS BEING INVESTIGATED.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13.

Secretary of Labor Wilson, speaking before the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, urged organized labor to refuse to support the nation-wide strike which has been proposed as a protest against the conviction of Thomas J. Mooney. Mr. Wilson told the delegates the Government was investigating the claim that new evidence justified a new trial, and that he himself was devoting much time to the case.

[Chronicle, San Francisco, Calif., June 13, 1919.]

UNITED STATES SIFTING EVIDENCE IN STEP TO SECURE NEW TRIAL, SAYS SECRETARY OF LABOR.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13.

Secretary of Labor Wilson, addressing the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, * * *. He said the Government was investigating the evidence in the case in connection with the movement for a new trial for Mooney.

And at the same time I charged that Director Densmore had spent some time in California installing a dictagraph in the district attorney's office in an effort to assist Mooney.

On July 1, 1919, my colleague from Texas, Mr. HARDY, spoke in defense of Secretary of Labor Wilson, stating that the above newspaper reports were very unjust and unfounded, and he printed in the RECORD (pp. 2247–2250) what he said was the manuscript copy of the address of Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, before the American Federation of Labor convention, Atlantic City, N. J., June 13, 1919, delivered to him by Secretary Wilson. I raised no objection. I am glad he printed it, for it clearly shows that every word in said newspaper articles is true, and that Secretary Wilson deserved even graver criticism. You will note that he began his address by the salutation "fellow trade-unionists." Note also (p. 2249) that in advising the convention not to call a nation-wide strike to force Mooney's freedom, and concerning such advice, he said:

You may accept it or leave it, as your own judgment tells you is best.

He, a Cabinet officer of the United States, head of the Department of Labor, and high up in power and authority in the American Federation of Labor, leaving the question thus open by telling them:

You strike or not strike, as your own judgment tells you is best.

Why should he leave the question open, when he admitted that Mooney had had a fair trial? For he said (p. 2249):

We looked into the Mooney case, and in doing so we came to this conclusion: That so far as the jury was concerned that passed upon the evidence presented to it, it could have come to no other conclusion under its sworn duty than to convict Mooney; that so far as the judge was concerned that tried the case, he tried it with absolute fairness.

Why did not this Cabinet officer of a Republic that stands for law and order then tell his audience, in which there were at least some anarchists, that the State of California had lawfully tried, convicted, and was punishing a red-handed, cold-blooded, murderous anarchist, who had deliberately caused the death of numerous innocent men, women, and children, and the serious injury of scores of law-abiding people, by throwing a bomb into a preparedness parade, and that neither the people nor the Government had any right to go behind the verdict of a California jury and the judgments of the California trial and appellate courts, nor to interfere with justice, law, and order in the State of California by letting unions, ignorant of the evidence, attempt to free a criminal through strikes simply because he was a union man?

But instead of closing the matter with advice of unmistakable directness, Secretary Wilson left it open to be further fanned by the flames of passion and prejudice by stating:

Every effort that the national administration was able to put forth was put forth for the purpose of trying to secure that new trial, and we are not through with it yet. We are still working on it. [Applause, long and continued.]

Note that Secretary Wilson said: "We are still working on it," and "We are not through with it yet," in regard to getting a new trial for an anarchist now serving his just punishment in a California penitentiary. By what authority of law is Secretary Wilson messing in this California case? Who authorized him to work on it or to interfere? Congress has never authorized any investigation. Congress has never authorized the expenditure of one single dollar on the Mooney case. Secretary Wilson has no connection with the Department of Justice. Simply because Mooney was a unionite does not give the Department of Labor any more jurisdiction than the United States Health Department would have where the murderer happened to be a doctor. And it is a very significant fact that all of the Washington papers heralded the news that Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted anarchist, having failed to get an audience with the President, went immediately to the Department of Labor to see Secretary Wilson, intimating that she was always sure of an audience there.

THE MOONEY CASE.

A REPORT ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY OF LABOR BY J. B. DENSMORE, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF EMPLOYMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., November 1, 1918.

Hon. W. B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to instructions received from time to time during the past six months, I have the honor to report that I have conducted a secret and altogether informal inquiry into the Mooney case, and beg leave to submit herewith the results of my investigation. Before entering into a recital of the various steps pursued in carrying out the operation, it might be well to call attention to a number of peculiar features which have characterized this case from the beginning, in order that there may be no misconception, either as to the issues involved or as to the necessity which arose for the employment on the part of the investigators, of somewhat unusual methods of obtaining information.

On the surface and in its narrowest aspect the Mooney case may be defined as the case of the people of the State of California against Thomas J. Mooney and certain other defendants, four in number, charged with perpetrating a bomb outrage in the city of San Francisco during the Preparedness Day parade, on July 22, 1916, thereby causing the deaths of 9 or 10 persons and the injury of numerous others. Of the five defendants, four have been tried. Two of these, Mooney and Warren K. Billings, were found guilty, Mooney now being under sentence of death and Billings serving a life term in the penitentiary; the other two, Mrs. Thomas J. Mooney and Israel Weinberg, were acquitted. The case against the fifth defendant, Edward D. Nolan, has virtually been dropped for lack of evidence. All five of these persons have been more or less prominently identified with the union-labor movement in San Francisco.

It was charged by the prosecution that these five defendants were animated by anarchistic motives and that the bomb explosion which they were alleged to have planned and consummated was the climax of a carefully laid plot to strike a blow at existing social and political institutions and intimidate all those who were in any way concerned with placing the country in a state of military preparedness.

In my investigation of the Mooney case I have kept these facts well in mind and proceeded on the theory that an unwarranted attack upon labor leaders, with a premeditated and deliberate intention to injure and discredit union labor generally * * *.

The alternative plan was to proceed secretly, with but two or three men, and make no move that would attract attention. * * *

It was therefore decided to work secretly.

I had at this time two trusted assistants in San Francisco, and to these I confided my plan of operations, leaving, however, the execution of the details very largely to their own judgment. * * * It was absolutely necessary to the success of the operation to install a dictaphone in the office of the district attorney, Mr. Charles M. Fickert. This task was a seemingly impossible one, owing to the fact that Fickert keeps himself barricaded behind double-locked doors on the fourth floor of the Hall of Justice, in a private office to which only one other man has the keys.

The full details as to how this dictaphone was finally installed will probably never be divulged, as no good purpose could be served by a recital of the facts, interesting as they are. Some idea of the difficulties involved will be gained when it is stated that more than two months of careful and clever work were required before the installation was complete and the machine in actual operation.

Fickert's office in the Hall of Justice is a very large room in the southwest corner of the building, on the topmost floor. (See diagram, Exhibit A.) It is lighted by two arched windows, one overlooking Portsmouth Square to the west, the other fronting Merchant Street on the south. The district attorney's desk is in the extreme southwest corner of the room, between the two windows. Besides the desk, the room contains a large oblong table; otherwise there is little furniture. On floor and table, in picturesque disarray, are countless exhibits alleged to relate to the activities of the I. W. W.'s, the Mooney defendants, and other reputed agitators and dynamiters.

For dictaphone purposes the location was by no means an ideal one. Rumbling teams and street cars, tooting automobiles, the shouts of Chinese children playing around the Robert Louis Stevenson fountain in the park opposite—these and other sounds from Kearney Street ascended and mingled with the voices of those conversing within the room. The room itself was about 25 by 30 feet, and when conversations were held in a low voice at some distance from the transmitter the results attained were not always satisfactory.

Considerable experiment was thus required to adjust the delicate microphone to the peculiar and somewhat baffling conditions. After trying out various combinations of batteries, resistance coils, amplifying valves, and receivers, and making several novel improvements never before attempted in similar lines of work, a final satisfactory adjustment was at last achieved.

I know of no better way to present the mass of valuable information secured through the use of this machine than to incorporate the full transcript in the body of this report. It is lengthy, but at the same time it is illuminating; and any digest, paraphrase, or abridgment would perhaps fail to convey either the true atmosphere of the district attorney's office or the full significance of the record itself. In view of the importance of the case, it is not believed that further apologies are necessary for this introduction of what in other circumstances might justly be considered an unconscionably long and detailed account of miscellaneous and not always interesting conversations.

In order to complete these prefatory remarks, it might be well to add that the conversations in the following transcript were all overheard by two or more persons, usually by three, though sometimes by more than three. For the sake of clearness it has been thought best to insert brief notes of explanation wherever necessary; these are invariably given in brackets. Wherever the conversation was obscure or inaudible, the fact is noted. In the telephone conversations, both voices could usually be heard. Sometimes, however, the microphone failed to transmit the voice at the far end of the line.

Now, Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I submit the above as a few of the reasons why I have called the Secretary of Labor crooked. The above is indisputable evidence of the fact that the Secretary of Labor, wholly unauthorized by law, has been spending the people's money assisting an anarchist convicted of foul murder to escape the penalty of the law. He has even gone to the extreme of having one of his highly paid employees to take with him a bunch of thugs to California and install a dictagraph machine in the district attorney's office there to help criminals to escape. As I said before, any man who will help anarchists in the United States is crooked, especially if he is a Cabinet officer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of laws against alien anarchists: For the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof, including salaries and expenses of officers, clerks, and employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence, supplies, rentals, deportation expenses, and all other expenses incident to the enforcement of said laws, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $750,000.

Mr. RAKER. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 33, line 9, strike out "$750,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the testimony in this matter appears on pages 692 to 699 of the printed hearings before the committee. It will be seen that the officer in charge of this work asked Congress to give $1,000,000 for this purpose. I think anyone who has read the hearings and gone into the matter will appreciate fully the reasons for the appropriation. One of the extra costs borne by the Government now is because of the want of efficient assistance both in making the original arrest, the transportation to the place of hearing, the detention and final deportation abroad of these anarchists. The mode and method of the hearing is specified in the record. Anyone who examines the record of the 249 anarchists who were deported on the Buford on the 21st day of December, 1919, will find that the men were not only confessed anarchists but were proven anarchists by the record, and that the majority of them not only believed in the destruction of this Government but they believed in the assassination of public officials, and they believed in the unlawful destruction of life and property. The written record is there in each instance. Myself and others read part of those records.

There is no need of camouflaging the fact that the evidence is not clear and conclusive against many others who have been apprehended by the Government.

The money will not be expended unless it is actually used, but the Government is expending a large amount of money by holding these men at Ellis Island and elsewhere because of want of funds and want of means of transportation, and it ought not to be delayed for a moment.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. There is a good deal of talk about these men promising to come back here. Are our laws such that they are not to be embarrassed by that?

Mr. RAKER. If the law is enforced, by proper picture and record and finger prints and examination on return, they can not come back under our law. But the criminal may disguise himself in many ways and he might and possibly could get back. The evidence taken before the committee shows that there is but little obstruction to men coming in on the Canadian border because of the want of guards and the want of machinery. From the testimony presented to the committee in the last two weeks by capable men, men from the southern border of the Mexican line, the same state of facts exists.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. There is no obstruction in a way to keep men from coming over the Mexican border, and we need more patrols on both borders.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How many are there at Ellis Island awaiting deportation?

Mr. RAKER. I am not able to give the gentleman the number at this date.

Mr. FESS. I understood from the Department of Justice that there probably would be 6,000 people subject to such punishment already determined.

Mr. RAKER. They have already investigated and have before them the record that will bring it up to between 5,000 and 6,000. I want to say to the committee that they will not spend a dollar unless it is absolutely necessary. Let us not hamper the department when they are working faithfully—the Department of Justice and Bureau of Naturalization are properly handling this subject in all of its phases, to the end that the men may be properly disposed of after full hearing on their cases.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BOX. What is there to prevent the deported anarchists from disguising themselves and returning as seamen, and then deserting and gaining the interior?

Mr. RAKER. Nothing. I answered that to a question by the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS. I say it is a misfortune; but it is true. They can disguise themselves and come back, as the gentleman suggests. There should be a more stringent examination and inspection. It is difficult to prevent them from coming in now because they have not the force of inspectors.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. VAILE. Does the gentleman recall the testimony taken before the committee to the effect that it is easy to come across the Mexican border, and that Emma Goldman and Berkman were urged to go into Mexico and carry on their propaganda?

Mr. RAKER. That is a fact; they can come and do come across the Mexican border by thousands. One man said he had in his employ 150 men, and only 1 of them had come across the border legally and had a certificate. So you see that we have a disadvantage surrounding us all the time, and we ought to provide sufficient funds so they may be prevented to the further end that where the public officers in this country have followed the law and made the arrests, trials have been had, evidence conclusive that if these men are anarchists and bomb throwers, they can be deported. The evidence in many cases shows actually that the men have tried to destroy property and lives, and we should provide a sufficient fund whereby they can be deported, and whereby those who can not be deported shall be promptly and speedily prosecuted. That this service finding this evidence shall turn it over to the Attorney General's office, and vice versa from the Attorney General's office to the Labor Bureau and the Bureau of Immigration, to the end that the men may be deported if found here in violation of the law. I say it is penny-wise and pound-foolish to talk about economy in a thing that is absolutely necessary. It is a question actually before you. It is a live question; there is no theory about it. It is right here, and the evidence has been clear and conclusive upon these subjects, and I ask of the committee now, in passing upon this matter, that they give the department sufficient funds to employ help, so that the law may be enforced. These men are already arrested in the usual way, and a hearing must be had by the immigration inspectors. That case is transferred and sent to the Bureau of Immigration. Then it goes to the law department and is examined——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I desire to say that the three items under the title in this bill "Immigration Service" represent in full the amount which the Director General of Immigration can use at present. These items come up as deficiencies. It is not possible in this deficiency bill to undertake to set up an additional border patrol service nor to enact laws, no matter how badly needed. These are the sums necessary to cover deficiencies and to go on with the deportation work to the end of the fiscal year. These are the sums asked for during the hearings before the committee.

Mr. RAKER. They asked for a million on the first sum and $150,000 where the committee gave them $100,000. So the committee in both instances reduced the amounts, one $250,000 and the other $50,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The service can do with the money offered. It is satisfactory to them. We ought not to make unnecessary appropriations for work that can only be guessed at when further deficiency appropriations can be made later if needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Deportation of aliens under the laws regulating immigration: For the expenses of deporting to the countries whence they came, as specified in the immigration act of February 5, 1917, of alien public charges and others ordered deported under the laws regulating immigration since July 31, 1914, including conveyance to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, transportation charges when payable by the United States under the terms of existing law, including maintenance expenses, expenses of attendance and per diem in lieu of subsistence, and all incidental expenses in connection therewith, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $100,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 33, line 21, after the word "labor" strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert "$150,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. Caminetti, appeared before the committee and urged that $150,000 be authorized for this service. That will be found on page 699 of the hearings. This service ought to be given the full amount to the end that the law may be carried out, and I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

For per diem in lieu of subsistence, special agents, and employees, and for their transportation; experts and temporary assistance for field service outside of the District of Columbia, to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 per day; traveling expenses of officers and employees, purchase of reports and materials for reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and for subvention to "International Association for Labor Legislation," and necessary expenses connected with representation of the United States Government therein, $12,250.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency; it is new legislation and is not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of Labor Statistics is authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not authorized to have a per diem and traveling expense of $8 a day, and all such new provisions as that doubling such allowances. There is no law for that.

Mr. GOOD. They come under the general provision of law.

Mr. BLANTON. The only law we have ever had authorizing per diem was as riders on appropriation bills, and then it fixes it at $4 a day. This is a change of law. It is certainly new legislation and it is not a deficfency.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the act of March 4, 1913, provides that the Bureau of Labor shall hereafter be known as the Bureau of Labor Statistics and that the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor shall hereafter be known as the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, and that all of the powers and duties theretofore possessed by the Commissioner of Labor shall be retained and exercised by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Section 948, prescribing the duties of the commissioner, provides that it shall be the duty of the commissioner also to ascertain and report the effect of the customs laws, and so forth, and that he shall also establish a system of reports by which, at intervals of not more than two years, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman cite the Chair to any authority for paying a per diem in lieu of subsistence?

Mr. GOOD. There is no per diem in lieu of subsistence provided for in the bill. That is simply a limitation—that they shall not pay more than $8 a day for wages.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will read lines 23 and 24, on page 33, he will see that it provides for per diem in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. BLANTON. At $4 per day, and this is certainly a change of law, as it provides $8 per day.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915 provides:

That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments shall authorize and prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty, when not otherwise fixed by law. For the fiscal year 1916 and annually thereafter estimates of appropriations from which per diem allowances are to be paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances

The section just read is permanent law, and has been so construed by the Auditor and Comptroller of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, in view of the language read by the gentleman from Iowa, that a per diem in lieu of subsistence is authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. But where a certain amount of money is appropriated under a law of that kind, is it a deficiency to come in in an item like this and ask for a new amount, when there is no deficit whatever?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that this item is for the rest of the current fiscal year, and therefore is a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. But I quote a very eminent authority, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who, in a point of order which he made the other day that the matter in question was not a deficiency, asserted that it devolves on the chairman in charge of the bill to show that it is a deficiency where a point of order is made that it is not a deficiency, and the chairman has not shown that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATURALIZATION SERVICE.

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 736), and May 9, 1918 (Stat. L., vol. 40, pp. 542–548, inclusive), including not to exceed $35,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia from February 1, 1919, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street car fare on official business at official stations, together with per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for such per diem, together with actual necessary traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications of legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 765), and in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act of June 12, 1917; and for mileage and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States, the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for or in connection with the training or education of aliens for citizenship until the arrearage of work connected with the granting of citizenship to aliens shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not a deficiency, that it is not authorized by law, and that it is new legislation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the object for which this appropriation is sought is authorized by law. There is an estimate from the Secretary for a deficiency. Part of this appropriation is to carry into effect the provisions of law where the officers of the courts must do the actual work of naturalization. The act of June 29, 1906, gives to the United States circuit and district courts now existing, or which may hereafter be established by the Congress, and so forth, the naturalization jurisdiction of the courts therein specified, and shall extend only to alien residents within the respective judicial district.

Then the provisions of the act establishing the bureau (section 961 of the Revised Statutes) provide that the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization shall be divided into two bureaus, to be known hereafter as the Bureau of Immigration and the Bureau of Naturalization, and the title "Chief of the Division of Naturalizatiod and assistant chief" shall be Commissioner of Naturalization and Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization, and that in the absence of the Commissioner of Naturalization the deputy commissioner shall be the administrative officer.

Section 953 provides—

That the designation of the Bureau of Immigration, Department of Commerce, shall be changed to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, which said bureau, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in addition to the duties that are now provided by law, shall have charge of all matters concerning the naturalization of aliens. It shall be the duty of said bureau to provide for the use of the bureaus of immigration stationed throughout the United States books of record wherein the Commissioner of Immigration shall cause a register to be made——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the citation of the various statutes contained in this paragraph are the authorities for the things it proposes——

Mr. GOOD. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like also to ask the gentleman from Iowa to discuss the language of the proviso as to whether or not that is not new legislation.

Mr. GOOD. That is simply a limitation on the amount that can be expended. The limitation simply provides "that no part of this sum shall be expended for or in connection with the training or education of aliens for citizenship until the arrearage of work connected with the granting of citizenship to aliens shall have been disposed of." At the present time a great deal of this appropriation is being expended for what is known as "Americanization," and the committee was of the opinion that a part of the deficiency that now exists was created because of the expenditure along this line, and therefore we placed the provision that so far as this appropriation is concerned no part of it should be expended until this work of naturalization is brought up to date.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is so plain that with the average judgment of the presiding officer he ought not to hesitate to determine a question of this kind properly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that the authority cited is sufficient to warrant the language used in the paragraph, and therefore the point of order that the legislation is not authorized by existing law is overruled. The gentleman from Iowa states that this is an appropriation to be used during the balance of the present fiscal year to carry on activities already undertaken by the department, or at least that is the understanding of the Chair, and therefore seems to be in the form of a limitation on account of the fact that before this deficiency appropriation shall be available arrearages of work in connection with the bureau shall be brought up to date, and in the view of the Chair that is a proper limitation, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in the paragraph we have just passed there is a typographical error, and I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 34, line 18, strike out "1919" and insert in lieu thereof "1920."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what are these arrearages of work connected with the granting of citizenship to aliens which are regarded as of so much more importance than the instruction of the alien in citizenship before granting final papers to them?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the testimony before the committee was that in some places like New York, where there is great congestion, the aliens have to take two citizens of the United States with them to the court in order to go through the regular prescribed form, and he might sit there all day, because they are not able to get to the ear of the court or the commissioner.

Mr. SABATH. And they are obliged to come back?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and they are obliged to come back. Now, instead of spending the money for naturalization we have commenced on a plan by this bureau of trying to cram these aliens so as to make them fit for citizenship in a day or two, a system that ought never to have been established at all, and they are spending a whole lot of money in doing that kind of work and not upon their work of naturalization. They are carrying on a kind of work that the public schools of the United States are intended to carry on. These aliens ought to go to our schools and there learn to read and write and become familiar with the Constitution instead of having somebody just before they go before the judge or the commissioner to interpret the Constitution of the United States and give them instructions as to how to answer the questions. Now, it was the opinion of the committee that while there were thousands of these aliens who were entitled to citizenship, this money should be spent in hiring clerks to help naturalize them and stop the work of education done in this bureau until the arrearage of naturalization work was brought up to date.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the effect of this provision, however, to deny the opportunity of full instruction to those who want to be citizens in the principles of the Constitution, or has it reference only to those who are really prepared to become citizens and who are delayed in the procedure of obtaining final citizenship?

Mr. GOOD. Every city in the United States, every village, hamlet, and municipality furnishes public-school facilities. They can go to the public schools, and this is to stop another system of schools until they have performed what was the intention of Congress, which is to naturalize the citizens who were entitled to immediate naturalization, and those who have not availed themselves of the public schools of the States can wait until they have availed themselves of those privileges.

Mr. BRIGGS. The reason I asked in this connection is I understood the Bureau of Naturalization was establishing now a condition that certificates of proficiency or the completion of a course for citizenship shall be presented from some public school or other educational institution before aliens will be recommended for their final papers. Would the language of this provision interfere with the carrying out of that provision?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for two additional minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. I hope it will have an effect of stopping a whole lot of this foolishness that has been going on and the useless expenditure of money, duplicating what the States and the cities are spending the taxpayers' money of those places for.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am not speaking about the duplication of the work. I am speaking of what the States and cities are doing in this way, in giving aliens a course in civil government, so that when they come up before the courts and say that they are attached to the principles of the Constitution they know what the principles of the Constitution are.

Mr. GOOD. This does not take a citizen out of the night school or anywhere else.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does it interfere with the requirement that they shall have a certificate of knowledge of civil government before they shall be regarded as properly ready for citizenship?

Mr. GOOD. It does not change existing law at all. It simply directs the officer to spend the money as was intended.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. SABATH. To strike out the last two words.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I have had no chance or opportunity to examine the evidence that has been adduced by the committee on this appropriation, and especially as to the provision in this appropriation, but I have heard the chairman of the committee state that a great deal of this money that has been formerly appropriated for the naturalization service has been expended for educational purposes in schools. I was under the impression that only a small part of the appropriation has been expended, and that only for booklets and pamphlets that would tend to teach these aliens and familiarize them with the history of the United States and our Constitution. Therefore I desire to ask, Is it not a fact that the money has been expended only for such literature as would familiarize these people with the history of our country and the Constitution?

Mr. GOOD. No. This appropriation is not available for the publication of or the sending out of pamphlets and books. There is a separate fund out of which such expenditures are made. But what they do out of this is to send their examiners and inspectors all over the country to tell those in charge of the schools how to conduct their schools with regard to this class of persons. We propose to stop that.

Mr. SABATH. Out of this appropriation, can the chairman of the committee tell me how much has been expended?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Crist said it was all mixed up together and was very hard to tell. He thought possibly 25 per cent, or thereabouts, was spent for such purpose.

Mr. SABATH. I have met Mr. Crist, and he is rendering splendid help in sending out publications to the public schools of the United States.

Mr. GOOD. He is very enthusiastic in his work, and when a man becomes an enthusiast he is liable to overstep.

Mr. SABATH. I appreciate that; but I did not know that any of this appropriation had been used for the purpose of paying any teachers for school rents or any such purpose. I was under the impression it had been used only for the purpose of printing these publications that should go to the hands of the school-teachers who are trying to prepare these applicants for naturalization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRST INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE.

For salaries and expenses of the First Industrial Conference called by the President of the United States, including printing, personal services in the District of Columbia, payment to Pan American Union for use of its building, including light, telephone service, and all other necessary expenses, $9,147.57.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Last Friday, I think it was, I asked the chairman of the committee, when the matter of the Public Health Service was under discussion in this bill, a question. I rather felt at the time that the chairman was a little brusque with me in his answer and intimated that as a new Member of Congress I should be entirely familiar with all the statutes of the United States and with all the governmental functions. I was very much interested in the matter under discussion in the House—the Public Health Service—because of the fact of being a physician and having some views in respect to the extension of governmental activities generally which have cropped up during the war going far beyond what I think they ought to go, and I made up my mind to obtain, if I could, a little information on the subject. I will give it to the House, as well as to the chairman of the committee, if he is not already familiar with the facts. I asked the Public Health Service a specific question and I have a specific answer from them, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, February 2, 1920.

The Hon. CALEB R. LAYTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LAYTON: In the matter of medical officers connected with the Public Health Service, I am pleased to furnish the information that there are about 2,300 physicians in the service appointed for duty and they are all medical graduates and properly licensed to practice. The aggregate annual pay of these physicians is approximately $4,601,000. This is exclusive of nurses, attendants, etc.

Respectfully,

J. C. PERRY,
Acting Surgeon General.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I, as one Member of this House, object to the extension of a public service of this character. Here we have on the pay rolls of the United States a number of licensed physicians drawing salaries that are nearly 50 per cent of all the physicians we had for 4,000,000 troops in the war. When you take into account those who are dead and need no physicians; when you take into account the comparatively small number of casualties that we had, and those who came back here by the hundreds of thousands who are stronger and better than they were before they enlisted, I say that this number of physicians is a fraud upon the taxpayers of this country, unless it be the intention of the Congress to substitute Government physicians and surgeons for all those engaged in civil practice.

As the chairman of the committee has just said, there are civil functions that ought not to be interfered with. I think he made that statement a moment ago. So in this case the physicians of this country ought to be allowed to take care of these matters in a civil way.

I am not opposed, Mr. Chairman, to a national Public Health Service. The matter of the public health is one that involves well-defined principles of economics, as well as human happiness and well-being. What I am opposed to is its extension to abnormal and unjustifiable proportions which usurp the rights as well as the duties of the States, and interferes with physicians and surgeons in their civil occupation. Extended, all these various functions inaugurated under the stress of war simply means the gradual nationalization of every civil function now performed by men and women in their individual capacity and acting upon their own initiative. This tendency is well revealed in every direction, and is known to all thoughtful men, but there is a strange paralysis of action in opposition to this tendency. There are many of these governmental activities, too many in fact for me to mention in the presence of this House, who are more familiar with them than I am. In addition to the Public Health Service and its extension to a point where, after the war is over, there are still employed 2,500 physicians at a salary aggregating $4,691,000, I desire to call the attention of the House to the matter of national education. No one denies that education is the very foundation of intelligent citizenship, and essential to the preservation of our Government, where the people themselves rule under a democratic form. In this matter there is an increasing encroachment upon the several States of the Union. Federal control is extending itself to such a degree that the people of the various States, whose duty it is to provide for education themselves, are gradually losing their initiative, and growing more and more to lean on the paternal arm of the Federal Government. Many of these estimable people are seeking more and more to broaden the scope of Federal control. Most of them are ignorant of the consequences. Some of them are secret disciples of nationalism and internationalism, of which the foundation stone is socialism. I am opposed to this tendency in every form, except where it be a clear and indubitable national necessity. All of these various activities should be reserved to the States and their people, where it is possible, in order that they may become capable citizens because they have been compelled to grapple with and work out their own problems. Paternalism is inherently enervating and does not make for capable, robust citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to ask him whether there was any authority of law for the calling of this conference, and whether this appropriation is based upon any existing statute?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not going to raise a point of order, but I want it as a matter of information.

Mr. GOOD. No. There is no law authorizing the President to constitute this conference. The conference was constituted by the President and the amount carried in the bill is just the exact amount of the expenditures, or the amount of the bills that have accumulated because of that conference.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who reported these expenditures to the committee?

Mr. GOOD. As I recall, the President turned this whole matter over to the Department of Labor, to make the arrangements, and authorized them to incur the indebtedness. I think it was while Mr. Roosevelt was President that Congress enacted a law which absolutely prohibited the creation of a conference of this kind or a commission of this kind, and provided that no money should be expended for that purpose unless duly authorized by law. That statute is still on the statute books. But this conference was created, and this is an actual deficiency, although created in violation of that provision of the statute. But the committee felt that the proper thing to do was to bring it before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECOND INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE.

For salaries and expenses of the second industrial conference called by the President to meet December 1, 1919, including reporting, printing and binding, rent, traveling expenses, and contingent and other miscellaneous expenses, $12,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, in view of the statement made by the chairman.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this conference is now at work. From the reports that come out I understand the conference is really doing effective work. The Hon. Samuel W. McCall, former governor of Massachusetts and formerly a Member of this body, is a member of this conference, and men of that character have been brought together to study some of these questions. The Department of Labor estimates that it would cost more than is carried here—as I recall, $25,000. Mr. McCall and Mr. Rosenwold, another member of the conference, came to us and said they could get along with $12,000. As I recall, they are not receiving any salaries. This is just for the actual expenses. I believe that just at this time—and I think I voice the sentiment of the entire committee—when we see the unrest throughout the United States, we feel if $12,000 is expended in this way by men who are brought together from all parts of the United States to study the industrial situation, it will be money well expended. I think if the gentleman will look over the names of the men whom the President has called together on this occasion, he will concede that we ought to congratulate the President in taking the step, even though no authority exists for the conference. At least, the expense of stenographers and clerks ought to be paid, so that the conference can work in an efficient manner. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not raise the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it is time to stop spending the people's money for these conferences. The gentleman mentions the name of a former governor of Massachusetts, a former Member of this House. Well, he is traveling somewhat upon reflected glory at the present time, and while he may think he is doing a lot of good work, and although a lot of these other cranks that are collocated together under the name of conferences and industrial commissions and committees may all be obsessed with the idea of the gentleman from Massachusetts, yet they are all costing money, and it is time to show a little spirit of retrenchment. [Applause.]

Talk about unrest! Of course there is going to be unrest if we have conferences called to keep these problems stirred up and stewed up all the time. [Applause.] They are no nearer solution after the conference dissolves and they go back to their respective homes than they were before they undertook it.

The first industrial conference came to a deadlock and was a failure. Each side blamed the other. I do not believe that this second one is going to get very much further. I submit to the chairman of the committee that it is time for Congress to express its view upon this matter. Are we going to continue indefinitely these war powers and this war legislation and these war conferences? This conference was called—the first one—probably through an interpretation of the war power, without any specific authority. Now, the time for these things has passed, and I submit, unless we give specific authority, the law of 1909 which governs matters of this sort ought to be respected. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this sum of money has been incurred, and, if so, in what way the indebtedness has been incurred?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose a part of this has been incurred. The estimate made by the executive secretary and approved by the Secretary of Labor provides for traveling expenses for members of the conference, $6,000; traveling and per diem expenses of witnesses to the conference, $1,000; secretaries, $2,000; clerical and stenographic assistants, $2,000; printing, postage, and sundry expenses, $1,000. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order. I realize that there ought to be legislation along this line, but I think the committee and Congress might be criticized at this time if this appropriation is not made, and for that reason the work should proceed.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman should not urge that as the reason—because Congress might be criticized. It might be criticized because it did make an appropriation of $12,000 for this purpose.

Mr. GOOD. It might justly be criticized. We have already appropriated for one of these conferences—the coal conference. We have already carried an item in the bill for that, and that has been passed. We have given an appropriation for that conference, and I submit to the gentleman that we ought at least to give this conference a fair trial.

Mr. WALSH. How many of these conferences are there now at large? We have had the coal conference and the industrial conference, and has there not been recently some international allied conference operating down here, occupying Government buildings?

Mr. GOOD. That was a conference of labor, provided for by the League of Nations, and that conference was called because Congress passed a resolution directing the President to call it and providing that he should not appoint commissioners unless——

Mr. WALSH. Oh, probably that would have been called if we had not directed the President to call it. We did not direct him to call the coal conference.

Mr. GOOD. The coal conference was called, as the gentleman will remember, when Congress was in recess, and that was called as the result of an agreement between the coal operators and the coal miners.

Mr. WALSH. That is the conference about which great promises have been held out of public benefit to consumers of coal as the result of their operations?

Mr. GOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I predict that the public benefit will vanish into thin air. Instead of the consumers of coal paying less for fuel as the result of that conference and its operations they will be paying more. There is no authority of law for this industrial conference, and really the expenditure that has been incurred ought to come out of the funds of the officer responsible for calling it.

But in view of the plea of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who is convinced because a former governor of Massachusetts happens to be a member of it, which fact is not even persuasive with me, that some benefit may come, I am going to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that in the preceding paragraph we have appropriated $9,100 and more, part of which the provision says is to pay the Pan American Union for the use of this building down here during that first conference. Now that building is maintained here in the city of Washington partly at the expense of the people of this Government. I understood that conference was called in the interests of the other people who are interested in the Pan American Building, the same as the people of the United States, and why we should be called upon to pay out $9,100 for the use of that building a few days in the interests of the people of the countries involved, I can not see. Now we are asked to pay out $12,000 more.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from Texas will yield, there is no rent paid for the use of that building. That language is submitted in the estimate, but it is for the heating and the expense of lighting the building during the conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think he ought to draw the bills that he brings in here in such words that they will mean what they say, so as not to mislead us?

Mr. GOOD. This was the estimate made by the Department of Labor, and they have the entire charge of the expenditure of these funds. We went into the matter in the hearing, and it was made very clear that this money was not for the use of the building. The very question that the gentleman has raised here was raised there, and it was explained that not a penny of this was for the use of the building. It was just for the heat and light.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I applauded every word said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and I think I was the only man in the House who did applaud him. I want to make my applause good, because my economy is more than lip economy, and I make the point of order against this paragraph that it is not authorized by law, is not a deficiency, and that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order against the first paragraph on page 36. Can the gentleman from Iowa cite the Chair to any authorization of law?

Mr. GOOD. There is no authority of law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

House Office Building: For maintenance, including miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services, $19,505.20.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question: What is the meaning of the words "including miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services," in line 9?

Mr. GOOD. It includes all expenditures for the maintenance of the House Office Building except heating the building. Everything necessary for the maintenance of the building except the heating is included.

Mr. BARBOUR. I should like to ask the chairman, further, if that contemplates the expenditure of any money for the purpose of eradicating the mice, cockroaches, and other vermin that infest the House Office Building? [Applause.] I ask that question for the purpose of calling attention to what I consider a very deplorable condition existing there.

Mr. GOOD. It would be paid out of this fund. The whole question of superintending that work is under the jurisdiction of the House Office Building Commission.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then I think something ought to be done to jack up this House Office Building Commission, or the superintendent, or whoever it is that is responsible for those conditions. I have got a collection of bugs in my office that I dare say will compare with anything in the Smithsonian Institution. [Laughter.] They have ruined a large supply of stationery which I recently received and which was charged up to my stationery account.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman whether there is any bug juice over there? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. I have had the superintendent of the office building spray a solution, supposed to be an insect destroyer, three or four times around my office, and afterwards the bugs seemed to be larger than they were before.

Mr. JUUL. They got fat on it.

Mr. BARBOUR. They have even eaten the covers off the books; and I think it is time that somebody who is responsible for this condition sat up and took notice of what is going on over there. There are enough employees sitting around in the House Office Building warming chairs and apparently doing nothing but drawing their salaries, so that, it seems to me, they could put things in a somewhat decent and livable condition there.

Mr. KING. Perhaps if there was anything fit to eat furnished in the House Office Building restaurant the gentleman's books would not be disturbed by the cockroaches. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. It has been some time since I endeavored to eat anything in the House Office Building restaurant.

Another thing, while I am on my feet and if I am in order, I would like to call attention to the fact that while there are several men on duty over there wearing the uniforms and badges of policemen it is a common occurrence for things to be stolen out of the House Office Building. It seems to me that if some of the fellows wearing those uniforms would get out of their chairs occasionally and patrol the halls of the office building this condition might not exist. I think it is a crying shame that the House Office Building is in the condition in which it is. I make these remarks for the purpose of calling the matter to the attention of the House, in the hope that something will sometime be done to remedy the conditions existing there. [Applause.]

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, here are $19,505.20 appropriated for the House Office Building. If I am not misinformed, part of this money goes to maintain the restaurant over there. I think it is a long while since the Members having their offices there have sampled any of the food in the House Office Building restaurant.

Mr. GOOD. Nothing in this fund goes to the restaurant.

Mr. JUUL. We are paying for housing, light, and heat for that restaurant. I take it that comes out of some fund. Now, some committee somewhere in this House ought to be responsible for a thorough clean-up. If I can find the item in this bill that pays for anything for that restaurant over there I want to move to strike it out. The poor girls and other employees who have to go there to eat are charged double and treble prices for stuff that is not fit to set before a human being. The people who run that restaurant have rent free, light free, and heat free, and they furnish wretched stuff to eat. They charge exorbitant prices for it, and we as Congressmen let them fool with us and do us.

Then, after we have let them charge us exorbitant prices for poor food, insufficient food, and poor service, we go out and kick against the restaurants on the outside because they do the same thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman received a communication from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING]?

Mr. JUUL. I am sorry that we have not a lot more of Kings to straighten this thing out. Now that I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word more.

Mr. GOOD. There is nothing in the bill pertaining to the restaurants. The gentleman must speak to the House Office Commission that has charge of it. There is nothing carried in this bill that pertains to the restaurants.

Mr. JUUL. I want to say that over in the Senate restaurant an entirely different atmosphere prevails. They have different food, different service, and the prices are moderate. I think it is high time that we quit this foolishness and that somebody or other should look after it and give us decent service.

Mr. GOOD. The circumstances in regard to the restaurant of the Senate are different from that here. The Senate restaurant is run under an arrangement that the Government will pay any deficit in operation. Here neither the restaurant on the House side of the Capitol nor the restaurant in the House Office Building is any deficit taken care of by an appropriation.

Mr. JUUL. How can there be a deficit when they do not pay for heat, they do not pay for light, they do not pay any rent, and they charge exorbitant prices and furnish poor food. [Laughter.] How can there be a deficit?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman will have to take that up with the House Office Commission. I am not on the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JUUL. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the House restaurant in the office building is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Building and Grounds.

Mr. JUUL. I want to say that there is as much difference between the restaurant in the House Office Building and that of the Senate as between night and day. I think we are soft in the top story to let them treat us the way we are treated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The only way for the gentleman from Illinois is to take it up with the proper parties having jurisdiction.

Mr. JUUL. It is a case where you find the finger pointing in two directions. When you try to point your finger to the guilty party, it is always over in the next county. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I notice that this item calls for the expenditure for miscellaneous items. I would like to ask, as a matter of information, what the deficiency is for?

Mr. GOOD. It involves miscellaneous items, as the word indicates. Occasionally it is necessary to change all the locks on the doors—that is, to change the cylinders of the locks.

Mr. DENISON. Why is that necessary?

Mr. GOOD. Because there are certain master keys made and somebody gets possession of them. Some Member may lose his key and some one may find it. When he goes out of Congress he may give the key to a clerk in his office, and after a while a great many keys are out and Members are having things taken from their rooms. Mr. Woods has informed the committee that it has always been necessary, after the lapse of two or three years, to change the cylinders, and that involves an expense alone of $2,993. There are many items of that kind. Then there are changes made in the rooms, some painting is done, all maintenance items. It is a very large building, and the expense is not very large when you consider the size of the building that must be maintained. Here comes a complaint like the complaint made by the gentleman from California, that in many cases there is not enough work done. The complaint of the gentleman from California is that there is not sufficient work done in cleaning up the offices.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman will yield, my opinion is—and I have made some investigation—that the people in charge do not follow up and see that the work is done. They sit around in chairs, and it would do them good to get up and find out if the charwomen and others employed to do the work really do it.

Mr. GOOD. Those persons who sit at the elevators have nothing to do with cleaning up. They have their hands full if they run the elevators and run them properly.

Mr. BARBOUR. Who has control of the char work? Whoever it is, he is not doing his duty.

Mr. GOOD. Neither the elevator men nor the police are under the control of the superintendent; but if the gentleman has a complaint, I suggest that he take the matter up first with the superintendent of the building, and then if he does not get a result go to the commission.

Mr. BARBOUR. Who is the commission?

Mr. GOOD. The Speaker of the House, the ex-Speaker [Mr. CLARK of Missouri], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH].

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not to exceed $1 per thousand, $8,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 36, after line 19, add the following:

"For payment of Peter F. Tague, in the contested-election case of Tague against Fitzgerald, ordered and recommended by Committee on Elections No. 2, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance to the following contestant and contestee for expenses incurred by them in the contested-election case audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 1:

Victor L. Berger, $2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask the chairman whether or not he thinks it is right for the people of the United States to pay a disloyalist $2,000 of their money for trying to break into Congress when he knew he was not qualified, when he knew he was disloyal to his flag in war time, when he knew that he was preaching propaganda to disorganize and dismember the Government? Are we going to pay him $2,000 additional after he has drawn a salary for months and months, and also drawn for his clerk hire and his secretary's hire and his office expenses?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the law provides that in a contested-election case, where the election of any person who has a certificate is contested, there shall be paid to the contestee and to the contestant a sum not to exceed $2,000 for the expenses of the contest. This sum has nothing to do with the recent action of the House in denying Mr. Berger a seat. In the election in the fall of 1918 Mr. Berger was a candidate from the fifth congressional district from the State of Wisconsin. He was declared elected, and he came to the House with a certificate of election. He presented it. His election was contested by another candidate. He had a right under the law to be heard. He had all of the rights that any person would have under similar circumstances. It is not for the Committee on Appropriations to say whether or not because it believes a man is entitled to a seat or is not entitled to a seat the law shall be enforced. The Committee on Appropriations in reporting this item had but one duty to perform, and that was to obey the law, and the man or the class of men who would turn a man out of Congress because he was not a good, loyal citizen of the Republic, and then in turning him out would themselves refuse to abide by the law by not given him the money which the law says he shall have in my opinion would be but little better than the man who violates the law in the first instance. The law is that Mr. Berger is entitled to his expenses in that contest. He was entitled to a hearing, and the Committee on Appropriations, without any division at all upon the subject, was in favor of following the law and in favor of the law being enforced. This appropriation is in obedience to the statutes of the United States. We have no discretion in the matter. This item was certified unanimously by the Committee on Elections that heard the case. It bears the indorsement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], who asked that the appropriation be made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the law and the rules of this House provide that whenever a man who holds, presumably, the qualifications of a Representative comes here upon a contested election and that contest is heard, he shall be paid a sum of not to exceed $2,000 for his expenses. The law nowhere provides and the rules of this House nowhere provide that one who is disloyal, who has no right to a seat in the House of Representatives, who comes here and who is heard only on a question of his loyalty to his flag, shall be paid anything. The very moment that the Sixty-sixth Congress met, Victor L. Berger appeared here on the floor of the House and asked to be sworn in, and at that moment the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] offered a resolution to the effect that that man was disloyal to his flag and his country in time of war, and that he had no right to claim a seat in this House, in the first instance.

That was the question which was passed upon before the committee, not a contested-election case. It was the question of Victor L. Berger's loyalty to his country and to his flag in time of war.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I have not time now to yield. That was the question upon which evidence was heard, that was the question which the committee spent days and weeks in hearing testimony on, filling a thick book with hundreds of pages of evidence. It was not the question of a contested-election case. There is no law authorizing this payment. If it were a contested-election case, immediately upon the deciding that Victor L. Berger was not entitled to a seat, Mr. Carney would have been sworn in here as a Representative in Congress. Was Mr. Carney sworn in? No. Was Mr. Berger sworn in? No; because the committee found that he was disloyal. My friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the great economist chairman of the great Republican Committee on Appropriations of this House, comes in and in effect says he wants to pacify Mr. Berger by handing over $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. I have said nothing of the kind.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the meaning of the gentleman's words.

Mr. GOOD. It is not the meaning of my words, and my words can not be construed in any such way.

Mr. BLANTON. Every Member of this House has a right to construe the acts of individuals and the English language in the way in which it appears to him reasonable, and I want to say it appears to my mind reasonable that this is an effort to pacify Mr. Berger and to pacify the thousands of disloyal socialists of his district who tried to send him here and tried to force this House to take him, to gulp him down, however bitter and poisonous the dose was.

Mr. GOOD. The Committee on Appropriations is composed of 21 members. My recollection is that every member upon it voted against seating Mr. Berger. Not a single member of that committee raised any question at any time with regard to our obligation in this matter. The whole expense was involved in determining in a lawful way, as the House I hope will always proceed to determine, the question of the right to a seat on the floor of this House. It was to determine whether or not Mr. Berger was entitled to sit here.

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Chairman, not a single one of those 21 members of the Appropriations Committee has ever voted against giving all of these fine cedar boxes, these fine oak boxes, and these fine pine boxes that my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has been drawing each year for 40 years and that have been allotted to me and every other Member of Congress ever since I have been here, notwithstanding that we have no excuse whatever for taking these gifts at the expense of the people, and we ought to stop such waste.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law; it is not a deficiency, and it is new legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not the floor, but I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. In order that the RECORD may be kept straight, I want to say that the $2,000, as I think the House understands, is expenditure made in the inquiry respecting Mr. Berger's right to a seat when he first was elected to the Sixty-sixth Congress. After Mr. Berger was thrown out he went back and was again a candidate, and was again denied a seat without any investigation, because the Committee on Elections, after a thorough investigation, had determined the question of fact to their satisfaction. I have no doubt that the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. BLANTON. But the hearing was not on the contest; it was on the matter of his loyalty and his qualifications to a seat in this House.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if you please, the House is making an effort to get the facts, and he had his day in court. The gentleman would not hang a dog until he had given him a chance.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but after giving him a chance and convicting him and he deserved hanging you would hang him in Illinois just the same as we would in Texas.

Mr. CANNON. We kept him out, and he is being prosecuted in the courts.

Mr. BLANTON. And we want to pacify him by giving him $2,000——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; the gentleman is not just in that remark, and I do not think he means it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think some gentlemen are under a misapprehension as to what this item is. I do not understand that this item is for the payment of the expenses of Mr. Berger or Mr. Carney before the special committee appointed by the House to consider Mr. Berger's case. When Mr. Berger received the certificate of election under the law Mr. Carney filed notice of a contest, as I understand—I do not pretend to know very much about the facts—and testimony was taken under the contest. That contest was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1, I assume, because that made the order. The House, however, on the opening day appointed a special committee to consider not the contested-election case but the right of Mr. Berger to be sworn in. Now, the two cases are separate. One is the contested-election case filed under the law, and under that law it is provided that the Committee on Elections which has charge of contested-election cases shall certify to the Committee on Appropriations payment or audit up to $2,000 of the expenses of the contestant and the contestee. Apparently the Committee on Elections No. 1, to which the contest was referred, has made the proper certificate certifying the expenses of $2,000, both to the contestant and contestee. I do not understand that that has anything to do with the contest or the investigation of the special committee of the House as to the prima facie right of Mr. Berger to be sworn in. Under the law the Committee on Appropriations has followed the certificate of the Committee on Elections No. 1 in reference to the expenses of the contest, the most of which would naturally be incurred, and probably were incurred, before Congress met at all, because the notice of contest has to be filed within, I think, 40 days of the time the certificate was issued. The reply notice has to be filed within a certain time, testimony taken, and, while I do not know what the facts are, I assume, from the certificate of the Committee on Elections, that this item is to pay for the expenses of taking testimony in the contested-election case and not in the case before the special committee.

Mr. GOOD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. In the Chair's opinion, Twentieth Statutes at Large, page 400, contain all the authorization that is necessary for such an appropriation as is carried here in the usual amount granted in contested-election cases, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement to the official stenographers to committees for amounts actually and necessarily expended by them during the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, $700 each, $2,800.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, not to discuss any matter that is pending but to make a few observations on another subject. I think the contention of the gentleman in reference to the payment of Berger's bill was correct under the law, because there was a contest. I think also under some conditions and circumstances there ought to be allowances of attorneys' fees and expenses of the contestant. I know it is the existing law, and I am not making any suggestion to change it, but I just want to make an observation on the subject of paying contestants in these cases attorneys' fees and expenses. If I read history aright, there was a man from South Carolina some years ago who made a habit—and the gentleman from South Carolina will bear me out as to whether I am correct or not—of contesting the election of a successful opponent in every election, with the result that he was able to maintain himself upon the attorneys' fees and expenses he realized by reason of the contest. Now, there ought to be some way in which the law can be changed to reach a condition of that kind. If a man has a real, genuine claim to a contest, I do not know that he ought to be precluded from presenting it, but this business of allowing every man disappointed by reason of the election seeking a return for the evil that he claimed had been done to him—and this is not political and is applicable to either party—should not be encouraged, because it amounts to making a contest.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. I will.

Mr. ROSE. I did not happen to be in the hall at the time of the discussion with reference to the item appropriating $2,000 to Victor Berger. I have listened to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] has to say about contested-election cases, but as I understand the law every time that bills for expenses are presented to the committee they are scrutinized and the committee must be satisfied before an appropriation would be made, and in the case of Victor Berger——

Mr. BEE. I am not discussing the Berger case at all.

Mr. ROSE. But what I have said is that the rule followed in every election contest, if the contest has merit, the interested parties must be able to satisfy the Committee on Elections to which it was referred of the justice of the claims presented; and the committee has it in their power to refuse to recommend an appropriation for the amount for which either the contestant or contestee makes application.

Mr. BEE. For any expenses whatever?

Mr. ROSE. They have it in their power to refuse it. The Committee on Elections No. 1, of which I am a member, has refused in certain instances to pay one copper. I think power is lodged in the committee to determine the amount awarded the contending parties, not exceeding $2,000 to contestant or contestee.

Mr. BEE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that is the very principle I have in mind. I have been keeping up for many years with these contested-election cases, and if the gentleman's committee has that power, of course it can be stopped; but I do not want anything done that will encourage the contest by these disappointed candidates, and that is the reason why I am making this statement.

Mr. ROSE. The case to which the gentleman refers was heard and considered by the committee to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it may be of interest to state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], and also to the gentleman from Texas on my left [Mr. BLANTON], that at one time and for a long time this expense about contested elections was so rank that it became a public scandal. A fellow would start a contest and run up his bill to thousands and thousands of dollars. Finally Congress passed this law limiting it to $2,000, which is not very much of an encouragement to an ordinary man running for Congress to come here and try to get in. So the limiting of the amount to $2,000 did a great deal of good here.

Now, the man that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] was talking about, from South Carolina, was named Prioleau, who claimed to be one of the old Huguenots. Anyway, he nearly pestered the life out of me when I was Speaker. He would write me a letter every three or four weeks, wanting this $2,000. He received only two votes, and I expect, then, he repeated and voted for himself. [Laughter.] Anyhow, I suggested to the members of the Committee on Elections that that fellow ought to have snuffers put on him. [Laughter.] He came to see me. I told him he did not have any right to that $2,000, and that if I had my way he would not get it. So the Committee on Elections came in here and reported he had no sort of claim to the money. That was five or six years ago, and nobody has heard anything from him since.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He has stopped running.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman says that he has stopped running.

This $2,000 limit was a very healthy performance.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And no part of the $2,000 goes to the contestant or contestee. They must make a certificate and affidavit that this money is to be paid out to other parties before the committee will issue a certificate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as Carney is concerned, his sort of claim is res adjudicata in this House, and has been for 20 years. He did not have a shadow of a claim to a seat here, and Berger did not have a claim, and so the seat was left vacant.

Mr. BEE. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have accomplished a double purpose. I hope the country will have its attention called to the rules of the House, which are generally misunderstood. We are indebted to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] for his statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. While I am at it, I will make a few more remarks.

The first one is that the contested-election cases grow fewer and fewer as the years go by here. In the second place, they are tried now with some semblance of justice. I saw them throw a man out here once that had 13,000 majority. Of course, that was preposterous. The credit for making these election cases a kind of lawsuit and having some decency and justice about them belongs to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.] He is the man who did it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman, if, in the last contested-election case in Alaska, the losing party to that contest, after having drawn his salary for practically two whole years, after having drawn his secretary's salary for practically two whole years, did not in addition to that draw several thousand dollars' mileage and also his $2,000 of expenses?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course he did. I do not know anything about the figures, but I will guarantee the fact to be that both of those gentlemen from Alaska spent more than the $2,000 allowed by Congress; and I will make one further postscript to these remarks, namely, that if Sulzer had made the same kind of an argument before the Elections Committee that he made on the floor of the House they never would have seated Wickersham. He had no business in here, anyway, on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have had some experience in election cases. I was chairman of one of the election committees, and found in many of the cases that the amount actually and necessarily expended on each side far exceeded $2,000. Now, the practice has always been, at least within my long service in the House, that every chairman of the several Election Committees took care to see that the law with regard to certification of reasonableness of expenses and of sending the papers to the Committee on Appropriations was observed. The law requires not only that there shall be, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], an affidavit showing the items of expenditure that have been made or incurred, but also there shall be verified vouchers filed with the Committee on Elections.

And I doubt whether any Elections Committee, at least within a long number of years past, has allowed any certificate to be issued or that the chairman made or issued any to be filed with the Appropriations Committee until verified vouchers were filed with the Elections Committee. There were cases in which $2,000 was claimed by one or other of the parties to the contest, where it appeared that the amount claimed was excessive or else had not been reasonably incurred. I recall one in particular that came before my committee, where the expenditure was not necessarily incurred, and one where the contest should never have been begun, and in those cases I cut the amount down in one case from $2,000 to $1,200 and in another down to $1,000. And so in some other cases reductions were made. It depends, after all, on the chairman of the Elections Committee as to what certification he will make. If, after examination of the papers submitted by the contestant or contestee and the examination of the vouchers accompanying the papers, the chairman finds the amount is reasonable and has been necessarily incurred, he simply makes the certificate and files it with the Committee on Appropriations. It is, after all, with the Elections Committee, or with the chairman of such committee, as to what amount shall be allowed. That is about the size of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, for the following fiscal years:

For 1920, $142,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARNER. I do so to ascertain from the chairman of the committee just what this $142,000 is for.

Mr. GOOD. What was the question of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GARNER. I just wanted to know what the $142,000 was for. What necessity is there for this tremendous appropriation for the contingent expenses of the House that has brought about this extraordinary sum as compared with anything else that we have ever had since I have been a Member of Congress?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think not. I think that is not true.

Mr. GARNER. I think it is, considering the length of time we have been in the Sixty-sixth Congress. It occurs to me that it is larger than anything we have ever had here before.

Mr. GOOD. The items estimated for by the Clerk of the House are as follows:

Special and select committees and committees operating under authority of resolutions, $77,207.13.
Telegrams, from March to June, 1920, four months, $26,000.

That is not the telegrams of the select committees. Those are telegrams of Members of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is not that an extraordinary sum as compared with other sessions of Congress?

Mr. GOOD. No. The amount has decreased considerably. It is quite large, but it is considerably less than it has been in the recent past.

Mr. GARNER. What was the $77,000 for?

Mr. GOOD. That was for the select committees and committees operating under authority of resolutions of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Did the chairman have any hearings on the question of the details of expenditures in that particular?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. The Clerk of the House came before the committee and gave us rather detailed information in regard to it.

Mr. GARNER. What are the principal items, if I may ask the chairman, so that the committee may have some slight information as to this tremendous expense that is being incurred by the various committees?

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to my friend that these committees are investigating the expenditure of infinitely larger sums of money than any Congress heretofore has appropriated for, and the expenses necessarily are larger?

Mr. GARNER. That has nothing to do with the question of whether these committees are extravagant or not. The question is whether these investigating committees that are investigating the expenditures of the Government are not quite as extravagant as the people they are investigating. The question is, Have they not been somewhat extravagant themselves?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, the expenditures during this war have been greater than all the expenditures, as I am informed, from the formation of the Government down to the beginning of this administration.

Mr. MADDEN. Twice as great.

Mr. CANNON. "Twice as great," the gentleman says.

Mr. GARNER. Undoubtedly; but that does not show that if the gentleman from Illinois was making an investigation he would not exercise some discretion and some restraint in spending the public funds in making that investigation. That is what I am trying to ascertain from the gentleman from Iowa now, as to what bounds of reason have governed the various special committees and expenditure committees in making these investigations. I am trying to get the items for which the expenditures were made.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely the gentleman will agree that in the investigation of an expenditure of funds amounting to something over $20,000,000,000 necessarily unusual expenses are incurred.

Mr. GARNER. I merely wanted to get some detailed information. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more, if necessary, in order to get it from the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Iowa is not too much disturbed by others around him, I would like to get some idea of the items for which the $76,000 has been used.

Mr. GOOD. I am not disturbed. The $77,000——

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit, I will suggest that the chairmen of these various investigating committees be invited to attend this session. No doubt they could make a better explanation of the expenditures of their committees than could the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. For instance, there is Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He is chairman of the war expenditures investigation committee and of one of its subcommittees. There is my friend MCKENZIE, of Illinois, who is chairman of another special subcommittee. There is my friend FREAR, who is a great economist; he is chairman of another subcommittee; and there is my friend, the Hon. JOSEPHUS WALSH, of Massachusetts, who, by the way, is named after the distinguished Secretary of the Navy from the State of North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. No. I deny that. [Laughter.] And I do not need an invitation to be present. I am usually here, and I am willing to give the gentleman any information I have.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is my friend, ROYAL JOHNSON, a distinguished soldier, from South Dakota. He is at the head of one of the committees that sailed around the world and went to Europe, and perhaps to Asia, Africa, and other places; and——

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I say to my friend——

Mr. KITCHIN. Not now. There is my friend, Mr. REAVIS, of Nebraska, who is one of the automobile investigators. If they were here they could explain. They knew these items were coming up this afternoon and knew that the gentleman from Texas was going to ask some questions about them and that he was very curious to know how all this money could possibly be spent; and he is going to be just about as curious as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee was when the matter came up before him. He wanted to know——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I do not want to embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield if the gentleman will not embarrass me. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I simply wanted to suggest on behalf of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois that he and his committee have just returned from an investigation of Muscle Shoals and Nitro, and that they are so shocked with the wanton waste and extravagance exhibited there that they are too ill to attend the sessions of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I would prefer to have direct evidence rather hearsay as to that. As to the shock caused by their investigation of Muscle Shoals, the great extravagance of the expenditures of Mr. GRAHAM'S committee have greatly shocked this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman will be perfectly satisfied with the kind of report that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] makes as to Muscle Shoals.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no doubt I will.

Mr. MADDEN. And I hope that the gentleman will join Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois and others of us in bringing to light any extravagance he may find growing out of the expenditure of public money.

Mr. KITCHIN. So far as I know his reports have been perfectly satisfactoory. He has found nothing as yet.

He has made several reports. He has been investigating for four or five or six months. He has been from this place to that place, and he has never yet been able to fix the responsibility for a single act of omission or commission upon a single human being. It has cost us some $30,000 or $40,000.

Mr. MADDEN. The administration is responsible for all the iniquities that have happened.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand, but your committees have spent $70,000, and they have never been able to point their finger to a single individual connected with the administration who is responsible for any culpable act of omission or commission. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not the chairman of the committee, but if the gentleman wants any information I will be glad to give it to him.

Mr. JUUL. I was going to ask the gentleman if his idea was that they had covered their tracks so well that we could not find them.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know. I presume that about 19 out of 20 of them who had anything to do with this were Republicans. I believe some of the smoothest Republican employees in the country were running the matters of contracts and war expenditures for the administration, and if they did anything wrong they were able to cover their tracks. I do not say they did anything wrong, especially since the final reports of these committees are not in. I retain the privilege of thinking.

Mr. JUUL. If there are any Republicans who did anything wrong, I hope they will be caught and punished.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not by these Republican committees.

Mr. GOOD. I will try to answer the question that has been asked.

Mr. KITCHIN. I should like to have five minutes more. I am speaking in the time of the chairman. It is very kind of him. Of course, if I could get the time here I could go into that phase of the investigations more completely and definitely for the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will make no request for time. We must get along with the bill. I am anxious to make a statement about the matter under consideration.

Mr. KITCHIN. If I can give you some information, I will be glad to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Inasmuch as the gentleman is attacking these investigating committees and subcommittees, and I presume they are pursuing their investigations under oath, I will ask the gentleman if he has been sworn, or is he making a statement here to discredit the committees of the House, or is he just making a speech?

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Uncle JOE, you always misunderstand me. [Laughter.] I am attacking no one, no committees. I am discrediting no one, no committees. I am not really objecting to anything, and I am not going to object to anything. I am going to vote for everything the chairman of this committee asks me to vote for, I think, and the steering committee, too, I reckon. [Laughter.] I just want some information. I know it can be explained. For instance, on page 1014 of the hearings on this bill is a statement of expenses of the subcommittee on aviation. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is chairman of that subcommittee. He is not here. He is an economist, and I know if he were here he could explain it thoroughly to my satisfaction.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the gentleman wait until Mr. FREAR is here?

Mr. KITCHIN. He is not here, and this item was not brought up until this afternoon. I know the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] could explain it. On page 1014 is an item, "G. G. Gabrielson, 14 days and 5 hours, at $25 a day, $365.63; expenses, $490.89." I can not understand, you know, why his expenses were about $100 more than his salary, unless he was hired on the expense basis instead of on the salary basis, so that the expenses would be the principal thing and the salary the incident—why his salary should be $25 a day and his expenses $35 a day. I know that Mr. FREAR could explain that.

Here is another little item. My friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] is present, and there is absolutely no doubt that he can explain this. On page 1015 I find "O. W. Illig, 25 days, at $15 a day, $375; expenses, $187."

Another one: "W. J. Sperl, 25 days, at $15 a day, $375; expenses, $185.61."

Here is another one for my friend FREAR's subcommittee: Salary, 18 days 3 hours, at $25 a day, $459.38; expenses, $512.67."

Here is another one under my friend GRAHAM's subcommittee: "Services, 4 days, $200; expenses, $193." In some of these cases I would rather be employed on the expense basis than on a salary basis.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Perhaps the expenses were incurred in the moonshine district of the gentleman's State.

Mr. KITCHIN. In Ohio?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; in the gentleman's State.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not in my State.

Another thing, and I want to ask my friend the Hon. JOSEPHUS WALSH about that. I have heard some rumors, and the gentleman can correct them. I do not understand why, with four men on the committee, when my friend WALSH went out on the Pacific coast, maybe with one or two clerks and a janitor or a porter—I guess the railroad paid the porter and the janitor—I do not understand why his railroad expenses should be $4,061, when the railroad expenses of my friend Mr. FREAR, who carried more parties to the Pacific coast and went into a larger examination, should have had railroad expenses of only $1,401. I was wondering how the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] rode and how the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] rode. Evidently one of them rode on a freight train and the other one rode on a special observation car. [Laughter.] Why such a difference in Members of Congress?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the Clerk will not read until we get some additional information.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. As I recall, when the resolution was up providing for the appointment of this select committee to investigate the War Department, the statement was made that the total expense would likely involve about $250,000. My recollection is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked why they did not ask for the full amount to be appropriated at that time, and expressed his willingness to vote for it. Now, I have forgotten just the amount of the total appropriations for the purpose, but it does not approach the amount estimated at that time, as I remember.

The gentleman asked what this fund is to be used for. I will say that $35,000 of the $77,000 is estimated for the investigation of the Ordnance and Quartermaster Departments and camps—aviation, $4,000; foreign expenditures, $13,000. Those are the large items. The gentleman complains because these items are large. In going over the matter in the committee I attempted to develop, as much as I could, that we ought to be careful in the House and not spend money uselessly. I had in mind the waste, the extravagance, of the prior House in this regard. I did not want in this Congress that we should follow in the footsteps of the previous Congress and waste the people's money as you on the other side wasted it.

For instance, formerly under the expenditures by select committees you paid out $37,000 for investigation of the antitrust act. You paid out $49,906 for investigation of the Sugar and Steel Trusts. You paid out for investigation by a Committee on Banking and Currency of the so-called money trust, every penny of which was thrown away, $61,217. You paid out in the investigation of the affairs of the District of Columbia $51,191.03. You paid out for the investigation of the F. P. Lawson leak $22,883.76. You paid out for the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation $25,000.

Do you say that you did not pay any big fees? I think no one will make that claim in view of the evidence before the Committee on Appropriations. You paid an expert accountant, J. McRea, $50 a day. You paid in the Lawson investigation to Mr. Sherman L. Whipple, counsel, $15,000 and expenses of $1,270.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman tell how much they paid Samuel Untermyer?

Mr. GOOD. I have forgotten; it is here somewhere; and I will get to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was a good, substantial amount.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; he got a substantial amount. You paid W. H. Spaulding, accountant, $13,275. You paid H. P. Willis $1,500 as an expert on rural credits. You paid Dr. Charles W. Richardson for professional services and expenses for four and a half days, at $500 a day, $2,487. You paid Samuel Untermyer for professional services, from April 12 to February, 1913, $15,000.

Well, it seems to me that you set a pretty high mark. It seems to me that as far as we know now these expenditures, involving more than $20,000,000,000 of Government contracts, have not approached anything like the extravagance of the previous investigations that never amounted to anything and which cost the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars. I hope that in its investigations the special committees of the House may keep in mind at all times the desire of Congress, so frequently expressed, that the executive departments shall maintain economy, shall be economical, and if we expect that of the various executive departments we ourselves must be economical. But I submit that in all the investigations the amount expended to date is not in excess of the amount that was anticipated that would be required to be expended at the time the resolution was passed and the amount which gentlemen on that side urged Congress to then appropriate for investigation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the question asked by the gentleman from North Carolina and for the purpose of the RECORD, because I know that he had the information before he asked the question, I desire to say that the Select Committee to Investigate the United States Shipping Board traveled to the Pacific coast and along the Pacific coast in a special car, perhaps something unheard of for a congressional committee, but it was found by myself on investigation, after outlining the itinerary of the trip and the time required to make it, that it would cost very little more to have the car where the committee could make its headquarters and on which they could and did hold some hearings, and proceed in that way.

Up to a couple of days before the committee departed on that trip it was expected that the minority members of the committee would be able to accompany the rest of the committee. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] informed me that he would be precluded from going owing to the very serious illness of his mother, which illness, I understand, still continues. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] had expected to go, but unexpectedly a matter of great importance came up within his district. He informed me that he had constituents, very important business men, here, which he felt he could not leave, and he owed them his assistance and influence in the situation that had arisen in his part of the State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. No; not until I make this statement, which may not be perfectly satisfactory to the gentleman from North Carolina——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. The gentleman and his committee ought to ride in a special car, for I think he would have more intimidation and be able to get at the truth.

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman will recall that it is no new precedent. I think the Committee on Appropriations or a select committee made a trip to a certain section of the country for this purpose. I will say that the chairman endeavored to procure minority members to go with the committee, and conferred with the minority leader, ex-Speaker CLARK. He endeavored to fill the vacancy and consulted in my presence over the telephone with two or three Members, one of which was the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE], but he was unable to go.

Now, I would state to the gentleman from North Carolina that while the expenses of the trip were somewhat more than that of the expenses of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], the committee on the investigation of the Shipping Board took its stenographer and its clerk and a statistician along with them. Also, at the request of the Shipping Board, it took one of the expert officials of the Shipping Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I want to see if I can not get an agreement on the time for the discussion of this matter. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to—how much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin want?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know how much I want.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 11 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have five minutes. I think we ought to give some time to the gentleman from Wisconsin to give him a chance.

Mr. FREAR. Certainly we are entitled to be heard after the newspapers have given attention to the chairman of this committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. And if any other of these gentlemen, members of the committee, should come in, I think they ought to have a chance to explain also.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that in the exercise of proper procedure, we could get along. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto——

Mr. FREAR. Oh, the gentleman will not gain any time in that way.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that hearings were held at various points along the Pacific coast, and it is expected that the committee will visit other sections of the country in the near future. Whether we shall go in the same manner has not yet been determined.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief statement?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to say for the benefit of every member of this committee that the people of the Pacific coast shall ever be grateful to the investigating committee headed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which came there and exposed some conditions in connection with shipbuilding in that part of the country, which exposures have resulted in grand jury indictments and which will result in other indictments. All of that inquiry money was well spent, and it is due to those who faithfully performed their contracts with the Government that all others be exposed, tried, and convicted.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. WINGO. I want some information.

Mr. WALSH. I yield for a question.

Mr. WINGO. I want to know if the gentleman's committee took advantage of the authorization of the House to employ a maritime lawyer to assist them?

Mr. WALSH. We have not as yet.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contemplate doing that?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it will be necessary.

Mr. WINGO. I had hoped that the gentleman would do so. I am not criticizing him.

Mr. WALSH. I doubt if it will be necessary. I will say that the chairman found that to make a complete audit of the books of the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation would cost between $300,000 and $400,000, and the committee decided not to undertake any such work.

While I do not desire to submit any partial report, I will state for the information of the Members of the House that the work of the committee is going along; that we found a situation in Seattle, resulting from the operations there, which I brought to the attention of the United States Attorney General and about which I and the committee felt it unwise to further interrogate witnesses, and that only recently one of the former officials of the Seattle office of the Shipping Board has been indicted by the grand jury there. I think the people may expect further indictments to follow. The United States attorney is to be congratulated upon the securing of this indictment.

Mr. Chairman, the committee investigating the Shipping Board is investigating the expenditure of a very considerable sum of money, the inception of which antedates the war by several weeks. The board was organized in January, I think, of 1917, although some of its activities began prior to that time. As far as I am personally concerned, and as far as the other members of the committee are concerned, so far as I know, this investigation is not proceeding along partisan lines, and if I have anything to do with it or any influence to wield, I shall do my best to see that it is not a partisan investigation, but is an attempt to find out how this vast sum of money has been expended, what has been done, and what has been accomplished. I am sure the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] would not expect this or any other committee to embark on an investigation of this character without at least visiting some of the scenes of activity and having some hearings in the locality where the expenditures of money were being made and the activities were carried on.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I was unfortunate in not being present to hear the suggestions made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], but I understand that he raised a question in respect to some of the expenditures that have been incurred by the investigating committee of which I am a member.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman no doubt has been misinformed. I expressly said that I knew the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] could explain and give the information which I desired.

Mr. FREAR. I am very glad to have the opportunity, but first let me say what I have to say in my own way, and then I will be very glad to answer any question.

Mr. KITCHIN. I wish to say that my desire for information was exactly like that of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations before that committee. He said then that these figures of the investigating committees have been growing so large that he was anxious to know what the committees were doing, and so forth.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, I am very familiar with what the chairman has said, and I will ask the gentleman not to interrupt me, because I have read what he said in the New York Times. What he said has been bandied about to some extent, and it struck me as being a very unfair criticism for the chairman of any committee to make regarding men who are called upon to perform these investigating duties. We were drafted by the House unanimously to conduct this investigation to ascertain where $1,000,000,000 has been expended for aircraft. We have endeavored to do this fairly, without any political bias, and we have endeavored in every way we could to ascertain the facts.

We have taken over 4,000 printed pages of testimony, most of which work has been conducted by ourselves. We were directed by the committee of fifteen to go to the Pacific coast, and we were requested both in person and by Judge Hughes's report to go to the coast and take testimony there regarding the spruce situation. For anyone at this time, a member of any committee, chairman or otherwise, to cast aspersions against the committee, as was represented by this newspaper, is not only uncalled for but it is grossly unfair. The proper course to pursue is to call the chairman or any member of a committee and find out what the expenditures are and ask explanations if desired. I did not want to serve on this committee, and I handed in my resignation to the Speaker after I had been appointed. I undertook the work finally as a matter of public duty, however, and I am ready to answer any questions either by the chairman of this committee or by the gentleman from North Carolina. If you have any questions to ask regarding the committee's expenditures, I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. KITCHIN. I just happened to notice the question which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations put in the hearings. I just casually observed it——

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman has a good casual observation.

Mr. KITCHIN. I just happened to read it, and I said to myself that I would look over these items and see what alarmed the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and with reference to the gentleman's committee I do say, on the whole, maybe every bit of it, it looks to me as if the expenses were very small as compared with the work done. But I did notice this item——

Mr. FREAR. And I will say that the investigation has cost me $100 over and above what I believed was a proper charge against the Government, but was paid for tips and other incidentals.

Mr. KITCHIN. It has been very economically done. But this item——

Mr. FREAR. I am not to blame for it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not kicking at extravagance, but some of the things I do not understand. Now, here is one of G. G. Gabrielson, 14 days and 5 hours, at $25 per day, $365; expenses, $490. I did not know how the expenses could be greater than the salary.

Mr. FREAR. I am very glad to have the gentleman ask the question, and it is a simple one to answer. Gabrielson was an expert accountant hired by the committee at $25 a day. He is now receiving $35 a day from private parties. He was recommended by the firm by which he was employed, the Scudder firm, and by Judge Hughes as being a very reputable man from a very reputable firm. That includes the expenses and transportation from New York to Seattle and Portland and back to New York and board of three weeks, including his assistant, while engaged in going over the Spruce Corporation books so as to make a report in order that we might have an intelligent understanding of what those books contained.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And if he had had to pay Washington Hotel rates, he would not have gotten through on that amount.

Mr. FREAR. Gabrielson did not even go to an expensive hotel. I held him down under a previous agreement to $5 a day and he complained, because he said it was not fair.

Mr. KITCHIN. He gets about $35 a day for expenses.

Mr. FREAR. No; $25 for services and whatever the expenses reached for himself and his assistant from New York to the coast and back.

Mr. KITCHIN. Fourteen days and $490 expenses.

Mr. FREAR. He was engaged over three weeks from the time he left New York, three or four weeks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. At 14 days and expenses, $490, it makes it about——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. This is car fare, hotel bills, everything of that kind has been charged up. He paid those himself and we reimbursed him for his bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am asking the gentleman for the information of the House——

Mr. FREAR. There is another thing I would like to have the gentleman ask about—a $2,500 item in the bill—if the gentleman will do so.

Mr. KITCHIN. I reckon that is all right; I had not seen that.

Mr. FREAR. I wanted to explain that, because it is one thing commented on in the newspapers and, I understand, by the chairman of the committee. The Sergeant at Arms turned over $2,500 to my order in order that we could pay items as they were incurred out West without sending away back here to Washington. It was his proposal. I drew a check for every dollar of that to the secretary of the committee, and I insisted that he should make an itemized report for everything in the way of expenditures. That he did; and I never handled a dollar myself. The receipts are filed with the Clerk of the House. That covered hotel bills out West, railroad fare, and incidentals.

Mr. KITCHIN. I notice the Sergeant at Arms has twice as much confidence in the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] as he had in the Hon. JOSEPHUS WALSH. [Laughter.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to be interrupted to allow a lecture by the gentleman from North Carolina on the subject of my colleague from Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any further questions? I am ready to answer them.

Mr. KITCHIN. I notice the gentlemen's traveling expenses were smaller in proportion to the distance they traveled than any other committee. How many did the gentleman take with him to the coast?

Mr. FREAR. I think there were five Members all the time, and sometimes six or seven.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the Hon. JOSEPHUS WALSH, of Massachusetts——

Mr. FREAR. I want to answer any question the gentleman wants, but not to lecture my good friend from Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any further questions?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am just comparing. Now, it cost him, with only four Members, to take the same trip, $4,061 railroad fare, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, with five Members, only $1,402. I was wondering on what kind of a train the gentleman's committee rode. Did they ride on freight cars, cattle cars, or how did they get through with such a small amount?

Mr. FREAR. At times we were riding on hand cars and at times on speeders, and sometimes we were thrown off the track, and we had some very serious accidents. However, we took whatever conveyance was available.

Mr. KITCHIN. If my friend WALSH had taken the same precautions, they would have saved a few thousand dollars.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman said that the chairman of the committee had said something——

Mr. FREAR. Let me say the chairman of the Appropriation Committee was quoted by the New York Times, which has unjustly criticized our committee from start to finish, from the time we first called Homer Cummings before us to find out why he made the false statement that this was to be a junket trip, when, in fact, it was undertaken by the direction of and on the unanimous report of the committee of 15.

We were selected by the unanimous vote of this House. We did not want the job, but that paper has persistently misrepresented us up to the present time—insisted that we acted in a partisan way. And the chairman of the Appropriation Committee furnished the ammunition which is used and which is being constantly used against the committee. We are ready to explain every dollar expended and every action taken by the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. KITCHIN. I submit the regular order is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] should take the stand. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. CONNALLY. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on this has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to make a point of order on anybody.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just reserving the right to object, I would like to have about five minutes, unless the gentleman from Iowa will retract what he said about the former investigation. I would like to have five minutes to reply to him.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Reserving the right to object, do I get five minutes of that?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I happen to be a member of the select committee appointed to investigate the operations of the Shipping Board, about which the gentleman from Massachusetts made a statement a few moments ago. He was substantially correct in the statement to the effect that I had stated to him a few days before the committee left that I should be unable to go. That statement, as I say, is substantially correct. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] was also a member of the committee, but owing to sickness in his family he could not go. I had intended to go until a few days before the committee left. I had visited the Pacific coast before, and had no desire to make the trip for purposes of pleasure. At the same time I had been appointed a member of the committee and I intended to go, until some matters came up with the departments which were of great importance to my district and which demanded immediate and constant attention.

In addition, matters of legislation were then in prospect which increased my reluctance to going.

I have no first-hand information about the expenses, but I have confidence in the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and I am sure that he, with the light then before him, did the best that he could.

There is one point, however, I desire to call to the attention of the committee, and that is the statement of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] that he already knew of great benefits that had resulted from the visit of the committee to the Pacific coast, in that it had resulted in indictments being found and prosecutions being brought about which would result in punishing some of those who had been guilty of misconduct in their dealings with the Government. I am glad, in that connection, to hear the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that this investigation is not to be partisan but that it is to be nonpartisan, nonpolitical, and a real investigation, and I join in the hope that such may be the conduct of the committee as to justly merit that characterization; and, so far as my efforts on the committee are concerned, I shall undertake to make them absolutely nonpartisan and impartial. It shall not make any difference to me who the party may be. If he is guilty, he should be punished. However, I think I detect an early divergence from that announced policy on the part of the gentleman from Washington in the statement he made a little while ago.

I happen to know, without going to the Pacific coast, without having made the trip with the committee, that long before the committee was created the Department of Justice had begun investigation of the very matter which the gentleman from Washington says has so developed as to result in indictments by the grand jury. I happen to know, without going to the Pacific coast, that the Shipping Board, through its own bureau of intelligence, before the committee was even appointed, had already laid these matters before the district attorney of that district, and that the Attorney General had, through his secret agents, already been investigating these very matters. And I deem it a rather extravagant claim on the part of the gentleman from Washington——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me finish the sentence.

I deem it a rather extravagant claim on the part of the gentleman from Washington to affirm that the visit of this committee to the Pacific coast had resulted in these indictments, because it should be known that the Department of Justice, in pursuance of investigations which it had instituted long before, has secured the indictment of this Capt. Blaine, to which reference was made by the gentleman from Washington.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that what he has said is true, with this exception, that the Attorney General had completed his investigation, that the secret service of the Shipping Board had stopped its operations on these lines, and it was only when additional information was furnished that they sent their agents, and recalled some agents who had been in the field to undertake operations there.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will state in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I thank him for his partial confirmation of what I have said, but I happen to have had opportunity to confer with the Shipping Board and with the individual officials who conducted these investigations, and I happen to know that concurrently with the efforts of the gentlemen on the Pacific coast these investigations were still being carried on, and that it was my advice that a great deal of the information which the committee is in some quarters credited with having laid before the Department of Justice was, in fact, received by the committee before its departure from the secret-service agents of the Shipping Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in agreeing to the 10 minutes, I thought the gentleman understood the gentleman was to have 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 2 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I misunderstood then.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought the understanding was that I was to have five minutes, but I will take what I can get and am very thankful for it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I agree to the request, then, because I had promised the gentleman from North Carolina five minutes, and I would like to comply with my promise.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield the gentleman four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is as generous as I could expect from the chairman of this committee. [Laughter.] The gentleman was explaining the extravagance of these so-called investigating committees. I did not say they were extravagant, but the gentleman from Iowa was the first to intimate that they were extravagant, and I have simply asked for an explanation.

He said the Democrats had expended an extravagant sum of money on the Money Trust investigation, which he says amounted to nothing, and had paid so much money to a lawyer, and so much money to this man, and to that man, and the other man.

Why, gentlemen, that Money Trust investigation was worth hundreds of millions of dollars to the American people. That Money Trust investigation resulted in the change of our financial system. It resulted in the passage of the Federal reserve act and the rural credits act. It divulged the fact that one firm in the United States controlled a whole banking system in the United States. It could make or prevent panics at its will. Commerce and business of the entire country were subject to its will. It controlled, through its banks and interlocking directorates, more than two-thirds of the voting stock of the railroads of this country.. [Applause.]

That investigation caused the American people and the Congress to take the control of the banking system, the control of expansion and contraction of money and credit out of the hands of that firm and the Wall Street banks and put it in the control of the Government. It was said that Mr. Whipple, employed as attorney with the so-called leak investigating committee, got $15,000. Who caused that leak investigation? The Republicans in that Congress. Who fixed the amount of that fee? The Democrats asked the Republicans on the committee to fix it at what was right, and the Republicans, with Mr. LENROOT at their head, fixed it at $15,000. All agreed that that was fair and just. I think Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas was on that committee, and he agreed that it was right. That committee had only one attorney.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What do they pay?

Mr. KITCHIN. They have got an attorney not only for the general committee but for all except a few of the subcommittees. They have one man as attorney, Gen. Ansell, employed by Mr. Graham's committee, at the rate of $20,000 or $25,000 a year. They have another subcommittee of this war investigating committee which has a lawyer at about $1,200 or $1,500 a month. Each of these lawyers has a clerk and a secretary whom we are paying. Democrats never did this.

Mr. FREAR. Does the gentleman say my committee was employing Mr. Ansell as an attorney who receives $20,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; yours has not, and Mr. WALSH's has not. When we investigated a real matter that interested the whole country we made better bargains than these committees have made. You will find that in these investigating committees under Democratic Congresses we employed the Scudders, and we paid them $25 a day. But these committees pay them $50 a day.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry I have not the time to yield.

Mr. FREAR. Judge Hughes requested us to employ that firm.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Democrats used them. They did such good work for the Democrats in their investigations that the Republicans took them and paid them 100 per cent more than we paid.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says we expended a vast sum of money in these investigations. He said no Republican questioned the expenditures at the time. No man could question them, because we had nonpartisan investigations, both Republicans and Democrats being on those investigating committees, and the Republicans indorsed every one of the items and came in here and said they were right. Not a Democrat and not a Republican questioned it. Not a man in the country questioned it, because every one knew they were economical expenditures, and they knew that the investigations were necessary. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery for officers and committees of the House on account of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, $6,387.95.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 37, after line 21, insert the following:

"For an assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations at the rate of $3,000 per annum from February 16 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $1,125."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations has one clerk and three assistants. One of these assistants has resigned, a very able clerk. The clerk of the committee is a very able clerk.

I want to say to the House, that this committee, reporting bills carrying many hundreds of millions of dollars—I might say billions—for the consideration of the House, requires much of investigation. In addition to that there is a deficiency bill. This is the second one we are considering now at this session, and we shall have to consider a third one. They require an examination of all the bills of all the committees that report appropriation bills.

I became a member of the Committee on Appropriations in 1878. There was a boy brought up from Tennessee by the name of James C. Courts. John D. C. Atkins was the chairman of the committee. At that time the committee had all the bills making appropriations for the Government service. It never had but one clerk previously. His health failed. At the end of the first Congress in which I served on this committee this young man from Tennessee became the clerk of that committee, and in all the decades that passed from that time up to the time of his death there was no man who ever occupied such a position, so far as I know and can ascertain, who was so well equipped from the standpoint of all legislation requiring experience as James C. Courts.

One night—or rather one morning—just before the adjournment of a short session, with the sundry civil bill undisposed of, a gentleman now dead, Mr. DeArmond, from Missouri, when I offered a conference report on the sundry civil bill, and the Congress was to expire on the 4th day of March, asked for an hour. I said, "I hope not; I can not assent." "Ah," said Mr. DeArmond, "the gentleman has no quorum here. I demand it." Very well. He took his hour, and he ran amuck. Except the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], I think there never was a man so able with his tongue as DeArmond was. It was like a knife and a dagger. He wound up by making a little attack in two sentences upon myself as chairman of that great committee to the effect that "the clerk had made the reputation of every chairman of that committee, including the then present chairman." I had to extend more time to him, but finally he sat down, and I said, "Yes; that is true about the clerk and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I wish to God that somebody would get a competent clerk for the gentleman from Missouri." That closed the debate, and in two minutes the conference report was agreed to, and at 12 o'clock noon—by this time it had gotten to be 6 in the morning—the last bill was passed. Mr. Courts has crossed over, but I want to say that I am satisfied that James C. Courts shortened his life by a decade or longer by his great, strenuous, and valuable work.

I want to make another statement. When I was Speaker of this House for eight years there stood at my right hand another man, Mr. Asher Hinds, author of the eight great volumes of Hinds' Precedents. I believe he shortened his life, by a decade or more, by the compilation of those Precedents and the assistance that he gave to the Speaker, who frequently needed help during those eight years.

Now, as a successor to Mr. Courts as clerk of the Committee on Appropriations we have the present clerk, Mr. Marcellus C. Sheild. I think he is quite the equal of James C. Courts. Time and again I have noticed that Members on both sides of the House, when they want something quick, go in to see Mr. Sheild, as they used to go in to see Mr. Courts, because the information is furnished them promptly. I think Mr. Sheild is fully Mr. Courts's equal in his familiarity with appropriations, in his courtesy, and in his usefulness to the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HICKS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that the clerk and assistant clerks of the committee, which sometimes has three or more subcommittees sitting, work most nights and most Sundays. The health of the present clerk is threatened. The first assistant has resigned. He hopes he can do better in his profession.

I offer this amendment now, because I believe it will bring a man as an assistant clerk at $3,000 a year who will be fairly well equipped touching the public service. I believe this assistant is needed. The expense is negligible when compared with the magnitude of the appropriations which are handled. I offer this amendment, and I trust the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I reserved the point of order, and the item is certainly subject to it; but is it the judgment of the chairman of this committee that this additional clerk is necessary in order to carry on efficiently the work of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. I felt a good deal as the former chairman of the committee did. I had hoped that the work of the committee would let up. This matter was presented to Mr. Sherley a year ago by some of the clerks of the committee. They thought they were working beyond their strength. Mr. Sherley felt that perhaps after the signing of the armistice the work would decrease. Instead of that the work has increased. The clerks have never complained, but just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has explained to the House, these clerks work overtime. They work all day and they work into the night. They are compelled to work practically every Sunday. They feel they ought to have some additional help, and while I have hesitated to ask for an additional clerk, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has stated the facts.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We are all for this.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the statements made by the chairman of the committee and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has well said, there has never been any question of politics or partisanship in the selection of the clerks to the Committee on Appropriations. As has been stated, for many years, beginning under a Democratic chairman and continuing under Republican chairmen, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] being one of them, a gentleman from Tennessee—Mr. James C. Courts—served as clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. At his death Mr. Fitzgerald, who was then chairman of the committee, appointed the present clerk, Mr. Sheild, and I very earnestly indorse all the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said concerning him. He is as well qualified as was Mr. Courts for the difficult and responsible duties of his position, and that is paying him a very high compliment, for Mr. Courts was recognized by everybody as an authority on appropriations. When Mr. Sherley came in as chairman of the committee, succeeding Mr. Fitzgerald, he retained the personnel of the committee force. When Mr. Sherley retired and Mr. Good became chairman, without inquiry as to the politics of the various clerks to the committee, he retained the force as he found it. The Committee on Appropriations, as every member of the committee knows, has a most competent force. There is not, in my judgment, a man in the city of Washington who has more general information as to the appropriations of this Government than the present clerk of the committee, Mr. Sheild.

Nor is there a man who is more useful to the Congress than Mr. Sheild in his present position. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said, he works not only in the daytime but he works at night in the performance of these duties, and is wearing himself out at it. The committee is divided into some five or six subcommittees. Two of these subcommittees, as a rule, are running all the time. It is necessary to have clerks attending upon these subcommittees. The hearings of the committee have increased in volume 200 or 300 per cent over what they were before the war came on. As you know, the appropriations have increased enormously. All of this has resulted in greatly increased work. Notwithstanding that fact, there has been no increase in the force of the Committee on Appropriations since the year 1913. In justice to these gentlemen who are so faithfully performing this service and in justice to the Congress itself, which must depend largely upon these clerks in the matter of information and the many details connected with these appropriations, I hope this amendment will be adopted without question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Holidays: To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting holidays and the Executive order granting half holidays with pay to the employees of the Government Printing Office, $70,108.81.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Is this amount appropriated here rendered necessary by any recent legislation?

Mr. GOOD. This is to provide the pay for the present force. Under the law the Public Printer is authorized to pay the employees for holidays just as though they were at work on a regular work day.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is this legislation that has been enacted since the general appropriation bill was passed?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How does it come to be a deficiency? In other words, why was it not provided for?

Mr. GOOD. The exact amount of the estimate was appropriated for this item. The force has increased somewhat, and my recollection is that there have been some holidays and half holidays given since then.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. GOOD. The amount necessary to take care of January 1, February 22, May 30, and two half holidays in June totals $92,000. The estimate provides also for one contingent holiday of $23,000.

That is the statement of Mr. Ford before the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is meant by a "contingent holiday"?

Mr. GOOD. We asked that question and Mr. Ford said:

We do not know and we do not include it in our regular estimate, but always provide for it in the deficiency estimate. This year we have already had one contingent holiday—Pershing day. If an Executive order is issued declaring a holiday we have to close down, and that is the reason we put in the deficiency estimate for one contingent holiday. If there should be none the amount would revert to the Treasury.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MADDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2690. An act authorizing the appointment of a minister to Finland;

S. 620. An act authorizing the issuance of patent to the Pioneer Educational Society and its successor for certain lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington;

S. 730. An act to amend chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891;

S. 2962. An act for the relief of Nick Sitch and Billie H. Evashanks;

S. 604. An act for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler;

S. 3138. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands for stockyards, and for other purposes, at Browning Station, in the State of Montana;

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution to permit of the disposition of certain lands in Montana ceded by the Crow Indians;

S. 3610. An act for the relief of William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the United States Army;

S. 2956. An act to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes and to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries;

S. 3406. An act for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium;

S. 907. An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring;

S. 20. An act to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana;

S. 3750. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918, and for other purposes;

S. 2442. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church by patent in fee certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation;

S. 2786. An act authorizing the sale of lands in Gregory County, S. Dak.;

S. 3682. An act to regulate the filling of vacancies in the corps of cadets in the United States Military Academy not otherwise provided for by existing law, and for other purposes; and

S. 3683. An act to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes";

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1812. An act making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States;

H. R. 2950. An act to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes;

H. R. 348. An act to add certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.;

H. R. 8028. An act to add to the Oregon, Siuslaw, and Crater National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8598. An act restoring to Amy E. Hall her homestead rights and providing that on any homestead entry made by her she shall be given credit for all compliance with the law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made on same; and

H. R. 1761. An act for the relief of the Farmers' National Bank of Wilkinson, Ind.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 400. An act authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The printing and binding for the Post Office Department, exclusive of the money-order office, $150,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General is authorized hereafter to have executed in the field offices of the Postal Service or in private establishments such printing for the Postal Service as in his judgment can be more economically done there than at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the situation with regard to the printing in the Post Office Department is this: Under the law now the postmaster at Seattle, Wash., where they may have a paper mill and a big printing establishment, where he could have the work done cheaply, is obliged to have it done by the Public Printer in Washington, who has to buy the paper, ship it here, and ship the printing back there. They can not have any public printing done in that locality. The result has been that the Post Office authorities came before us and said that a large part of their estimate is because of the present requirement of the law that compels them to have the public printing done in the Government Printing Office. Take the Postal Guide, for instance. The Post Office Department asked for bids on that. A printer in Albany, N. Y., bid for the complete guide in cloth $22,900. The Public Printer charged $40,000. If the gentleman will take the hearings, page 420, he will find that in all or nearly all of the statements there it costs about 25 per cent more to get the work done in the Government Printing Office than it would cost by private contract. This provision merely provides that the Post Office Department may submit for competitive bids and let it to the lowest bidder. That is in effect what the provision is. That ought to be the law. If that were the law, it would not only bring efficiency to the Government Printing Office, where there is now not the semblance of efficiency, but it would permit the Government to have the work done where it could get it done the cheapest. I submit that the Government ought to be permitted to do that thing. I realize that it is a change in existing law.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. Were there submitted to the Committee on Appropriations about how much it would save the Government if this proviso was inserted in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. In this specific item that we have carried here, the $150,000, the Post Office Department makes the claim that if we do not carry this legislation we must increase it by $50,000. We decreased the amount by $50,000 because the Post Office Department said that if they were permitted to do this they could decrease the expenditure by that amount. The gentleman from New York asked about other departments—not all of the other departments were before us for deficiencies.

The matter came up after we heard some of them and did not know that there was any such claim made, but the general impression is from the officials who expend money for public printing that if they had this right they would save a great deal of money. The Post Office Department and the Treasury Department both claim that if they could have their printing and binding done by contract, let it to the lowest bidder, they would save a great deal of their appropriation. How much they would save in the whole service I do not know, but I believe it would run into a great many thousand dollars, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not make the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have read the hearings and listened to the claims made by the gentleman from Iowa. I doubt if we should single out the Postmaster General for this purpose. The gentleman referred to the Postal Guide. I think that is published under a specific provision of law in the legislative bill.

Mr. GOOD. They all have to go to the Government Printing Office under the law.

Mr. WALSH. I think not. I think the legislative bill or the sundry civil bill gives them authority to have the Postal Guide printed outside of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GOOD. That has been superseded by an act which compels the printing of the Postal Guide and all other Government publications to be done in the Government Printing Office. I am sure that if the gentleman will go into any department of the Government to-day and talk with the officers that have to do with letting of printing he will be convinced that there must be some change in this respect.

Mr. WALSH. I am convinced of that; we ought to have less printing done; but this allows them to go out into the open market wherever they think they can get their printing more economically done.

Mr. GOOD. It will still have to be done by contract.

Mr. WALSH. This does not say that it will be done by contract. He just ascertains that it will be more economical to do this in private establishments than in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will allow us to make this experiment.

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to permit the Post Office Department to embark upon any such experiment. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Treasury Department, $25,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice on this page that there are many large amounts appropriated for the various departments under the head of deficiencies. These departments heretofore under the appropriate bills have already received appropriations deemed to be sufficient. Is it impossible for a department to live within its appropriation? Here is $1,000,000 for public printing and public binding, and paper, in addition to what this bureau has already received under the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1920. Below that are various appropriations for other departments. I am interested to ascertain why it is that the functionaries of these departments can not submit to the committee on appropriations when the regular bills are under consideration reasonable estimates of what the expenditures are likely to be, so that it will not be necessary in all of these cases to follow up the regular appropriation with a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in this particular instance, as I recall the explanation, it was that the Public Health Service was having a great deal more printing done, and also the claim is made that there has been great increase of cost in the printing.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Increased cost since the sundry civil appropriation act was passed?

Mr. GOOD. They asked for $100,000, and we have given them only $25,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wonder that they did not ask for $200,000. Have these increases, these decided increases, in the cost of printing occurred since the last sundry civil appropriation act was passed?

Mr. GOOD. They claim there has been quite a considerable increase, especially in the cost of printing, since the last sundry civil appropriation act.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And has there not been an increase in wages, too?

Mr. GOOD. I am not sure whether that has occurred since the passage of the last sundry civil appropriation act or not.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. By reason of the act of Congress, the testimony of the Public Printer was that there has been an increase in the cost of labor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I would ask the chairman of the committee in regard to this item of $1,000,000 for printing, whether there are in that any holdovers from the Bulletin of Information that was published at No. 10 Jackson Place?

Mr. GOOD. No; there is nothing of that kind in this item.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the judgments contained herein shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I do not know that I quite understand how these items specified at the bottom of the page as judgments of the Court of Claims can be deficiencies, when none of them becomes available until after the right of appeal has expired. How can they be considered deficiencies?

Mr. GOOD. Without looking at any of these particular judgments, I think none of them is certified to the committee until after the right of appeal has expired. The rights of appeal are expiring every day.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me on the face of things that they can not be deficiencies until the right of appeal has expired. This provision applies to all of these judgments, and one can not tell from reading the bill whether the right of appeal has expired. If it has expired, then there is no use of putting the provision in.

Mr. GOOD. The committee had before it the date when they would be payable, if not appealed. For example, I know there was one judgment of about a thousand and ninety-six dollars on which the right of appeal will expire on the 8th of February. The department assures itself that the right of appeal will not be exercised before they certify the judgment. These are judgments that the department knows will not be appealed, because the attorneys have assured them that they would accept the award.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has this provision been carried in deficiency appropriation bills heretofore?

Mr. GOOD. It has been carried right along.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Do any of these judgments carry the payment of interest?

Mr. GOOD. All judgments of the United States courts carry an interest payment of 4 per cent, as I recollect, after the date of its judgment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All claims against the United States are recovered by judgment obtained in a court of the United States?

Mr. GOOD. I am not sure about the Court of Claims.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All judgments obtained against the United States in a court of the United States other than the Court of Claims carry an interest rate of 4 per cent?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. From the date of the recovery of the judgment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; so that it is important that the Government pay the judgment and not let it drag.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting the revenue from customs, $1.10.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, what sort of claims are these? Some of these seem to be very trifling in amount. How are these claims established? I see here, for instance, a claim for $1.10.

Mr. GOOD. Most of them are claims where they are certified by the auditor and the appropriation has expired and it has been covered back into the Treasury under the covering-in act.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For instance, what sort of a claim would it be for collecting the revenues from customs, $1.10?

Mr. GOOD. That likely is a refund to some one where the collection was made more than three years before there was a demand for its return.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Where the Government collected from the individual, in excess of what it should have collected, $1.10?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. When an application for its return is made within three years from the time the collection is made, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to return it.

For payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers, $25,665.15.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not pass by the item under lines 23 and 24. I will give the chairman my reason for making that request: There is now on the way from the Treasury Department a letter from Commissioner Roper addressed to the chairman of the committee relating to a claim that should have been long ago paid, a judgment against certain officers of the United States. There is no question about this liability. The claim was inadvertently omitted from the document which covered cases of this character. The letter will be here, I imagine, within five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. These are audited claims we are reading.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, this is an audited claim of which I speak. It was negligence on the part of the Treasury Department that it was not presented to the chairman of the committee when he was making up this bill.

Mr. GOOD. Which item is that?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The one relating to payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the item referred to in lines 23 and 24, page 40, be passed over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that lines 23 and 24, on page 40, be passed over temporarily to be returned to later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance or drawback, $1,787.12.

Mr. WALSH. The language of line 25 in the copy I have reads, "For allowance or drawback." It was read by the Clerk "allowance of drawback." I would like to ascertain what the language was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the language referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance or drawback, $1,787.12.
For surveying the public lands, $9.49.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an item for surveying the public lands, $9.49. I would like to ask the chairman if these are lands we are going to give our returned soldiers——

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. BLANTON. For their service in France?

Mr. GOOD. No; these are some lands in Texas which we would not inflict on the soldiers.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are lands in Texas, it would take more than that to survey a half an acre, because of their value.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and transportation of Indian supplies, 1918, $8,557.12.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice a deficiency item here for the support of Indian schools of 1 cent. I want to know if that is about the amount of money that has been given for the support of the Washington schools here in the District of Columbia? I understand from one of the teachers of the Central High School that on yesterday there were 15 large classes of students, young men and young women, boys and girls, going to that school—15 large classes organized without a single teacher to teach them, because of the fact that there was not money to employ them. Now, that is an awful condition to exist here in the District of Columbia. We have been starving our teachers too long. There was a provision in this bill to meet the emergency, but the most of it was stricken out. Has the chairman explained the situation to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], who, on a point of order, caused that appropriation to be stricken out, because I believe if the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, who is a man of the best judgment in this House, had understood the exact situation with respect to the schools in the District of Columbia at this time, that rather than have stricken out the item he would have been in favor of doubling every dollar of it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have no objection to its being returned to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the chairman of the committee by appropriate amendment ask that that item be put back in the bill, because as a matter of fact in the various high schools of this District to-day, in every single school building, there are several large classes of boys and girls who are wholly without teachers because of the want of funds, and I am sure it is of sufficient importance for the chairman to put those items back in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. There is an understanding we will return to that item.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am very glad of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

For International Radiotelegraphic Convention, 1918–19, $275.24.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question if the gentleman from Virginia will permit. What was this radiotelegraphic convention? What had our Government to do with it?

Mr. GOOD. What is the item?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The item is for International Radio-Telegraphic Convention, 1918–19, $275.24.

Mr. GOOD. So far as these audited claims are concerned, it has not been the practice of the committee to conduct hearings further than to find that they had been audited in accordance with the law, and I can not give the gentleman any further information than he finds here. There has been appropriation made in the past for this convention, but I presume it is a claim that grew out of the convention, and has been audited in accordance with the law. We only inquire into the question as to whether or not the claims fall within the class and have been properly audited and found to be all right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then this claim was audited and allowed?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to ask the chairman if this item is authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. It is.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they are deficiencies, because there is no appropriation out of which to pay them.

Mr. BLANTON. How is there a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. It has been audited since the sundry civil bill passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it an item of new legislation?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. BLANTON. When was this radiotelegraphic convention authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. I will give the gentleman the law in regard to audited claims. Just when this claim originated I can not say.

Mr. BLANTON. When was the payment of $275.24 for an international radiotelegraphic convention, to be held in 1918–19, authorized by law?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is mistaken. This is not a convention held. Here is the situation——

Mr. BLANTON. That is what it stated in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All these claims are certified by the auditor as correct, and payable, and authorized by law. That is all we have to concern ourselves with.

Mr. BLANTON. In the short time I have been in Congress I know of no such authorization by Congress to hold this kind of convention. When was it authorized?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My recollection is that there was an authorization and an appropriation, but I am not able to tell the gentleman when and where. But it could not be audited unless the auditor found there was an authorization of law for it, and, ordinarily, unless there had been an appropriation for it. Whether the auditor made an incorrect finding, I have no way of knowing; but that is the finding.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if this is just a way around exceeding the appropriations? Now, I happen to be on the committee that went through a very strenuous struggle on some of these items, and we cut some of them down materially, and I beg to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to his statement that these are all authorized by law before the auditor could audit them. I do not believe there is any law to provide for contingent expenses to foreign missions.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BEGG. And for half of these other things, if the gentleman will permit me, there is not any basic law, and it is simply a custom that has been allowed to grow up in these departments whereby they can spend any amount of money they want to, after the committee has gone carefully into the situation and then has seen fit to give them less than they asked for. They get around the bush in some other way and get it audited and present the claim as an audited claim, without any facts to warrant it.

And I want again, if I may, to call the attention of the committee to the antideficiency law, which provides specific methods whereby they can exceed their appropriation. And it does seem to me—and I am in sympathy with the chairman of the committee in all that he is asking for, and am willing to go with him all the way—we are forgiving each time the violation of the law, not only in spirit but in actual expenditure, by permitting them to come up and ask for money before they actually commit the violation of the law, and we give it to them. I can not see any excuse for one-half of the items on pages 45 and 46, so far as they are being deficiencies are concerned. And I can see no excuse for their happening in the future. I will be glad if the gentleman from Illinois will tell me where the law is that authorizes contingent expenses and post allowances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there are two kinds of claims which may properly be audited where Congress has made an appropriation for a specific purpose. Claims arising under that are properly audited, although it frequently happens that the money is not available, because it may have been covered into the Treasury before the amount is payable. In another class of cases is authority of law to do a particular thing, whether an appropriation is specifically made or not. But the auditor can not audit any of these claims unless he finds there is authority of law for incurring the claim.

Now, I have not examined into all the audited claims in this bill, but I have examined a great many in the course of my experience in this House, sometimes suspecting, like the gentleman who just addressed the House, that a claim had been audited without authority of law in order to beat the devil around the stump; and I never was able to find one, and if the distinguished gentleman is able to find one he will put quite a feather in his hat. And I suggest to him that he can not do a better thing than take up the lot of claims he refers to here and go and examine the audit and find out whether there was actually authority of law or not, because, if there was not, the auditor ought to be removed from office and would be subject to impeachment. He can not audit a claim simply because he thinks it ought to be paid. He has to audit a claim because there is an authorization of law to incur the claim. There can be no such authorization of law unless there is some specific law giving the authority or an appropriation authorizing its expenditure.

Mr. BEGG. The point I wanted to call to the gentleman's attention is this: I will agree that the claim is a bona fide claim and the auditor is excused——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bona fides of the claim has nothing to do with it. That is what the auditor is for—not to examine the bona fides of the claim, but to ascertain whether it is authorized by law.

Mr. BEGG. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that in these post allowances and these contingent expenses there is no basic law on the statute books of the United States further than the temporary provision which made available the sum of money for doing that specific work, and whoever contracts to do work beyond that appropriation is technically, if not actually, a law violator.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BEGG. May I proceed for two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the circumstances named by the gentleman the claim would not be audited.

Mr. BEGG. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that thing is being done every day. It is being done not only in one department but in all the departments, and they do not undertake to deny it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will undertake, if the gentleman will give me a specific case, to investigate it myself.

Mr. BEGG. I will ask the gentleman to go and investigate and see if they have not exceeded their appropriation in these very bills that they bring up here and ask for a deficiency on, every one of them. There is not any way of getting around it. The testimony of the State Department before the Committee on Foreign Affairs was to the effect that they wanted this lump sum contingent, and this credit that was to be apportioned to the Secretary of State by the President of the United States according to his wishes and whims, to take care, as they said, of the differences in living conditions, and the very fact that they are brought in as audited claims must be proof either that they are not in existence or else they have been actually expended. Now, if they are not in existence they ought not to be here. I do not criticize the chairman of this committee or say that he is wrong in bringing in a deficiency that does not exist; but when the Committee on Foreign Affairs has cut them down and has said, "You must live within the appropriations," are they to be allowed to go along and spend the money regardless of the limit set and come back here for a deficiency? We have cut off, for example, $300,000 from one item and two or three hundred thousand on another item.

It seems to me that this Congress ought to get down and make good its statements to the public to the effect that it is trying to economize. I want to say to you that I do not believe in carrying on these expenses as they have been going on in the war, and I am not in sympathy with the payment of these bills if they are illegally contracted, and I am in favor of making the man that contracted for them come along and pay it out of his own salary.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman complains about the items on page 46 for post allowances to diplomatic and consular officers, $248.89?

Mr. BEGG. Yes. That is only one of many.

Mr. GOOD. That was an appropriation for 1917. By its very terms the balances were covered into the Treasury on June 30, 1919, and then this claim comes before the auditor after that date, and there is no way except to follow the provisions of the law and to audit the claim and send it to Congress. That is what has been done, so far as this claim is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a question. Are we sliding back into the bad old system of allowing these heads of departments to exceed the appropriations or not?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, they have been exceeding the appropriations. That is the reason for deficiencies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When was that law repealed by which we made it a criminal offense for one of them to exceed the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. It has not been repealed. It is on the statute books still, but nobody has gone to jail. They have been violating the law just the same.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do they not enforce the law?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know. I am not in charge of any executive department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman has been here a long time, and he and others are always talking about the extravagance of Congress. The truth is it is the extravagance of the executive departments. We warned them time after time to stop it, and they did not heed the warning, and finally we made it a criminal offense for them to exceed the appropriations; and yet they are going on just as before.

Mr. GOOD. We also provided that the person violating the law should be discharged, but nobody has been discharged and nobody has been sent to jail. Then the question is, Shall Congress refuse to make an appropriation to cover the balances so that the service may continue even though the appropriation falls into the hands of the person who has violated the law?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If they practice that kind of a caper, what was the sense of putting that statute on the statute books, forbidding them to do it and making it a criminal offense?

Mr. GOOD. That statute was put on the books so that the head of a department can lodge a complaint against the man who violates the law. Congress can not discharge a man. The head of an executive department can, when the man violates the law, and he can lodge a complaint against the man with the Attorney General.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman and others state that the department violates a statute which prohibits any of them from incurring a deficiency. Why does not somebody state which one? In my short experience I do not know one who has been named as having actually violated the statute. If they have, why not say so? Why not let us say in the RECORD who did it? The hearings up to this time at which I have been present fail to show who did it. Time and time again chairmen of the Appropriations Committee, for the purpose of holding them down, have delivered lectures on the subject, and very good ones, too, but I do not now recall a single instance where an executive officer has done that.

Mr. GOOD. There are quite a number of instances that were called to the attention of the executive departments in these hearings. The printed hearings will show that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not think the gentleman will find it in the hearings. I should like to be shown.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. During the war at least two chairmen of the Appropriations Committee were confronted by emergencies where appropriations of money were absolutely necessary. They said, "Well, now, we can not pass this at once. We will say to you that you will be cared for by a report of the committee on the proper bill, for the action of the House, and we have no doubt that the appropriation will be made." I never said it myself, because I was not the chairman of the committee, but I agreed to it in my heart, and we agreed to care for them in that way for that purpose. There is a maxim, "Inter arma leges silens"—In time of war the laws are silent. Well, that is not universally true by any manner of means, yet in point of fact I have no doubt that in many instances during the war the laws were silent, and had to be under the conditions that existed.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. When an annual appropriation is made, and that appropriation has been exhausted, it is illegal for any auditor to certify a claim to Congress. If, on the other hand, the appropriation was not exhausted, $1,000 for instance remaining, and that $1,000 was covered into the surplus fund or to miscellaneous receipts at the end of the second year after the one for which the appropriation was made, then an auditor might state an account within the limit of that $1,000 as a legal claim against the Government, but he could not go beyond the $1,000. Moreover, if a statutory salary is fixed at $2,000, and Congress fails to make the appropriation for the payment of that salary, an auditor may state an account to the Congress for an appropriation to pay that as a legal claim. So far as the annual appropriations are concerned an auditor has no authority under the law to state an account under any circumstances. But again, take these refunds of customs and internal-revenue taxes. In normal times prior to the war we were paying refunds of customs and internal-revenue taxes running from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year, where taxes were collected in excess of the legal amounts. There are permanent indefinite appropriations for the payment of those refunds, and a case of that character should not appear here. It should be paid out of the permanent indefinite appropriation provided for in the permanent statute.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. In a moment. If, however, one of those refund cases has gone to court, and the court has allowed costs and interest in addition to the amount of the tax collected in excess, you will have the claim plus cost plus interest, with no appropriation for costs or interest. That claim when audited should be sent here for an appropriation.

Now, in the main any auditor who certifies claims under any other conditions will be laying himself liable to the penalties of the law that have just been specified. Many times the executive departments will come and ask auditors to state claims in excess of the appropriations. That is not an uncommon thing. It is an easy way to evade responsibility. Why? Because an executive office does not, as a rule, desire to come before the Appropriations Committee and tell why the deficiency arose. They can find a way through much more easily, if they can persuade an auditor to certify a claim and present that to the committee. That battle was fought over for years in the Treasury Department, and in the course of that contest we established this rule, that whenever an executive office exceeded or had reached the limit of the appropriation and found it necessary to incur a liability beyond that limit, it should come to Congress with an estimate of an appropriation to be made.

There are other cases that might be cited, but I will not take more time now, and I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], if I have any time left.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not quite understand yet how the auditor was justified in allowing some of these items—one item of over $100,000. The gentleman spoke of his right to allow a claim not in excess of $1,000.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Suppose, as an illustration, there is an annual appropriation of $12,000 for a specific purpose and $11,000 has been drawn out and paid. One thousand dollars remains. The claim, say a year or two after the fiscal year for which the appropriation was available, comes along for $800, and the thousand dollars has been covered back as miscellaneous receipts. The claim for $800, if created within the year for which the appropriation was available, may be stated, and the certificate should come to Congress for a reappropriation of the $800 of the $1,000 in excess.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It would seem from what the gentleman from Nebraska says that this is a complicated subject, and if all he has said is correct—and I have no doubt that it is, because he has had long experience as an auditor—these items ought not to be passed by the Appropriations Committee on the mere certificate of the auditor. It is apparent, as I understand the situation, that the certificate of the auditor is sometimes used, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, to whip the devil around the stump in order that the congressional committees who make the appropriations will not too closely examine into the cause of the deficiency; if they did, they might not allow the appropriation. So it seems that when we have items aggregating over $150,000 we ought not to pass them merely on the certificate of the auditor.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Take the question of the refund of internal-revenue taxes. Suppose a million dollars had been paid in internal-revenue taxes, and suppose the ruling of the commissioner had changed the original finding and that $500,000 had been collected in excess. If that question were determined in court and the costs and interest had been rendered in the judgment along with the claim for a refund of $500,000, under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury the payment of $500,000 plus costs and plus interest would come here for appropriation to pay.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that quite well; but what the Appropriations Committee should do is to find out whether these large items are one of those cases so that they may know whether the item ought to be audited.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. At that point it would be wise to call in the auditors whose certificates are here and ask them those questions, and thus verify the record.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think so; otherwise it is quite likely that large sums will be devoted to purposes which Congress does not approve.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recapitulation of claims allowed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in page 50, line 13, the words "recapitulation of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 13, strike out the words "recapitulation of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, we have passed over a few items. The first is on page 3, lines 8 to 11, and I will ask to return to that item.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Night schools: For teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $25,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the point of order is withdrawn. Now I ask unanimous consent to return to the first item on page 3, line 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two principals of junior high schools, at $2,500 each.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert "two principals of junior high schools at $2,500 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 3, line 2, insert "two principals of junior high schools at $2,500 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. The next item is on page 11, commencing at line 13. My recollection is that the proviso went out on a point of order and it was unanimously agreed that it could be returned to with the point of order still pending, as if no action had been taken on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that the proviso is not offered.

Mr. GOOD. The first part went out. The whole thing is offered.

Mr. BLANTON. It all went out.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. If part of it is subject to a point of order, all of it would be.

Mr. BLACK. The RECORD will show that the gentleman from Texas agreed to reserve his point of order to the whole paragraph. Whether or not he still makes it remains to be seen.

Mr. GOOD. The whole paragraph should be read, with the point of order of the gentleman from Texas reserved.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph was read before I reserved the point of order. I now withdraw the point of order, and it is useless to reread it, unless somebody wants to renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the next item is on page 18.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When they read one of these paragraphs that have been passed do they not have to vote upon it before it goes into the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. But this particular paragraph never went out.

The CHAIRMAN. It had gone out, but was restored at the time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 13 and move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question. On page 13, in the enumeration of hospitals, $500,000 is appropriated for certain hospitals—I think 14. Does that carry the idea that all other hospitals in the country for the care of soldiers are properly equipped and that no repairs will be necessary?

Mr. GOOD. These are the only ones they could enumerate that have been taken over from the War Department on which they expected to expend money.

Mr. MILLER. I notice half of this appropriation goes to three States—Maryland, Montana, and Idaho.

Mr. GOOD. The committee had nothing to do with that. The Public Health Service said they needed these temporary hospitals and needed the equipment, and we gave them all that they asked for these particular hospitals.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will withhold that for a moment, I have only one item more and then we will rise.

Mr. BLANTON. We have been working here a good long time and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members present, a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask now unanimous consent to return to page 18, line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, this, I understand, was passed with unanimous consent to be returned to.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] desires to offer an amendment. He does not happen to be on the floor at this time. If it would be agreeable to the chairman, I would like to have this item passed until he can be present.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent was given at the time to return to this item.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have looked into the matter and I do not believe it would be wise to change the wording here. If this were a new matter we might use different words, but these words have been used during all of the years and the appropriation has been carried in that form. The records have been published under these names, and I think I would not care to wait to have the gentleman here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I happen to know that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] had some telephonic communication with the Navy Department. I do not know what the facts are. It will not take over 10 minutes to dispose of this proposition when we get to it, and the bill will have to be passed over to-night on account of the navy-yard amendment. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Texas is not in the Chamber at this moment, I hope that the gentleman from Iowa will not insist upon disposing of this matter now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that this item be passed over for the present.

Mr. PARRISH. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this item be passed over, to be returned to later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the statements which have been made as to his attitude in reference to the Speedway Hospital. I refer to the former Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. CARTER GLASS.

Mr. GOOD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this a letter from the gentleman while Secretary of the Treasury or since he became a Member of the other body?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is, I think, one of the last letters written by him before leaving the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, explaining to the House that while gentlemen criticized him the Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY was in his office and in his presence he offered to sign a contract to pay $3,000,000 to the contractor in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will it appear in to-day's RECORD?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We will now go to page 40——

Mr. GOOD. I will after we finish the other.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman does not have to get unanimous consent, he has the right to return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. I will do that to-morrow. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4046, had come to no resolution thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture I offer a privileged report on the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a report, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

CONFERENCE REPORT, INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the conferees of the Indian appropriation bill may be filed at any time between now and midnight.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to file the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill at any time until midnight. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, when does the gentleman intend to bring it up?

Mr. SNYDER. I intend to bring it up to-morrow if I can get the floor to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech delivered by my colleague, Congressman CROWTHER, before the American Legion at Fort Plain, N. Y., January 8, on the subject of "America first."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NAVY YARD, NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from John M. Parker, of the city of New Orleans, the next governor of the State of Louisiana, in connection with the necessity of maintaining the docks and navy yard at New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter with respect to the navy yard at New Orleans. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to do this against my friend from Louisiana, but I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BLANTON. We will thrash that out to-morrow.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But I can not get time to thrash it out, and that is the reason I ask this.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business in order to-morrow under Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business for to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary has the call under a special order for to-morrow and the next Calendar Wednesday, and while I do not know what the chairman of the committee intends to call up, whether it is the sedition bill or some of the other measures on the calendar, I do not think after a special order has been made that we should eliminate that day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee, whom I consulted before I made this request, has no objection to having the Calendar Wednesday dispensed with for to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. I want to say to the gentleman that it is highly important that we should conclude the bill to-morrow that is now before the House, and that we take up the Agricultural bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Here is a question I want to ask. If Calendar Wednesday is dispensed with for to-morrow, the Judiciary Committee has the next call for two days?

Mr. MONDELL. The Judiciary Committee does not lose its right.

Mr. WALSH. I think it would under the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not a special order exactly. The Chair thinks it was simply a permission to the Judiciary Committee to introduce the bill that evening without losing the two days, and that committee will have the right for the next two days. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman from Wyoming to say that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee stated that he had nothing urgent to bring up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not say just that. The chairman of the committee said that he had no objection to dispensing with the Calendar Wednesday call for to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, did the gentleman from Wyoming confer with the chairman of the committee this afternoon about that matter?

Mr. MONDELL. I did.

Mr. GARD. And he has no objection, and it is understood that the committee has the two succeeding Wednesdays following to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NAVY YARD AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to print the letter to which I have already referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman printing the letter from Mr. Parker?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that letter ought to go in here in connection with this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is in connection with the maintenance of navy yards and docks, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I have asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from John M. Parker, a distinguished citizen of New Orleans and the next governor of Louisiana, with reference to the maintenance of the Government navy yard at New Orleans. He is a gentleman who has devoted himself assiduously to the Mississippi River and its problems, the cotton industry in all its ramifications, and the general welfare of the country in every particular, and who is known in our national politics as the friend and companion of the late Theodore Roosevelt when that distinguished American was the candidate of the Progressive Party for the Presidency of the United States. He was subsequently a candidate for the Vice Presidency himself. Following is the letter:

JANUARY 29, 1920.

Hon. JAMES O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. O'CONNOR: I to-day wired you as follows:

"Hope you will use every means at your command to assist in taking steps to assure steady work at navy yard. Am writing."

From an intimate personal knowledge as to the value of a splendid inland harbor like New Orleans, the immense amount of shipping which left this port during the period of the war, and the fact that with the opening of the Lakes to the Gulf deep waterways many trunk lines of steamers centering in this port, and water transportation through 29 States, justify me in making the strongest appeal that lies in my power that Congress in its wisdom should maintain and keep up to the highest degree of efficiency the naval station and dry dock of this city.

We have the finest and safest fresh-water port in the world; are in very close touch with the vast oil fields of Louisiana and Texas and coal fields of Alabama; are the second largest port in the United States, with a magnificent fresh-water harbor, free from danger of tropical storms of any character, and feel that based on the past record we have a perfect right to appeal to the patriotic Congress to realize the urgent importance of the maintenance on the Gulf of Mexico of a great harbor and naval station in immediate touch with the huge Government warehouses here, and where the products of the whole Nation can be promptly and quickly concentrated and shipped to the world.

Bespeaking the most vigorous action at your hands in this important matter, I am,

Very truly, yours, JOHN M. PARKER.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4382. An act to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States; and

H. R. 9112. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 8953. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern; and

H. R. 10701. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2690. An act authorizing the appointment of a minister to Finland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 620. An act authorizing the issuance of patent to the Pioneer Educational Society and its successor for certain lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 730. An act to amend chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2962. An act for the relief of Nick Sitch and Billie H. Evashanks; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution to permit of the disposition of certain lands in Montana ceded by the Crow Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 604. An act for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3138. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands for stockyards, and for other purposes, etc.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3610. An act for the relief of William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been dropped from the rolls of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2956. An act to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes and to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 20. An act to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2786. An act authorizing the sale of lands in Gregory County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 3406. An act for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 2442. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church by patent in fee certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3682. An act to regulate the filling of vacancies in the Corps of Cadets in the United States Military Academy not otherwise provided for by existing law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3683. An act to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3750. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 400. An act authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, with Senate amendment; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from myself to Secretary of the Navy Daniels and his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter written to Secretary Daniels and the reply to him by the Secretary. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if it is in connection with his $9,000,000 proposed appropriation that is coming up to-morrow?

Mr. CARSS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this letter is an account of a rescue of human life that took place on the Great Lakes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it has no reference to what is coming up to-morrow?

Mr. CARSS. None whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the correspondence referred to:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It is popularly supposed that the thrilling deeds of the Navy are only performed on the high seas. In the heart of America, however, there took place one of the most daring rescues that has been recorded in the annals of modern seamanship.

Capt. John Anderson, of Chicago, in command of "sub" chaser 428, bound from Chicago to Grand Marais, Minn., performed a deed of daring that will long be told on the upper Great Lakes. This "sub" chaser, by your orders, had been allotted to the Life-Saving Service for use as a patrol boat at Grand Marais, Minn., but, encountering terrific gales on lower Lake Superior, had been forced to put in at Grand Marais, Mich., for shelter. Scarcely had she reached this place of safety when word came that the freighter D. N. Runnells was pounding to pieces on the reefs outside and all hope for the safety of the crew was given up. Despite the fears of old marines that he and his crew would never return, Capt. Anderson, with his crew, acting in conjunction with the local life-saving force, put out to rescue the crew of the Runnells. Three times was Capt. Anderson swept out of the lifeboat, but managed to swim back and clamber in, and at the risk of their very lives these brave men succeeded in rescuing the entire personnel of the stranded Runnells. Just as the last of the 17 rescued had reached safety the Runnells broke in two and sank beneath the turbulent waves. To the bravery and heroism of Capt. Anderson and his crew 17 worthy sailors owe their lives to-day.

But, my dear Secretary, had it not been for your action in allotting this excellent little ship to the station at Grand Marais, Minn., this heroic rescue would not have been possible and 17 lives would have been lost.

On behalf of my constituents in Minnesota who follow their dangerous calling on the upper Great Lakes, I wish to thank you for responding to our request for the allotment of this splendid little ship. It is one protection they have against the treacherous elements.

I beg to remain

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WM. L. CARSS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., 29 January, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. CARSS: I am directed by the Secretary of the Navy to acknowledge receipt of your communication, dated 21 January, 1920, relative to the bravery of Capt. John Anderson, in command of submarine chaser No. 428, and to inform you that the department will take pleasure in submitting it to the Board of Awards for consideration.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. WASHINGTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Chief of Bureau.

The Hon. W. L. CARSS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PELL, for the rest of the week, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. DONOVAN, for five days, on account of death in family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 4, 1920.

Rev. Alfred E. Barrows, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, Thou whose throne is eternal in the heavens, the scepter of whose kingdom is a scepter of righteousness, we beseech the granting and guiding of Thy Holy Spirit in all the councils of this body. We pray that Thou wilt grant wisdom from above, that righteousness and justice and truth shall prevail. We come thanking Thee for guidance in the days that are past and for the blessings that have come upon us as a people and a Nation. We pray that Thou wilt so guide our leaders and strengthen them that in the days to come we shall do Thy will here upon earth more and more, to the glory of Jesus Christ, in whose name we lift up our prayer. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the legislative day of Monday, February 2, 1920, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NAVAL STATION, PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII (S. DOC. NO. 210).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy of the 28th ultimo submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $128,260.60, required by the Navy Department for the Naval Station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 194).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th ultimo, further information relative to the name, rank, assignment, headquarters, etc., of commissioned officers assigned to duty in other than strictly combatant or line organizations, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11368, the Indian appropriation bill, to dispose of the amendment of the Senate numbered 94 to the bill, in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement thereto and had agreed to the same, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4382. An act to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States; and

H. R. 9112. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of Clarence Lieurance Post, No. 2, American Legion, of Neosho Falls, Kans., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of Eldred Post, No. 174, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Medicine Lodge; of Graham Post, No. 92, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Seneca; of Beloit Post, No. 147, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Beloit; of Lebanon Post, No. 240, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Lebanon; and of McCaslin Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Paola, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Roosevelt Post, No. 67, American Legion, of Bridgton, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Davey sedition bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of McCaslin Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Paola, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Hays Local Lodge, No. 1223, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, of Windom, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Capper-Hersman bill providing for collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK, OREG.

Mr. MCNARY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2797) to add certain lands to the Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 413) thereon.

PRINTING OF NATIONAL BANKING ACT.

Mr. NEW. For the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] I report back favorably from the Committee on Printing Senate concurrent resolution No. 10, and I ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,500 copies of the national banking act as amended to date for the use of the Senate and to be distributed through the Senate document room.

ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN A. M'MAHON.

Mr. NEW (for Mr. MOSES), from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 293), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript, "Government by Injunction," presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Dayton Daily News, Saturday, Jan. 24, 1920.]

HON. JOHN A. MCMAHON DISCUSSES RIGHT TO STRIKE—DEAN OF BAR TALKS UPON INJUNCTIONS—POINTS OF VITAL INTEREST TO BOTH LABOR AND CAPITAL BROUGHT OUT IN WELCOMING ADDRESS BEFORE OHIO STATE BAR ASSOCIATION.

"I have been chosen, as the senior member of the Dayton bar, to welcome you to our city. It is a high honor. I doubt my physical capacity to be equal to the occasion. As to the mental outfit, you must be the judge. It is not for me to depreciate myself. I can only say, in the cryptic language of an ancient Dayton lawyer, in delivering a Fourth of July address many years ago: 'It meaneth not my adequacy to be satisfactory.' You who are skilled in the interpretation of wills, contracts, and statutes must decipher this for yourselves. The job may be equal to an interpretation of the League of Nations. Do not be alarmed, my brethren. This is not the subject of my address. We have invited you here as our guests, and do not wish to disperse you on the first day. Our young men think they have much to show you, and to learn much from the meeting with so many able and experienced men of the profession, to say nothing of the pleasure of association with so many congenial and delightful companions, as nearly all lawyers are—or at least were before prohibition stalked into our midst. Whether our constitutions will change with the other constitutions, who can say? At any rate, until the stocks on hand are depleted and the bootlegger is finally suppressed we are not entirely bereft. For the present we are living under the headway of the past, and we defy the enemy. As to the future, we can join with the illustrious Micawber in 'waiting for something to turn up.'

"In the meantime the members of the committee, as well as the members of the bar generally, will do their best in dispensing Dayton hospitality in accordance with the precedents heretofore established. And in their behalf, and on behalf of the citizens of Dayton, we welcome you with the greatest cordiality, wishing you as much pleasure in your visit as you have conferred pleasure and honor by coming to see us.

"The city is yours for the time being. Do not fear to avail yourself of its privileges. The judges of all the criminal courts, the whole staff of the office of the prosecuting attorney and of the office of the city solicitor are with us in this greeting, and to make assurance doubly sure the judges who preside in the courts of last resort will be particeps criminis and unfitted to judge you harshly. We can not guarantee you against one powerful member of society, however. You must take your chances with the rest of us with the autocrat of the automobile. When you get to the street crossing our warranty of safety expires. Keep your eyes on the traffic policeman, say a short prayer, think of the dear ones at home, cast your eyes both ways for a car, especially in the direction the car is coming, and start across with hope if not with confidence. If anything untoward happens, the worthy coroner will give you a verdict; those of us who are left will commemorate your memory in resolutions that would surprise you in the next world if, as Sir Oliver Lodge says, there is communication between the spirits of the seen and the unseen world. We can not say that you died upon the glorious battle field of Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, or the deadly Argonne, but we will come as near to it as a decent regard for truth will permit. One other danger we can assure you against. Although you are all 'intellectual,' no Lenin or bloody Trotski will bar your way.

"All jesting aside, my brethren, this is a memorable occasion, and I hope it will be a memorable meeting. The profession we represent is one of immense importance. While the most of us are engaged in no greater work than the settlement or trial of disputes between neighbors or business men about contracts, wills, personal injuries, patent claims, etc., this individual work is the necessary part of the great system whereby the fabric of government is made stable. In the great variety of business which grows up in a civilized community, society is divided into innumerable specialized occupations. Some are farmers, merchants, manufacturers, machinists, doctors, ministers, railroaders, bakers, teachers, druggists, day laborers, clerks, lawyers, bookkeepers, etc. Most of them are productive occupations; some, especially the professional ones, are nonproductive but equally as essential to society as the others. All are necessary to a civilized community. Each one fills a niche, and when he performs his duty, obeying its laws and fulfilling his duties as a citizen, such person is an honorable member of his State or city, no matter how humble his occupation or how moderate his income.

"Lawyers can boast that our profession leads us into broader paths than almost any other occupation. In settling the controversies that arise in our communities we are the ministers of justice and assist in the preservation of the peace. In the handling of these disputes we must frequently familiarize ourselves with the details of the business in which they arise. In a city of the size of Dayton, or even smaller, a lawyer may become for the time being a doctor, a surgeon, a minister of the gospel, a chemist, a bookkeeper, a skilled mechanic in any trade in order to understand his case and its technical testimony, and to cope with the vagaries of those who are called as experts in the business. We have one additional cause for pride. Many of us are called into positions of honor, where an accurate knowledge of law is essential. We are all born members of the legislatures or of Congress, and might all be there, if there was room enough! The broader questions of city, State, national, international government are ours to settle, when law is involved, and while the positions are few compared to the large number of lawyers, the road to the highest position is broad and open to us all. Neither birth, nor wealth, nor other European qualification is necessary. Industry, integrity, perseverance, and brains are the only essentials.

"We have a right to be proud of our profession and of its history and the record of its members. They have stood in the forefront when liberty was concerned. I do not need to allude to the pages of English history. The American Revolution is sufficient object lesson. In the military annals of that period what names more striking than Hamilton, Marshall? And when the war was won who took the leading part in the framing and adoption of the great charter of our liberties, the Constitution, by which the States were bound together by solemn agreement? The story has been so often told to us in childhood and manhood as to need no repetition before so learned an assembly.

LOOKING TOWARD THE FUTURE.

"In these times the future is more important than the past. Our forefathers fought for and achieved liberty. They established perpetual peace by the league of States, or a union of the people of the States, if you prefer the language. It is our duty to preserve the Union by preserving the Constitution, which is its sole tie. It is the agreement under which we came together. If we abandon the agreement, a condition of Balkanism would arise far exceeding in disastrous results the European imbroglio. It would install war instead of peace, anarchy in place of government, and barbarism, finally, instead of civilization.

"The war has disturbed and prostrated Europe and Asia. Its results have not been fortunate for us. We are confronted with all sorts of problems, chief among which is the high cost of living, the antics of a few thousand wild-eyed foreigners. The audience need not be alarmed. I will not discuss any of these. As a distinguished governor of Ohio once said, in real gubernatorial language, when he was seeking to quiet the inmates of a hotel, when a midnight fire was in progress near by, 'Do not be alarmed, ladies, the fire is not here; it is elsewhere!' So with my discussion. It is 'elsewhere.' Among other internal troubles we have had strikes of every kind, in every place, and for all sorts of reasons. I am not about to discuss them. But they lead up to a situation in our affairs which concern us most intimately as lawyers or judges or persons connected with government and as lovers of our form of government.

LABOR'S PLATFORM.

"Pending one of the great strikes in which the miners believed themselves justified in freezing the innocent bystanders all over the United States in order to compel a few employers to comply with their demands—about the justice of which I, in common with many others, am unable to give an opinion—President Gompers called together at Washington a formidable meeting of the representatives of 119 national and international unions, said to represent 4,000,000 workers tied up with the American Federation of Labor. The purpose of the meeting was to formulate a platform of principles and to lay down the law to Congress, the administration, and all other evil-minded persons.

"There is much in this platform to which no exception can be taken. Much of it is mere platform stuff intended for the groundlings, but there are some propositions that should be fully considered and discussed by lawyers, as they concern us specially.

"I quote from the reported platform as follows:

"Powerful forces are seeking more and more aggressively to deny to wage earners their right to cease work. We denounce these efforts as vicious and destructive of the most precious liberties of our people. The right to cease work—strike—as a final means of enforcing justice from an autocratic control of industry must be maintained.

"We realize fully all that is involved in the exercise of the right to strike, but only by the exercise of that right can industrial autocrats be compelled to abandon their concept of tyranny and give way to the establishment of freedom and justice in industry.

"Government by injunction has grown out of the perversion of the injunction process. By the misuse of that process workers have been forbidden to do those things which they have a natural and constitutional right to do.

"The injunction as now used is a revolutionary measure which substitutes government by judicial discretion or bias for government by law. It substitutes a trial by one man, a judge, in his discretion, for a trial by jury. This abuse of the injunctive process undermines and destroys the very foundations of our free institutions. It is subversive of the spirit of a free people working out their destiny in an orderly and rational manner.

"We urge that the judges of our Federal courts shall be elected by the people for terms not exceeding six years.

"We assert that there can not be found in the Constitution of the United States or in the discussions of the Congress which drafted the Constitution any authority for the Federal courts of our country to declare unconstitutional any act passed by Congress. We call upon the people of our country to demand that the Congress of the United States shall take action for the purpose of preventing the Federal courts from continuing the usurpation of such authority.

"Here is a carefully prepared platform, the work of some lawyer, which not only concerns us as members of the profession but every citizen who loves his country and believes that its prosperity depends upon the enactment of good laws, their observance, and the preservation of order, through the power of the courts, as the proper authority to determine what are the rights of men or associations of men, when controversies arise between them, especially when the numbers are great and threaten the peace of society.

"The Federation of Labor is manifestly within its rights in announcing its platform. It does not advocate force to overthrow the Constitution. And as it denounced the methods of the I. W. W. and the Bolsheviki, it has a right to urge the adoption of its ideas as stated in its platform by the methods and in the manner provided in the Constitution. And the members of the unions are entitled to proper consideration of their views. It has been too much the habit to denounce the ideas of persons with whom we disagree or whose views are inimical to our interests. It is our duty as lawyers to take up these subjects in our counties when they arise, and to give to the people, and especially to members of the unions, the proper argument to show them the fallacy of their theories or the falsity of the facts upon which some of them are founded if we do not agree with them.

THE RIGHT TO CEASE WORK.

"I approach this argument with this feeling: The great multitude of our people have little acquaintance with the situation and are open to conviction. And our profession puts us under obligation to furnish them the information upon which they must act, for this has been our life study.

"I have said that this part of the platform was prepared, in my judgment, by a lawyer. It is as remarkable for what it does not say as for what it claims. For example, under the title 'The right to strike' we find the words used to describe this right as follows: 'The right to cease work, strike, as a final means of enforcing justice from an autocratic control of industry.' Here the official definition of the word 'strike' is 'the right to cease work.'

"If that is the whole meaning of the word 'strike,' we shall have little quarrel, except in the case of policemen, firemen, railroad men in a body, and other public employees who owe a duty to the public and whose services are essential to the public life or safety. As to them, even no one will doubt the individual right to resign—that is, to 'cease work'—when they find better employment. But to become affiliated with another powerful organization and subject to its orders, assuming inconsistent obligations, and pursuant thereto to resign in a body and abandon the great city of Boston to the thugs of their own and other neighboring cities was an unspeakable offense deserving of the punishment it received and the public condemnation of the demagogues who abetted them in the election of Gov. Coolidge, notwithstanding the efforts of trimming politicians to prevent it.

"Outside of the claim made that public officials should not be permitted to connect up their own local organizations with the American Federation and subject to their orders, there is no recorded case where workingmen have been compelled to return to work by the order of any court, even where the unions were bound up by contracts in writing which had not expired. There is no law that compels a man to work when he chooses to cease work. Of course a general coal or railroad strike intended to freeze or starve the general public presents a special question. Every government is entitled to preserve itself or its people when the conditions arise that necessarily follow a general concerted and simultaneous quitting of work, especially when it is in possession of the war powers still existing.

"Evidently the shrewd lawyer who drew the platform appreciated the difficulties of his job. We all know that in common parlance and practice the word 'strike' means much more than 'ceasing work,' and it is this part of the practice that has been enjoined by the courts. We know, as a matter of fact, that when a general strike is called at any factory or other place of work it is not long before pickets, sometimes in large numbers, are thrown out to cover every approach by new hands. Persuasion, intimidation, and violence are often used to prevent anyone from going to work. The police are called in. Finally the troops.

THE RIGHT TO PICKET.

"Does the right to strike extend to the right to picket and the persuasion of new workers not to enter the factory? If so, how many pickets? Or does it extend further, to intimidation of either the employer or of his new workers? Or may the men who have 'ceased to work' finally resort to violence at the factory or in the streets or in the alleys at night or maiming those who may be willing or anxious to work in the deserted factory, or who are so engaged?

"When strikes take place and intimidation or violence actually result, who shall be the judges as to how far the rights of the parties extend? The two contending parties have no tribunal to appeal to except the established courts of the country, the judges thereof being most generally men of learning in the law and of unimpeachable integrity, whose independence, if at all qualified, leans more to the man who labors than to his employer. When the court finds that the worker has exceeded his right to strike by resorting to intimidation or persuasion amounting to intimidation or violence or other exceptional means, it issues an injunction to prevent the invasion of the other man's rights, and he is punished for contempt if he disobeys.

"Here I again recur to the platform, particularly to that part which proposes to abolish injunctions in such cases. Here facts are falsified, or at least so colored as to amount to a fraud upon the honest union man who has not contrary knowledge. The platform avers that by the misuse of the injunction 'workers have been forbidden to do those things which they have a natural and constitutional right to do.' It may happen in isolated cases that judges may have erred or been extreme from want of knowledge or from the circumstances surrounding the case. But I deny that any respectable court, especially of the last resort, 'has forbidden workers to do things which they had the natural or constitutional right to do.' The astute lawyer who drew these declarations was too keen to specify the things which judges had so ruled. Specification was dangerous. He knew the rulings of the courts are all a matter of record and that if the things complained of were wrong he had only to cite the case and the facts to let us know what right had been denied the worker and when and where. The Supreme Court of the United States has made a record upon these questions, and nearly every State supreme court as well, and to one who has knowledge of what has been decided this part of the platform is a combination of deceit and falsehood, worked up in fustian style to deceive the worker by the use of clap-trap language, viz, 'government by injunction,' stating untruly that injunction as now used is a revolutionary measure, which substitutes government by judicial discretion or bias for government by law. I affirm the contrary. It enforces only those rights which exist in law and prevents the overthrow of law and order by forbidding the invasion of the rights of others by force or intimidation. It is an ancient, familiar remedy, and properly applied when the situation calling for and justifying it occurs.

"Let us examine the familiar uses to which the writ of injunction is put—the great bulwark provided by the law from ancient times to prevent the oppression of the weak by the strong. And pausing there, let me quote the first section of the bill of rights of the constitution of Ohio, being article 1:

"SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and seeking and obtaining happiness and safety.

"This is to a certain extent duplicated in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the United States Constitution.

GOVERNMENT BY INJUNCTION.

"A more comprehensive statement of the foundations upon which a republic is based can not be found anywhere. It is not a preamble. It is a declaration of rights—innate, inalienable. I see in it no distinction of classes. Based upon this declaration, which has been in our constitution practically since it became a State, and other provisions of that instrument, courts of equity have habitually granted injunctions in the greatest variety of cases. For the benefit of the person unlearned in the law I state a few. The bar is well informed on this subject.

"If there is a line dispute between two farmers or lot owners in a city and the man of force undertakes to throw down the fence, the man of peace is accorded an injunction to prevent the removal until the court finds out who is right. So if one owner builds a dam and floods his neighbor's farm, or diverts a spring or a stream of water necessary for his cattle and household purposes, or shuts up a right of way to the public road, or digs a ditch which throws the water into unusual channels the court interferes. So if a man steals your patent, is guilty of unfair competition, counterfeits your trade-marks, or endeavors to persuade your valuable clerks who are under contract or your inventors who have secrets and confidential information, the court of equity steps in with an injunction. If you sell a lot with building restrictions, equity compels the purchaser to observe them by forbidding him to violate his contract. If a nuisance is about to be erected in your neighborhood, you can depend upon the court to give you protection. If an improper tax or assessment is levied upon property, you can enjoin the collection until its propriety is tried. If the city council passes an illegal ordinance under which your rights are invaded, you can enjoin action until its validity is passed upon. If you own a piece of property and some one is claiming an adverse interest, you can enjoin him from asserting it, as it damages your title, and a trial is had. And the courts have gone so far as to protect the divorced wife of a scalawag who haunts the house and the neighborhood and makes her life miserable by his conduct.

"This array of instances in which the court acts is formidable. But it is not complete. The area of jurisdiction is as wide as that of human rights invaded by unscrupulous men. Are all these remedial measures to be abolished because they are 'government by injunction'? In all the above cases the judge alone tries the case, finds the facts, and makes the order; if he is not obeyed, he cites the party for contempt and may or may not try the question himself. The court compels the wrongdoer to desist from his work because he is invading the rights or property of his fellow man. All this is 'government by injunction,' viz, compelling a man to do his duty to his neighbor. Can any laboring man point out the difference between all these cases and the cases in which injunctions have been issued in strike cases? Can any lawyer put us wise? I think not. I do not so much blame the member of the union who trusts in his leaders and their legal advisers; but I do blame the leaders who are endeavoring to make them believe that they are the victims of usurping courts, who ignore their rights and trample them down when there is no proof and none can be produced. I have a firm belief that a large portion of the union men do not understand the situations. I speak to you, and through you to them, as I do now. These men are among the most intelligent of our laboring class. In legal matters they are not learned; they need our help, not our abuse. And we owe to them all the help in our power to come to a just decision. It is not enough in a republic to say that such is the law and condemn everyone who does not obey. A further duty we owe to the public, viz, to prevent it from falling into disrepute by false charges of favoritism, oppression, usurpation, etc., unchallenged and undenied. We want not only a law-abiding community, we want a contented community. And it is a good sign of the times that many employers are adopting methods in their relation to their employees that may bring about such a result. Perfect peace is not possible; but let us have all we can.

"Now, I base my hope of good results from education and publicity upon what I know after long experience of efforts to throw the labor-union question into politics. It has rarely been successful. I have one very striking instance in my mind. The Ohio constitutional convention of 1912 was practically in the hands of labor. Many amendments were proposed to our constitution, and under the belief that change means progress many of them were adopted by the people, some valuable. The subject we are now discussing was under consideration, and the convention adopted the following, being section 21 of article 4:

"SEC. 21. Laws may be passed prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the State, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to punish for contempt. No order of injunction shall issue in any controversy involving the employment of labor except to preserve physical property from injury or destruction; and all persons charged in contempt proceedings with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall upon demand be granted a trial by jury as in criminal cases.

"It was voted on by the people in September, 1912, as a section by itself. This was labor's pet proposal.

"Now look at the result. The people voted it down by a majority of 16,406. Cuyahoga County voted 'yes' by about 30,000, Hamilton 'yes' by 20,000, Lucas 'yes' by 8,000, and Franklin by 1,700.

"Contrast the vote in the great manufacturing centers in the Miami Valley. In the counties of Montgomery, Clark, Miami, Greene, Shelby, Preble, Warren, Butler, and Darke the majority against the amendment was 11,500, only two counties voting 'yes,' one by 100 votes, the other by 240.

"This result shows what discussion will do. A vigorous campaign of instruction brought it about. Labor could not rally its members in a body in support of its platform. The question is settled in Ohio.

ELECTIVE JUDICIARY.

"Two more points remain to be considered. The union leaders demand that the Federal judges shall be elected by the people and for terms of six years only.

"Whatever may be said for or against an elective judiciary in counties, districts, or States, one can not help believing that an elective Federal judiciary would be the downfall of the whole system. Our forefathers discussed these matters most fully, and it was concluded that in a combination of independent States a thoroughly independent and separate judicial system was essential to its success. Let us imagine what would result if labor's plan was adopted. First, we should have primary elections over the whole United States, involving the candidates in a campaign to become known. Then we should have a campaign of election. Every conceivable political trick would be put in use by friends or advocates of the candidates. There would be combinations of States, candidates, or of special interests, politicians, etc. Money would be contributed by the friends of the candidates having schemes to promote or ends to subserve, and the bench would become the roosting place of rich lawyers, or lawyers having rich friends, or backed by interests or classes, and they would in all probability reach the bench, leaving behind them their independence at least, the chief jewel in the crown of the judge. But I do not fear that labor will ever achieve its point. It is not to its interest that it should. The Constitution provides expressly that all Federal judges shall be retained during good behavior, and an amendment would be necessary to change it. And when change is attempted there will be ample time for discussion.

"One more demand is to be considered. It is that Congress shall take action to prevent the Federal courts from declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional. Such action by the courts is declared to be 'usurpation.'

"Why the Federation of Labor did not also denounce similar actions by State courts as to acts of the State legislature and as to acts of Congress one can not conceive. All State supreme courts exercise now the power to declare State laws or Federal laws unconstitutional; and they exercise the power as inherent in the court without express grant, as a necessary result of our system of government. And why did it not denounce the exercise by Federal courts of the power to declare laws passed by the States unconstitutional, if these laws violated the Constitution of the United States—a power exercised every day?

BAD LOGIC.

"The facts and logic of the platform are bad. In early English days before the revolution it was held by able English judges, Coke, Hobart, Holt, and others, that an act of Parliament contrary to Magna Charta, common right, or justice was void. The revolution was largely based upon this denial of unlimited parliamentary authority. It was called a 'lawyers revolution.' John Adams said:

"The stamp act, I take it, is utterly void, and of no binding force upon us, for it is against our rights as men and our privileges as Englishmen.

"As there was no court or tribunal to which our forefathers could successfully appeal, nothing was left but a resort to arms.

"In the Articles of Confederation first adopted between the States, which was nothing more than a league, express power was granted to Congress to provide for the settlement of disputes, and a method was adopted which was not satisfactory.

"When the convention was in session when our present Constitution was adopted, the question we are now discussing was under consideration. I quote from the third report of a committee of able lawyers, five in number, made in January, 1917, to the New York State Bar Association:

"Judicial review is a world-wide practice in federations. Judicial review of the validity of laws is as much a world-wide practice in federations as in the ratio at which gold and silver should be coined. Its only rival in federations is the German system of a Federal council (State government appointed without the voters of either the States or the Empire having any voice in the matter) which, when in accord with the Kaiser, had plenary or dictational powers. Madison, Washington, and Hamilton, with the support of the Virginia school, tried their best to incorporate a Federal council or council of revision into our Federal Constitution, but they were defeated by Massachusetts and the more democratic States. Then the fathers resorted to judicial review."

(Citing Hamilton, Jefferson, Madison, and Farrand's records of the Federal convention.)

"In a previous report by this same committee, made in November, 1915, most exhaustive in its character, it proposed the following resolution which was adopted by the State Bar Association of New York on January 15, 1916:

"Resolved, That any contention that the Supreme Court of the United States in enforcing the Federal Constitution has usurped the power to pass upon the constitutionality of the legislation enacted by Congress is contrary to both the letter and spirit of the Federal Constitution is unwarranted by the history of the United States, and by the history of federations possessing a written fundamental law, but without any Federal council with plenary powers to determine conflicts between the fundamental law and ordinary statutes, and it is also contrary to the spirit of our Federal democratic Republic with 49 legislative units (one federation and 48 States).

"Resolved, That the theory of our Government, State and National, is opposed to the deposit of unlimited power anywhere.

"In the citation of European and other States having a similar system to ours a significant instance is referred to by the committee.

"In Australia, the great labor Commonwealth, it was proposed to amend the constitution by providing that Parliament should have absolute and plenary power to make laws with regard to labor and employment, including the wages and conditions of labor, and employment in any trade, industry, and calling. This was voted down by the people on a referendum April 16, 1911.

"In Ohio none of our constitutions conferred power upon the judiciary to declare laws unconstitutional. The courts have exercised the power since the State was formed. It is an inherent power. Our last constitutional convention provided a limitation upon the number of judges who should join in the opinion, thus recognizing the power as existing.

"It is surprising that any question should ever have been made by lawyers on this point. Of course, we expect nothing from politicians or agitators. As to lawyers, we must, however, remember that we are not all cast in the same mental mold. A small number comparatively of good men and able men have gone wrong upon this proposition as most of us see it; but their mental operations are different from ours, their point of view is different, and their natural sympathies may overbalance their logical gifts.

"What is the power to declare a law unconstitutional? It is not an academic question, which can be decided, unless a case arises between individuals involving rights.

"As an example: A sues B. B answers and puts up his defense. A claims to be acting under a statute. B says that the statute is not good; that he is living under a government with a written Constitution and the statute is contrary to his rights as secured by the Constitution. This right might be to vote, to be a free man, to own his own property, to belong to a religion, to exercise the right of free speech. Let me give you a more striking illustration. The platform denounces the Cummins railroad bill and all similar legislation as 'making slaves of the workers and establishing involuntary servitude.' This is mere bombast. But if true, the workers may need the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution to save them. It prohibits 'involuntary servitude,' and the law could be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and would be if the claim was anything more than mere rhetoric.

"To return to our case. The judge has the case to decide. The right of A under the statute is clear if the statute is good. But the right of B under the Constitution is equally clear. Must the statute prevail over the Constitution or must the court give effect to the agreement contained in the Constitution? The case must be decided. It must be remembered that no one can attack a law unless it interferes with his rights under the Constitution. Courts interpret wills, contracts, statutes, and all other instruments. Why not the Constitution? If on interpretation of the Constitution its clauses conflict with the statute, why shall the mere act of a legislature, passed probably in haste and frequently in ignorance, overcome the solemn agreement between the people under which they have agreed to be governed?

"To you lawyers and judges this talk may seem prolix and foolish and unnecessary. If only lawyers are to decide the issues, the agreement is silly. This question has been before the people since the birth of the Union. The great law chieftain, John Marshall, started the ball in the early decision in Marbury v. Madison, upsetting an unimportant Federal law. The various States having passed laws in derogation of the Federal Constitution on appeal to his court, these laws were set aside. The powers of the Supreme Court became the football of politics for years, judges of the district court were impeached, and the battle between the Federalists and Republicans was on for a long time. At one stage of the campaign John Marshall was burned in effigy in the streets of Baltimore. But when nullification came on in 1830 the people discovered in the discussion that some tribunal was necessary in a government acting under a written constitution, and the people settled down. There has been no important disturbance until now. Those who are endeavoring to revive the questions must remember that the practice and the decision of courts in a country like ours, for the period of over 120 years, can not be denounced or overturned merely for the establishment of class legislation.

"Roosevelt said in 1911 that the right of the court would seem to be self-evident, that Marshall's decision made him a great leader and was necessary to make the Constitution march.

"Notice has been given that every candidate for Congress or other office will be stood up in the corner and quizzed as to his views about the platform. Politics are to be ignored, and only those who fall down before the idol are to be supported. We can imagine the feelings of the unfortunate man. For once the politician will be brought to time. Of course, it follows that if political affiliations are all to be thrown down, we can all vote as we please.

"This address has gone far beyond what I contemplated. But it is my contribution, small as it is, to information upon subjects of vast importance to the public.

"You who wish to inform yourselves more fully should possess yourselves of a book of great value, which has surprised me by the learning and exhaustive research shown by the various authors whose articles or speeches are reported. I refer to a book entitled 'Judicial Settlement of International Disputes,' containing the proceedings of the American Society for their settlement for the year 1916, published by Williams & Wilkins Co., of Baltimore. In the appendix to this volume will be found the voluminous and scholarly reports of the committee of lawyers to the New York State Bar Association, chiefly upon the subjects we have been discussing. It is a most complete compendium of the law and practice of the whole civilized world upon the powers we have been considering. No lawyer should be without it.

"The great tribunal of our country—to my mind the greatest in the history of the world—is threatened by dreamers, agitators, and timid politicians. It is the foundation of our Government. This court has settled by judicial decision disputes among the States of our Union in over 70 cases, many of which would have led to war but for the dignified tribunal established by law to finally decide such questions. Shall it have no power to preserve constitutional rights? Let us preserve the independence, the learning, the integrity, and the impartiality of that court as the corner stone of our Republic. Upon us lawyers rests the great duty. And it should be our great pleasure as well to step into the breach, to inform our fellow citizens, and in the true spirit of the educator to scatter broadcast the knowledge that will enable our people to do what is right, no matter what is his occupation, his interest, or his association.

"A few words more. In a few days I will be 87 years of age—a long life during a most eventful period. I have seen all our railroads built, our telegraphs and telephones, the aeroplane and the submarine invented, and electricity made as obedient as the horse. I have seen the country grow to 110,000,000 of free and prosperous people.

"I have seen the War with Mexico, the Civil War, the War with Spain, and the terrible war just ended in which 2,000,000 American boys convinced Germany that her end had come. I have seen the President of the United States liberate, by the stroke of his pen, 4,000,000 of negro men, real slaves, and the whole race, free and slave, elevated to a political equality with the white. I have seen our President, speaking from the pinnacle of his high office, to the downtrodden people of the world, flooding it with more freedom than it could stand, but seeding all Europe with republics as plentiful as languages. I have seen women enfranchised in most of the civilized countries of the world, and an American-born woman elected and seated in the British House of Commons. And when I look over our country and behold it leading the world in the cultivation of the earth, the output of the factory, the number and value of its inventions, the size and number of its banks, insurance and trust companies, the extraordinary bulk of deposits by the laboring classes, the comfort in their homes, and the improvement in their wages and general prosperity, I wonder if this is the same country that the American Federation of Labor refers to in its platform. And who built or control all these great businesses, railroads, banks, factories, stores, and enterprises that have put America to the front? Are they dukes, princes, earls, counts, or barons, or their sons, or the son of the rich man? By no means!

"Nine out of ten are the boys from the farm, only half educated, or from the factory with hardly a high-school education. They came from the so-called enslaved class.

"America is good enough for me or for anyone else, although she is not perfect. But I take no stock in such Americans as foul their own nest, revile their Government and its officers, especially the honorable judges of our courts, because of temporary evils, the necessary result of a great and wasting war."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3849) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A bill (S. 3850) providing for the adoption of a municipal flag and floral emblem for the Government of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3851) to prohibit the payment of gratuities to the masters of vessels, or other persons, for the purpose of inducing or securing contracts for repairing vessels or furnishing vessels with supplies or other necessaries; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3852) for the relief of the Garden City (Kans.) Water Users' Association, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3853) granting a pension to Alphonso Penley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 3854) granting a pension to Hallie N. Day; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3855) for the relief of Mamie Millender; and

A bill (S. 3856) for the relief of Francis L. Flanders; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3857) granting a pension to Oliver H. P. Harvey; and

A bill (S. 3858) granting an increase of pension to William H. Howell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 3859) granting an increase of pension to James T. Piggott; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 3860) for the relief of James Kernan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs;

A bill (S. 3861) granting a pension to Alois Menzel (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3862) granting a pension to James McManus (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BECKHAM:

A bill (S. 3863) granting a pension to Martha E. Hawes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3864) to amend the naturalization laws, to provide for the Americanization of aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECKHAM submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of the South Fork of the Kentucky River, Ky., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send to the desk a Senate resolution, which I desire to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 291) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate the information hereinafter named, concerning cash advances to foreign Governments under the acts of April 24, 1917; September 24, 1917; April 8, 1918, and July 9, 1918.

First. An itemized statement showing the interest paid by each.

Second. An itemized statement showing the interest due by each.

Third. An itemized statement showing the interest which will be due for the fiscal year 1920, by each.

Fourth. The rate of interest agreed to be paid by each.

Fifth. A description of the obligations, and copies of same, given by each for such cash advances.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the rule the resolution may go over until to-morrow. I see no reason why I should ask for its immediate consideration now, although I think there will be no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PORTRAIT OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 292), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to engage an artist of reputation and ability to paint an oil portrait of the late Abraham Lincoln, former President of the United States, and to place the same in the Senate wing of the Capitol Building, at a cost not to exceed $2,000, which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

RANK OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit a resolution and ask that it lie on the table for the present. I give notice that I shall call it up at a later day for the purpose of submitting a few remarks thereon.

The resolution (S. Res. 294) was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a statement giving specifically—

1. The policy of the General Staff of the War Department with respect to the demotion of officers of the Regular Army.

2. The date of the adoption of such policy and what steps, if any, are provided hereunder, so that the officers of the Regular Army may be restored to their permanent grade in an orderly and equitable way.

3. The names of all officers of the Regular Army who have been demoted, with a statement of their grade at the time of their demotion, the grade to which they have been demoted, the duties performed by them at the time they held their higher temporary grade, and the duties they are now performing.

4. The names of all officers of the Regular Army still holding advanced rank, the duties now being performed by them, and the reasons why the advanced rank is necessary or appropriate to such duty.

5. The policy of the War Department in regard to section 8 of the selective-draft act, approved May 18, 1917.

6. If any specific ruling as to the effect of section 8 of the selective-draft act has been made to the War Department by the Judge Advocate General, whether said section was intended to preserve a lineal or relative standing of officers of the Regular Army, and if any such opinion has been given to the Secretary of War by the Judge Advocate General to furnish it to the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY EXCHANGE COMMISSION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on the 23d of last May I introduced Senate joint resolution 19, for the appointment of a commission consisting of seven members, to be known as the International Monetary Exchange Commission. That resolution is a reproduction of what was known in 1897 as the Wolcott resolution, which was then adopted, and under the terms of which an international monetary conference was appointed for the purpose of establishing an international parity between the two metals, gold and silver. That commission failed because of the objection of the Government of India to the proposition at the time.

The question of exchange has become the acute financial question of the hour, and the present conditions of exchange the world over are so extremely sinister as to threaten the supremacy or possibly the existence of our present export trade. I therefore give notice that on next Tuesday, at the close of the regular routine business of the Senate, I shall address myself to the resolution to which I have referred.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McLEAN, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. OWEN conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, in the State of Utah, which was, on page 2, line 13, after "condition," to insert:

Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of War the privilege herein conferred may be revoked at his instance if and when the regulations as may be prescribed by him to carry into force and effect this act shall be violated upon the part of the said city of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 21, 1920:

S. 2999. An act to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

On January 29, 1920:

S. 2476. An act to amend the act establishing the eastern district of Kentucky.

On January 30, 1920:

S. 3427. An act to establish a commission on the practicability, feasibility, and place, to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over the Niagara River from some point in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

On February 3, 1920:

S. 3331. An act authorizing the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States.

CLAIMS OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. JONES of Washington. When Senate bill 3270 was reached the other day on the calendar I was necessarily absent. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce providing that the Coast and Geodetic Survey may adjust claims not exceeding $500 and submit reports to Congress. It is similar legislation to what we have for the Lighthouse Board, and it has resulted very satisfactorily.

I will state that when the bill was presented once before the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked about a matter, but I have conferred with the solicitor of the department and he states that in adjusting these claims they follow the regular general rules and principles of liability. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It consists of only five or six lines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3270) authorizing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims for damages occasioned by acts for which said survey is responsible in certain cases, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed $500, hereafter occasioned by acts for which the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Washington a question? The language of the bill seems to me to be a little uncertain, and I ask the Senator for information. Does the finding which is made by this commission and which is to be reported to the Treasury Department constitute a legal and valid claim against the Government, so that Congress has no discretion whatever and must appropriate to meet it, or is it merely a recommendation which Congress may follow or not, according as it interprets the facts of each particular case?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rather think that the language makes it a legal obligation after they have adjusted it. I know that in the Committee on Appropriations, when such claims come in under similar legislation, they are passed as a matter of course. I know that the committee does not look into the facts and circumstances, but it accepts the decision as it comes in. So I think this would make a legal claim upon the Government.

Mr. KING. The other day when this measure was called up for consideration I interposed an objection. Since then I have talked with the Senator from Washington and stated to him that I would not object to its being considered. I want to say, though, with the explanation that he has just made, that I regard such legislation as unwise, if not dangerous, and if there were not precedents for the legislation I should oppose it.

It seems to me, Mr. President, to create all these various boards and agencies to pass upon their own defaults and delinquencies and to empower them to enter judgments which are binding upon the Nation and create liabilities against the Government from which it can not in honor escape, is unwise and does not fully protect the United States. It seems to me that we ought to be satisfied with going this far, that the boards and agencies, such as the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Lighthouse Board and the War Board, and so on, shall have authority to make full and complete investigation and shall make their findings and recommendations to Congress, and it is for Congress, through the appropriate committees, to determine whether those findings are supported by the evidence and whether there is a legal and valid obligation against the Government or not.

Under the system adopted we have thrown open the Treasury of the United States to every demand which may be made and which has been passed upon favorably by a multitude of boards and instrumentalities not judicial in their character and not constituted for the purpose of examining and adjudicating claims against the Government. This bill is in line with past legislation, and is supported by numerous precedents. However, I am afraid that this course will in the end prove harmful and subject the Government to the payment of immense sums in the aggregate, some of which are of doubtful validity. It has always proven a dangerous course to allow changing boards, organized for administrative or executive work, to pass upon judicial questions or to adjudicate claims, particularly if such claims arise out of the defaults of such boards.

I wish we could have some tribunal corresponding to the Court of Claims, if it is so occupied that it can not act in these matters, to which could be referred these various claims against the Government. These demands should be the subject of judicial investigation and not left to various boards, whose functions are of an entirely different character. Of course, the Government ought to pay, and pay promptly, all legitimate and honest claims against it. To refuse to provide a forum in which such claims may be presented is a denial of justice, and we ought to provide a forum that will in a judicial way determine the validity of claims against the United States. But I do feel that legislation of this character, and it is in line with much that is upon the statute books, is unsafe and that it does not sufficiently protect the Government of the United States.

Here is this organization set up to pass upon claims which result from its own defaults, its own torts, its own breaches of contract. I think it would be in consonance with human nature for it to act upon these claims sympathetically where its personnel occasioned them, and where its decisions were not subject to scrutiny or review. There might be a feeling that by payment of claims criticism would be silenced; and where there was no personal liability, there might be a disposition to compensate claimants, the legal if not the moral factors being submerged by other considerations. The disposition might be, and I think would be, to look with more or less favor upon the claims which would be presented. The tribunal which this bill sets up is not an impartial one. If its attitude were not such as suggested, it might be claimed that it would act unfairly in passing upon some demands. It can easily be seen that there might be a controversy between some claimant and some official of the Government. The dispute might relate to the question of negligence, and each would blame the other. Such a situation might result in an injustice being done the claimant. I believe that the best plan is to create a judicial tribunal, wholly impartial, to consider claims against the Government. In any event the board under the present bill should have power only to investigate and make findings and recommendations to Congress. However, because of the statements which have been heretofore made and because of the numerous precedents which the Senator has to fortify his position, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word. I think the suggested objection of the Senator from Utah, with reference to the handling of these claims, will have just the opposite effect from that he has stated. I think these officials will not convict themselves of dereliction any more frequently than they feel they are compelled to do so. So if anyone would suffer by placing this authority in the Coast and Geodetic Survey it would be rather the party who is injured than the Government, for this board will not confess any more frequently than it has to that it has been derelict in these matters.

Furthermore, this proposed legislation only applies to claims under $500 in amount. It is really in the interest of the man who suffers a slight damage and yet who can not afford to go into court and hire attorneys to get his claim adjusted. We all know how difficult and expensive it is to prosecute a case against the Government. The fact is that there are now pending 12 claims in which the aggregate does not exceed $400. A man with such a claim can not afford to hire an attorney to come down to Washington before the Court of Claims to prosecute it. This proposed legislation is to meet situations like that. It is really in the interest of the citizen who has been injured; and I think the experience of the Government has been that, instead of subjecting the Government to unnecessary and large expense, it has really had the contrary effect. In a practical way I really do not think it has worked out any different from the plan suggested by the Senator from Utah, because if a report were sent down to Congress recommending the payment of a certain claim, after it had been investigated, the committees of Congress being too busy to go into such matters and to pass upon the justice or the injustice of the claims, we would accept their report, I think, very largely as a matter of course.

So, Mr. President, I think this proposed legislation will be in the interest of the Government as well as to take care of the poor claimants who are not really able to go into the Court of Claims and incur the attendant expense.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF INVENTIONS AND PATENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3223, being Order of Business 359 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, the title of which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3223) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry, inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have not had time to make an examination of the bill nor from my file has there been a digest made of it by the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator goes far enough to object to the consideration of the bill, let me explain it, and then I do not believe there will be any Senator who under any conditions will think of objecting. It is true the Library of Congress has not been asked to express an opinion on the bill; it never occurred to me until the Senator just made the suggestion that that would be proper; but this bill is approved, first, by the President of the United States; second, by the Commissioner of Patents, by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Bureau of Mines, and by all the other scientific bureaus and departments of the Government. They have been working for several years to get something of this kind to protect the hundreds, yes, thousands, of inventions that are made by employees of the Government. Often such inventions become public, but are not developed for the reason that development would require the expenditure of money, and no private individual or corporation will undertake such development, knowing that thereafter they would have no protection and that some one else taking advantage of the expense which they had undergone would be on an equal basis. It is clearly an experiment. It has long been felt that there ought to be somebody somewhere to whom Government employees could assign the rights to inventions perfected by them. The employees who would be affected for the most part are employees engaged in chemical work, employees in the Bureau of Standards and in the Bureau of Mines doing work of a scientific nature. They probably could resign from the Government service and secure patents on devices perfected by them but they do not want to do that; they have a patriotic pride in their work and a desire to remain but they wish their patents developed.

The proposition is—and it is purely voluntary; no one can be compelled to take such action—to designate some bureau or some governmental agency to which employees making inventions can assign them and permit such agency of the Government then to license private individuals or private corporations to manufacture them, giving them rights which will protect them against infringement by other parties.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that employees of the Government, particularly in the military branch of the service, in the past have perfected many inventions which the Government has used without conpensation, because, as I remember, the law now specifically provides that employees of the Government shall not receive patents from the Government for inventions made by them while connected with the Government service.

If we are going to have legislation of this kind we ought to provide that the head of some department shall receive the assignment of such patents, and not some bureau within a department.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator on that point that at the hearings I went into that particularly with the representatives who appeared asking for this legislation. They said the Federal Trade Commission was selected in this bill for the reason that during the war the President had selected that commission to act along similar lines, and they had become somewhat familiar with the business. It is not, properly speaking, of course, one of the functions of the Federal Trade Commission, but they have been doing it during the war under the instructions of the President, especially in the case of patents, under the trading-with-the-enemy act.

Mr. SMOOT. The Patent Office is under the Secretary of the Interior, and it seems to me that if we are going to enact this character of legislation the Secretary of the Interior ought to be the one to receive assignments of patents.

Mr. NORRIS. The Secretary of the Interior does not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not help what the Secretary of the Interior thinks; it seems to me that questions relating to patents ought to be under the head of one department. I think also that if inventions described in the bill are to be transferred to the Government they ought to be transferred into a department of the Government and not to a bureau.

Mr. President, I wish to discuss the matter further with the Senator, and I shall object to the consideration of the bill this morning. I will take it up with the Senator later.

Mr. NORRIS. I will be glad to take it up now, if the Senator is ready.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not desire to have the bill considered now.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator has a right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

LANDS AT MILITARY POSTS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there is on the calendar House bill 8819, Order of Business 336. The main purpose of the bill is to remove a certain restriction contained in the bill we passed last July in regard to the purchase of real estate in certain Army fields. The Military Affairs Committee examined into the bill, with hearings under a subcommittee, and then took it up afterwards in the full committee, and have in substance agreed to the House bill. It will authorize the expenditure of money that is now tied up of approximately, I should say, $6,000,000. It has to do with the purchase of real estate which has already been contracted for in connection with Army camps, and is the bill which the War Department sent down as an emergency bill to take care of some of the real estate purchases for which the Government was liable, and upon which there had been millions of dollars expended in improvements, and, may I say to the Senator from Utah, which we are in danger of losing if these emergency measures are not provided.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, how does the Senator claim that they are emergency matters? As I remember, the bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, approved July 11, 1919, provided that no further purchases of real estate around these camps should be made. The Senator knows very well that the abuses that took place there were scandalous, and that the amendment to the appropriation bill preventing any other purchase of real estate was deliberately put into the bill and for the very purpose of stopping those purchases which had come to the notice of Congress the department intended to make. On July 11, 1919, that act was approved, and I have heard that there were three or four of the camps where it was thought desirable on the part of the War Department to purchase real estate. Under the law they can not do that, and I understand that this bill is to repeal that provision as far as these three or four camps are concerned.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator is quite right in regard to that; and may I say to the Senator that perhaps he would be glad to know that the House in taking up the first item with regard to the Infantry camp at Camp Benning took the appropriation of $2,300,000, which our committee was considering favorably, and cut it to $765,000, with this remark, and it applies to the other camps—I am reading from the report of the committee of the House:

> While strongly condemning the manner in which the expenditures for these camps have already been made, mostly since the armistice and out of money appropriated for the conduct of the war, yet the committee believes it the part of wisdom to permit the partial completion of the plans because of the large expenditures of public moneys already made, and which will result in a great loss unless practical utilization is made of the moneys expended and the work already done.

And may I say to the Senator that in many of these cases the whole project, with the millions that have been expended upon it, will be virtually lost to the Government if the negligible, insignificant parts of real estate, which in some cases are in the very center of the tracts, are not acquired by the Government; and it is largely for the purpose of completing those few necessary purchases that this bill is being presented.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know the details of the situation, but I know that at some of these camps the first loss will be the very best loss for the Government of the United States to take. Rather than put another dollar into certain camps we ought to allow everything at those camps to be scrapped, because if that is not done they will lose it all in the end, and not only that but in the meantime we will have to make appropriations of hundreds of thousand of dollars in order to take care of the property.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have here a list of those that have already been abandoned, and nearly all of them, a great number of them, have been dismantled and sold. I was surprised to find how many had been disposed of. There are about 18 of them.

Mr. SMOOT. I was well aware of that, and I did not know but that it would be a good thing to scrap all the balance of them. If we are asked to put in millions of dollars now, we ought to know something about whether it is the best policy to do it, or whether it is best to spend no more money on the project and either let whatever remains there be scrapped or have the best use made of it that is possible under the circumstances. I will ask the Senator, however, if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. SPENCER. It is the unanimous report of the Military Affairs Committee. On the subcommittee there were five members, and one member—the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]—was unable to attend some of the meetings. He can speak for himself, but my understanding is that the bill as it is now drawn is substantially in accordance with his own judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that after looking over the bill I think I was mistaken in saying that there are only about three or four camps involved. I think there are more than that number. I will ask the Senator just how many camps are involved?

Mr. SPENCER. I should say that there are at least 30 or 40 fields affected by the bill, but in the case of many of them the amounts are perfectly insignificant. Some of them provide, for example, for putting a roof over a building that is roofless, and that will be lost without the roof. At Camp Normoyle we have provided for the erection of some steel hangars to take care of 1,500 motor cars that are now in the open air, and on which the Government is losing every year in depreciation more than the entire cost of the building. There is no new project in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if acres of automobiles—because we are counting them now by acres instead of by numbers—have been lying out from under shelter for a year or more, I do not think they are worth very much.

Mr. SPENCER. They have not been out that long in bad weather. They are on the Mexican border. The department feels that every one of them is necessary. Such care is being taken of them as may be taken. The department let the contract for these hangars—this is only an illustration—and then our bill prevented it; and those motor cars, as I said to the Senator, will deteriorate at a cost every year of more than the cost of the steel buildings which it is contemplated to put up.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, in that connection it should be said that even though this is provided, it will only be a drop in the bucket compared with the automobiles which will still be left out in the air—I mean, of the total number we have.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Military Affairs Committee really are a unit in reporting this bill and think it ought to be passed, well and good; but I am fearful that we will advance a million or so dollars more, and not only lose that but we will lose the appropriations that will be required to have men guard the buildings on all these fields, and before we are through with it we will find out that it would have been cheaper in the end to scrap the whole of the buildings, and all that the Government has in those fields now, and take whatever loss is involved now rather than have that loss increased by making further appropriations of this kind.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry? Is the bill before the Senate? I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if this bill is taken up I shall ask the Senator to make an explanation of these various items.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator that I shall be glad to make an explanation of any item that the Senator desires information upon, if I am able to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the bill going to be taken up, or is it not? Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I just desire to make a statement. I am not objecting to the passage of this bill, neither am I wholly satisfied that it should pass. I was a member of the subcommittee to which this subject was referred, and during the first portion of the hearings I attended them and became familiar with them, but subsequently I was unable to participate further. I do think, however, that the Senate ought to have some information concerning the different projects in this bill as a whole.

The Senators will remember the situation and the almost scandal that arose with reference to Camp Benning; but I wish to say to the Senate that nearly every item in this bill is exactly similar to the Camp Benning situation. Nearly every purchase of real estate that is contained in this bill was negotiated and authorized by the War Department after the signing of the armistice. Nearly every dollar that is carried in this bill is to pay obligations incurred by the War Department out of funds that Congress had appropriated to carry on the war. The War Department undertook for itself the determination of the military policy of the United States and determined for itself where these aviation fields were desirable and necessary, and what plants should be preserved and what plants should be abandoned, and then obligated the United States Government to the extent of millions of dollars for the purchase of this real estate to make these camps and fields permanent.

For instance, in most of these cases the Government had options for the purchase of this very real estate running up to July 1, 1920, 1921, and in one case I remember I think up to 1923; and in some cases where the Government was holding leases under these options running up to 1921, where the Government was only called upon to pay $1 a year rent, nevertheless after the signing of the armistice they exercised the option to purchase the property and obligated the Government.

Now, we are in this situation: Although, in my judgment, it was a gross abuse of authority, nevertheless the War Department technically did have the authority, and it was exercised, and in most of these cases the Government is obligated to pay this money, and I do not know of any way in which the Government can eventually escape the payment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator says that technically the War Department had this authority. Does that come about from the fact that technically we are still at war?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the technicality?

Mr. LENROOT. The technicality is that this authority was given and the appropriations were made for the purpose of carrying on the war; but the Congress, never dreaming that these appropriations would be utilized after the war was over for the purpose of a peace-time proposition without subsequent authority from Congress, put no limitation in the legislation. So the War Department having authority to acquire real estate and to construct plants of various kinds, although the war, except in a technical way, was entirely over, did have unquestionably the technical authority to go on and use every dollar of this money that we had appropriated for the carrying on of the war; and unless there had been a prohibition put in the Army bill that became effective in July, I have no doubt that hundreds of millions of dollars would have been expended by the War Department of the money that had been appropriated for the purpose of carrying on the war. That is what I mean.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Did not the legislation under which they proceeded clearly indicate, though, on its face, that the appropriations were to be used because we were at war and to aid in the prosecution of the war; and would not the spirit of the act, if not the letter, lead to the conclusion that when the armistice was declared the appropriations for that purpose ceased to be available?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Utah, that that was a very acute question before the subcommittee, and one about which I, as a member of the subcommittee, asked a great many questions. We were informed that a legal opinion had been received from the Judge Advocate General's department as to the authority of the War Department to go ahead and utilize these moneys, although the armistice had been signed, and that the Judge Advocate General had held that the War Department did have full authority.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that an officer who, when an armistice came, which he knew would terminate the war, would go ahead and utilize, or advocate using, the appropriations made when we were at war, because we were at war and because the war necessities seemed to demand them, ought to be court-martialed.

Mr. LENROOT. I quite agree with the Senator from Utah; but apparently Congress is helpless. I do not see that we can remedy the situation in any way by refusing to make appropriations that are provided for in this bill, where the claimants can go into the Court of Claims and secure judgments.

Because I have to leave the Chamber, I will refer to an item concerning the Watervliet Arsenal, in New York, where the purchase was inaugurated, as I recollect it, about March of last year, months after the armistice had been signed. We had gone through the entire war without any purchase of additional real estate for that arsenal for the purpose of carrying on the war; but I think there is an appropriation of some $350,000 in this bill—although I may be mistaken as to the exact amount—for the purchase of additional real estate at that arsenal, and it may be desirable, and probably is. But before the Senate passes this bill I would like to have some explanation in that amount of one item of some $140,000—I speak of it now because I have not had an opportunity to investigate it—which we propose to pay to the city for its so-called sewer and water rights in the real estate that is proposed to be purchased. As I understand the situation, this real estate was some two or three blocks, perhaps, of city property, and the city had expended $140,000 in the building of sewers and water mains and utilities of that kind, and it is proposed to reimburse the city for the money that it expended for that purpose.

I confess, Mr. President, knowing as I do the desire of that city to have the arsenal increased, I do not see how the city is damaged any by the acquiring of this property. I do not see that the city has any legal or moral right to make a claim for the reimbursement of the money that it expended for water and sewers upon this property. Perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] can fully explain it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, is it not likely that the money has already been refunded to the city in the way of taxes?

Mr. LENROOT. Very likely. There are items in the bill that I felt required very close scrutiny; but I have such confidence in the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who has spent a great deal of time upon it, that so far as I am concerned, while I am not wholly satisfied with the bill, I do not feel sufficiently familiar with it to interpose any objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I doubt the necessity of my making any reference to Camp Benning, and yet I wish to say just a few words about it. I do not agree with the view of those who think any mistake was made about that camp, except the mistake of not starting it sooner and sticking to it from the time it was started without backing an inch.

When this subject was before the Senate once before the impression existed that the condemnation proceedings for the land at Camp Benning were begun after the armistice. That was a mistake.

In 1917 Gen. Pershing began cabling the War Department urging that less attention be given to preparation for trench warfare and more to preparation for fighting in the open. He urged that ample facilities be given for the thorough preparation of our Infantry for open warfare. I believe that vision of Gen. Pershing's and his insistence that the opportunity be given brought the war to a close 12 months sooner than it would have closed and was one of the policies which stamped him as the military genius of the war, without regard to nationality.

In pursuance of his urgent advice, finally the War Department undertook to concentrate at some point its Infantry schools. This place at Columbus was selected by three or four different boards solely for military reasons.

The War Department hesitated to go on with the work after the armistice. I do not think I knew the Infantry camp had been located until some time after the field at Columbus was selected, and in the summer of 1918 the Infantry school from Fort Sill and one or two other Infantry schools were moved to Columbus and the work was begun.

The parties whose land the Government wanted did not wish to sell it. It was no land scheme. A military board selected something over 100,000 acres of land for a great Infantry school, the purpose being to give the officers of the Infantry, commissioned and noncommissioned, practical experience to fit them for the battle field, something that had never really been done before in the United States and something that was insisted upon by Gen. Pershing as essential to the successful conduct of the war.

The condemnation proceeding was begun; the occupants and owners were notified to leave, because the Government desired immediate possession of their land; and the Government took possession with a claim of permanent ownership. The act under which the procedure was had authorized the War Department to take immediate possession, without agreeing as to price. It was a war measure. These farmers were scattered away from their homes, and 75 per cent of them left their homes and went off hunting for other farms shortly after the proceeding began.

I maintained, Mr. President, and I still maintain, that, as a matter of law, the Government was compelled to pay for those lands; that the condemnation proceedings under the act, with its peculiar language, bound the Government to buy the lands; and war or no war, thereafter the obligation was upon the Government to pay for the lands. The obligation, in my judgment, was a legal obligation—a moral obligation to pay for them, all will concede.

That was the situation which confronted the War Department in the early part of 1919, when I took an active interest in it, and insisted that the Government ought to pay the men who had left their lands, and many of whom had gone off and bought other farms, supposing, of course, that they would get their money from the Government, and with that money pay for their new purchases. Finally the department went forward and paid for most of the land, agreeing, after the condemnation proceeding had been started, upon the price.

The committee of the House took up the investigation of this question thoroughly prejudiced against Benning, prejudiced due to the fact that it was felt by some that the War Department should not have gone on with the project after the armistice. I believe the Government was legally liable for every foot of that land before the armistice. The committee of the House took the testimony of Gen. Bullard, it took the testimony of Gen. Malone, it took the testimony of our great soldiers who were in France, and their testimony convinced the subcommittee of the House that Camp Benning was the ideal selection, in terrain and other respects, for an Infantry training school.

The War Department considered abandoning Camp Benning and locating the training school at Fayetteville, N. C., on land already purchased. A board of officers was sent to Fayetteville, and they came back and reported that the terrain was unsuitable. Let me state what I mean by that. The officers declare they must have for an Infantry training camp a locality with every variety of terrain, some level, some hilly, some rivers, so that the Infantry officers can on this field for training for battle see every kind of terrain and perform every maneuver that they may probably be called upon to perform in actual battle. The report was that the land at Fayetteville was too level, that it lacked the variety; and Gen. Bullard, one of our three greatest generals developed by the war, reported that he had been all over the terrain at Columbus, that he had been at every camp the Government had, and that the terrain that the Army officers selected at Columbus was the most ideal and the most perfectly suited for the purpose intended of any that he had ever seen.

Gen. Liggett declared that an Infantry training school of approximately 100,000 acres of land was absolutely essential, no matter how small the Army, and that the terrain must furnish not simply what was found at Fort Sill but every variety of hills, of woods, of rivers that could be put into a hundred thousand acres of land. He added that it must be a locality where all the year round the training could be given.

All the reports in the hearings from the officers who had fought abroad sustained the action of the officers who selected this place at Columbus, and so convincing was the testimony of our great soldiers, found in this record—I will not take the time to read it—that the committee of the House of Representatives, which admittedly was prejudiced against Benning, reported unanimously in favor of it. I do not intend to read the evidence; I do not intend to discuss it further. I only wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the condemnation procedure started before the armistice and that a legal liability attached then to the Government to pay for the land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator from Georgia takes his seat, I should like to call his attention to a passage which I have just found in the report submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and which includes a copy of the report made by Representative ANTHONY, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. I invite attention to this paragraph, referring now to some of these expenditures. I have just seen the report, and so I can not tell just what expenditures are embraced within the paragraph.

That there were some official misgivings in regard to these expenditures—

That is, made by the War Department after the armistice was declared—was evidenced by the fact that the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs in January last and asked for informal permission to go ahead with the expenditures of these moneys appropriated for the conduct of the war in the further acquisition of the land and in the construction of buildings thereon.

Let me pause to say that this would appear to have been in January, 1919——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. KING. I read further:

The Secretary of War at that time stated he believed he had the legal right, but not the moral right, to spend such moneys.

I do not think he had the legal right, let me say.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it was his legal obligation to pay for that land and the highest kind of moral obligation.

Mr. KING. Let me continue:

The Committee on Military Affairs refused to give its sanction as requested, but instead approved a resolution which had been introduced into the House expressly prohibiting such expenditures. The records show that the officials of the War Department then appeared before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and asked for such approval of the expenditure of such moneys for such a purpose, and it is said that this permission was refused by the Senate committee by a tie vote, and it is further reported that the War Department claims it was authorized to proceed with such expenditures by a Senator—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am the Senator.

Mr. KING (reading):

from one of the States wherein these large land purchases were being made and who had subsequently advised the Secretary of War that if all the membership of the Senate committee had been present the expenditure would have been approved.

What I was going to inquire of the Senator was whether the Benning item was one of the items for which the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War sought permission to make further appropriations, and whether at that date any money had been expended for the buildings and the railroad which seem to have been embraced in the Benning item?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The railroad was largely constructed at that time, and something like $2,000,000, I think, had been spent. A small amount had been paid for land—not a large amount—but the Government was legally liable for every foot of it where they had instituted the condemnation procedure, and they had instituted it for all the land.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator to take the position that if the Government institutes condemnation proceedings for land, either for railroad purposes or for any other purposes, it is compelled in law to complete the proceedings and to make payment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; not ordinarily; but this peculiar act authorized the Government to take possession at once with the title it claimed, without the payment of a dollar, and the Government instituted the proceedings and turned the owners off the land and took possession, with notice to the owners that the Government was taking the property, not for a term of years, as on a lease, but was taking the property as owner.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think, if he will pardon me, that notwithstanding that rather high-handed proceeding——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was our act. We authorized it. It was not high-handed. Congress authorized just such a procedure as a war necessity.

Mr. KING. It would be high-handed even though Congress authorized it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Except as a war measure. It was utterly indefensible upon any other theory.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that, notwithstanding the fact Congress authorized the condemnation of the land, it might, at any time before title was obtained and payment made, restore the land to the persons who had been dispossessed and, of course, pay such damages as had resulted from the dispossession and whatever damages had resulted to the property?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not. After a most careful study and reflection and consulting such authorities as I could find, it was my conclusion that under the peculiar language of the act, where the Government took possession with claim of title in fee, and it had the right to take it as a lease or to take it in fee under the act, as the procedure in pursuance of that act compelled the owners to leave at once and to give the Government the fee, the only question remaining was a decision in the court as to what compensation the Government should pay for the fee.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to inquire whether the deeds had been executed transferring the fee to the Government, or had a decree of court been entered transferring by judicial process the title?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. KING. Then I differ with the Senator, if I may be pardoned for doing so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator may differ with me, but still that is my conviction. Undoubtedly it was a moral obligation. Seventy-five per cent of those people at once left, taking their flocks and their herds, taking their labor and going off to other lands. Many of them bought other lands at once on the faith of the obligation of the Government to pay them for what had been taken away from them. The adjudication of damages would have been practically impossible. It would have been ruinous for those people to go through an effort at adjudication, and, to say the least, morally it was the duty of the Government, after scattering them into other States and other counties and on other farms, to give them what it said, when it turned them out, it intended to do, the value of their land.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether the value has been adjudicated; and if so, by whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has been agreed upon largely. Nearly all of it has been paid for now. I do not think there are more than 10,000 acres that have not been paid for, and that is in process of trial—small pieces scattered through the center of the land; but the bulk of it has been paid for.

Mr. KING. Then, payments were agreed upon without resort to jury trial?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; in most instances. I am not sure whether there were any jury trials, but I think agreements were finally reached. The Government representatives assessed the value and in most instances the former owner took the money.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that if the Government dispossessed individuals and went into possession and claimed title and the individuals secured property elsewhere upon the strength of the supposed purchase by the Government, there would be a strong moral obligation upon the Government either to make compensation for the land which had been taken from them or to restore the land to the people who had been dispossessed and pay them such fair damages as would make them whole. That, I think, ought to have been done when the armistice was declared, and the Government ought to have ceased making further appropriations upon projects which were authorized for war purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have passed beyond that stage in the matter, and I only wanted to give the opinion I entertain as to the legal liability of the Government for the purchases. I entertained that opinion and I still entertain it. I concede that it is a close question and that there is room for a difference of opinion. I do not criticize those who differ with me in the view, but that is my view. I think that equitably undoubtedly there was a liability and morally there was a liability.

The adjustment of damages was practically impossible. I furthermore think that the Senator from Utah is wrong about the duty to have stopped as soon as the armistice was signed. That did not end the war. We did not know whether it would. It was weeks and months even before we were sure that it would end the war.

But I do not wish to go into that. That has all been passed upon, and as an economic proposition the House committee determined, though prejudiced against the camp, after they had examined it, under the testimony, that they ought to take it. All I really wanted to do was not to inject myself into the conduct of this matter by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], except to meet a part of the criticism on a point with which I was especially familiar.

As to what took place between the Secretary of War and myself, it is all in writing, every word of it. I wrote a letter to him, giving my view of the situation, and I read that letter to him and did not make any argument or make any statement that was not in the letter. That letter is in the record, and about the facts contained in the letter there can be no dispute. On it I stand. The necessity for this Infantry training camp has been splendidly sustained by our best officers, and the House committee yielded against their wishes because the officers convinced them that it was a military project of great value and essential, no matter what might be the size of the Army.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word with reference to the matter.

As to Camp Bragg, in my State, it was established by the War Department without any political influence. It was established prior to the armistice. The Government has spent some $10,000,000 there. The conditions at Camp Bragg are like those at Camp Benning, which we have been discussing. Some of the people did not want the camp established there. Some wrote to me protesting. The splendid Scotch people there, loving their homes and their old colonial and Scotch type of houses, with the environment, did not want to have the camp established, but the camp was established there, and they were made to leave their homes. Their churches and their schoolhouses were torn down.

The Government found that that was necessary in order to have an Artillery camp, and this camp is the best in the United States. You could not turn the lands back to those people, because many of them are right in the center of the camp and the troops could not fire the long-range guns, and the money already expended, amounting to some $10,000,000, would be absolutely wasted unless the Government completes the purchase. Some have not agreed upon the prices, some have; but the Government compelled the people to leave, and they have gone away and purchased their homes at other places and established themselves in other communities; and now the Government, it seems to me, is bound to pay them. It is a moral and a legal obligation. It is a highly moral obligation to the people who were made to leave their homes and their communities, and they ought to be paid for the lands the Government has taken from them. That is about the situation.

I desire to add that the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, through its subcommittee, went down to Camp Bragg to look into the situation, prejudiced against the purchase, prejudiced against the camp, but after seeing the conditions there and looking into the matter thoroughly, they have unanimously recommended this appropriation for Camp Bragg. Having spent $10,000,000 there, it is highly necessary and important that we should expend the million dollars necessary in order to secure this property and to pay what the Government has obligated itself to pay.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there are some amendments which the committee has reported to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 2, page 3, line 10, before the word "buildings," to strike out "to complete" and to insert "completion of"; in the same line, after the word "buildings," to insert "and the 60-centimeter engineer railroad"; in line 12, after the word "construction," to strike out "$250,000" and to insert "$300,000"; in the same line, after the word "school," to strike out "$765,252" and to insert "$835,250"; and in line 17, before the word "camp," to strike out "such" and to insert "said," so as to read:

To complete the Infantry school at Camp Benning, Ga.: For the purchase of real estate, $515,252; for the construction and completion of buildings and the 60-centimeter engineer railroad, now in process of construction, $320,000; total for Infantry school, $835,250: Provided, That no part of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Army shall be expended for construction at Camp Gordon, Ga., and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to sell the real estate and buildings of said camp to the best advantage of the Government, the proceeds of such sale to be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 20, after the word "receipts," to insert:

Provided further, That said sale shall not be made prior to June 30, 1921.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], in view of the explanation which has been made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], why the committee ratified the action of the War Department in continuing expenditures for buildings and railroads upon the ground in question? Under the explanation made by the Senator from Georgia, I can see that the committee would be justified in authorizing payment for the land of which the owners had been dispossessed; I think that it was a duty resting upon Congress, after the unauthorized acts of the War Department, either to pay the owners in full for the land and to retain it or sell it, or to restore the land to the owners and to pay them whatever damages may have resulted by reason of their dispossession and the temporary occupancy by the Government; but the committee have gone further than authorizing payment for the land. They legalize the act of the War Department in projecting a great school and in constructing buildings and in erecting railroads. Was it the purpose of the committee, and is it the committee's purpose now, to make a great camp and school at Benning, to continue huge appropriations for such purposes?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Utah has asked me that question, for I personally have a great deal of sympathy with the position which the Senator from Utah has so clearly taken in regard to the foundation of this matter. I think the whole subcommittee approached this question with a real feeling of criticism and condemnation of the manner in which the land had been acquired; I know very well that the House committee were even more bitter against it than was the Senate committee; and the House committee sent down their own representatives to examine into the matter.

Here, I desire to say to the Senator from Utah, is where the case now stands. Nine-tenths and more of the tract of land at Camp Benning, comprising 100,000 acres, has been acquired by the Government at a cost of more than $2,000,000. Whether right or wrong, it has been bought and we own it. We have put on that camp site buildings costing more than $4,000,000. Whether right or wrong, those buildings are there.

This bill has to do with less than 10 per cent of the land that is in the center of the tract and for which the Government is liable. If we do not acquire this less than 10 per cent of the entire tract, in view of its situation, practically the Government's expenditure has gone. Without lessening at all my feelings or my condemnation of the history to which the Senator from Utah has referred, the fact of the case is that as a business proposition it would be suicidal for the Government not to acquire this land now.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. SPENCER. May I say one word more? What the future of the camp will be, how much farther it will be extended, is not taken up in this bill.

Mr. KING. I was about to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the paragraph devoted to Camp Benning $515,252 are appropriated for the purchase of real estate; for the construction and completion of buildings and the 60-centimeter engineer railroad now in process of construction $320,000 are appropriated. The point I sought to make a moment ago was that the committee not only authorized the payment for the land but they legalize the project of constructing buildings and authorize further appropriations for such purpose. Did the committee conclude that we ought to go on and complete these buildings and complete this railroad? In other words, was the committee satisfied that this project is one which ought to be permanent, and were they willing to make further appropriations for buildings and railroads and for such structures as might be incident to a large school and camp?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I think the committee is satisfied that this camp, as a matter of fact, is an absolute necessity. The War Department asked for $1,700,000 for construction work, but the Senator will notice that the committee gave them only such amount as might be called a preservative fund for the completion of roofing on buildings, the putting in of windows, and the completion of construction which was already nearly completed and which would deteriorate in value far more than the amount of the appropriation if it were not made. They did not, however, act upon the larger construction amount which the War Department wanted.

It is fair also to say to the Senator from Utah that our committee added the provision in regard to the 60-centimeter railroad, involving an expenditure, I think, of $70,000. That was done upon this theory: After the hearing we found that the 60-centimeter railroad is one foot and a half wide, and very similar to the railroads which were used so extensively upon the front in France to bring up men and material from the base to the line. We found that the cost of moving men and material from one place to another in this great camp, embracing 100,000 acres, could be reduced more than a thousand per cent by using this little foot-and-a-half railroad rather than by using either motor or animal transportation, which is now being used. The committee therefore were unanimous, in the interest of economy, in adding that item. That is the only railroad provided for.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not there was any appropriation in the last general Army bill covering these items; and if not, why not?

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator mean in the bill of July, 1918?

Mr. KING. In the general Army appropriation bill which provided for the expenditures of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator refers, then, to the last Army appropriation bill?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there were such appropriations in that bill—I am speaking only from recollection—but they were made unavailable by the provision of the bill, which this measure is largely intended to correct, prohibiting the use of the moneys appropriated therein for the further purchase of real estate or for construction. That is merely my recollection, and I can not vouch for its accuracy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there were no appropriations for Camp Benning carried in that act.

Mr. KING. Or for any of the items mentioned in this bill? My recollection is that there were appropriations for many of the camps referred to in this bill and for which appropriations are now sought.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was no reference to these camps in that bill. That was the annual Army appropriation bill and did not provide for new construction or for the purchase of real estate, with one exception, namely, the authorization of the purchase of real estate in connection with Walter Reed Hospital. There was a proviso in the bill that none of the funds appropriated by the bill and none of the funds theretofore appropriated should be used for the further purchase of real estate or for construction, except at National Army and National Guard cantonments. This was not a National Guard or a National Army cantonment; in fact, none of the places mentioned in the bill are.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri having charge of the bill if he has answered the question asked by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with reference to acquiring water rights at Watervliet Arsenal?

Mr. SPENCER. I have not, and I shall be very glad to do so now, in a word, if the Senator desires. Here is the situation in regard to the Watervliet Arsenal: A company of 100 business men agreed with the Government that they would secure the 84 lots which were necessary for this arsenal, and would turn them over to the Government at precisely the cost to them, without any profit. They secured options upon those lots at a cost of $125,000. Being in a subdivision, the lots did not include the streets, which were owned by the city and under which streets were water mains, sewer mains, and other facilities which the city had put in with particular reference to that subdivision.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will pardon me until I finish the sentence—they had to agree with the city, for the purchase of the streets and the rights, to pay $140,000. The aggregate of the two amounts which the committee of citizens have obligated themselves for is the amount which the Government contracted to pay to that committee, and it is that contract which his provision seeks to carry out.

Mr. CURTIS. Had not the adjoining property been taxed for the purpose of putting in the water?

Mr. SPENCER. My information is not. My information is that this was a new subdivision which did not even have the title to the streets, and the Government came along and wanted it perhaps before the subdivision had been entirely completed, though many houses had been built on it.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, if the subdivision had not been accepted by the city, the streets would go with the purchase of the land. They could not become the property of the city until they were dedicated to the public and accepted by a city ordinance.

Mr. SPENCER. Evidently I did not make myself clear. The subdivision owned the land of the lots. The city owned the land of the streets.

Mr. CURTIS. How could they own the land of the streets until the subdivision had been accepted by the city council, and the subdivision became a part of the city?

Mr. SPENCER. All of that may have been done. Whether it was or not, I do not know.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, if it had been done, is it not likely that they would proceed as they do in other cities, and levy a tax before they put in the improvement?

Mr. SPENCER. That may have been done. Whether it was done or not, I do not know.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether any investigation whatever was made by the committee of that section?

Mr. SPENCER. We had a hearing upon it with the representative of the War Department. The Senator will find it in the printed report of the hearings.

Mr. LENROOT. There is nothing upon that subject, I think—the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—except a flat statement that $140,000 was for the payment of the city's rights.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is substantially correct. The questions and answers on that subject were very much like this:

The CHAIRMAN. The total amount that is required is 34 acres, consisting of 369 city lots?
Col. JENKS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And of these 369 lots, 52 have buildings upon them?
Col. JENKS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And for those 52 lots, together with the buildings, $125,000 is needed?
Col. JENKS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And the balance of the $300,000 is for the other 317 lots which have no buildings?
Col. JENKS. And city improvements.
The CHAIRMAN. The city improvements, water, gas, and street, go with all the lots?
Col. JENKS. No, sir; they are in addition to the lots. Those are owned by the city of Watervliet. We have to settle with the city of Watervliet for those street and other rights.
The CHAIRMAN. And how much is needed for the street and water rights?
Col. JENKS. Approximately $140,000 for the street and water rights, sewers, etc., and for some necessary work in connection with the purchase of land, and on the land.

The statement of the Senator from Wisconsin is substantially correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Ordinarily in the United States the fee of the streets is in the abutting owners, and the public have a right over the streets; and in some cases where the fee is in the city, as soon as the abutting property ceases to be used for such purposes as require streets and highways and the property merges into one tract, the city loses its interest in the streets.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator is quite right. Such is my understanding of the law. The main fact in this case was that a committee of citizens had agreed to acquire these lots which the evidence seemed to show were necessary for the arsenal, and they acquired them, and this was the amount of money which they obligated themselves to pay, and this was the amount of money which the Government contracted to reimburse them for, and this is the amount of money covered by the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it might be important to state in that connection that this was not until last April, and it would appear that that committee of citizens should have been put upon some notice, at least, concerning the utilization for any such purpose as this of money appropriated to carry on the war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the item which is now under discussion is found on lines 3 and 4, page 6, reading:

For Watervliet Arsenal extension, New York, $300,000.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has it exactly right.

Mr. KING. How much of that is for the sewer?

Mr. SPENCER. Approximately $140,000 is for the streets and the sewer.

Mr. KING. Is it understood that the sewer is to be destroyed and the city will be compelled to construct a sewer in some other part of the city to serve the purpose for which this sewer was built, or does the sewer still remain and serve the purpose for which it was designed and which it was serving when this alleged contract was entered into?

Mr. SPENCER. My understanding is that that sewer loses its function when the Government uses this property for the purpose it has in mind. If the Senator from Wisconsin has better information on the subject, I shall be glad to have him state it.

Mr. KING. Will it function only for the purpose of caring for the lands and the lots which have been acquired?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; but the sewer is put there for the use of those lots as residence lots. The moment the land is used for warehouse purposes or for arsenal purposes the necessity from a residence standpoint ceases.

Mr. KING. But still the sewer might be maintained.

Mr. SPENCER. It might.

Mr. KING. And, of course, the duty would rest upon the city to maintain the sewer.

Mr. SPENCER. It might.

Mr. KING. And it could exercise the taxing power—perhaps not against the property of the Government, but it could require the Government, I am inclined to think, to pay its fair share of maintaining a sewer which served the needs of the Government, or it might simply say, "We will abandon it and let the Government itself maintain it, if it cares to, in order to take care of the property which the Government acquires."

Mr. SPENCER. So far as this item is concerned, which of course is a purely negligible item in the entire bill, if the Senator feels that it ought to go out, I suggest that it be left out; or if the Senator will change the amount so that it will go to conference, I can assure the Senator that there will be careful investigation made in regard to those water rights before the amount is agreed upon, and either course will be entirely satisfactory to me. I have no interest in the bill except the emergency which seems to be present.

Mr. KING. I think the whole item ought to go out, but I will not insist upon that. I will offer an amendment to strike out the amount which the Senator says is provided to be paid for this sewer, and then let it go to conference.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well. Deduct $140,000 from this $300,000, leaving $160,000; that will send it to conference, and the Senator may be sure that his position will be carefully guarded.

Mr. KING. I move to amend, if I may return to the item—if it has been passed, I move to reconsider it for the purpose of offering the amendment——

Mr. SPENCER. It has not been reached yet.

Mr. KING. Then I will wait until it is reached, and then I will offer that amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no amendment to that item. The committee amendments are now before the Senate. We took it as the House sent it, so that I presume the amendment of the Senator from Utah could be offered now, if he desires.

Mr. KING. I will wait until that item is reached. As I understand, it is on page 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri in respect to the item dealing with North Carolina. Did the committee make an investigation so as to determine whether it was necessary to continue Camp Bragg, to maintain that as a field for the use of the Government?

Let me say, before the Senator replies, that the Government of the United States acquired not dozens, but I was about to say hundreds, of fields during the war for all conceivable naval and military purposes. It would seem that out of this great list there should be a sufficient number, so that there would be no necessity for spending millions of dollars now to acquire additional fields. I should like to know whether the committee investigated to determine whether or not the acquisition of this field was necessary, and whether it is necessary to continue the maintenance of a field at Camp Bragg?

Mr. SPENCER. The committee did investigate that matter with some care. Fifty thousand acres have actually been bought and paid for at that field, and over $10,000,000 has already been expended; and the amount of land involved in this bill that is necessary to complete that as a field, even if it was not to be used, if it was to be disposed of, is such that it would seem to me, as a business proposition, a wise one. It is a great artillery camp. It is one of the very few places where they have a range long enough and big enough over which they can actually practice with their guns. You can not practice with an artillery gun upon a small camp. You can have every camp facility there, but the minute you shoot over on to the adjoining farms or towns you are in danger. This place has a field that is, so far as I know, practicaly the only one that has that artillery feature; and of course that is, in any view of the reorganization of the Army, an essential place to have.

Mr. OVERMAN. This camp was also established long before the armistice.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; that is very true.

Mr. KING. But after the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; not after the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harding	New	Spencer
Beckham	Harris	Norris	Sterling
Borah	Harrison	Nugent	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Thomas
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	King	Pomerene	Trammell
Cummins	Lenroot	Ransdell	Underwood
Curtis	McKellar	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Elkins	McNary	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Glass	Moses	Smith, Md.	Watson
Gronna	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I have been requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on accout of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is absent on account of illness, and that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on public business.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. HALE, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. STANLEY answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill for action on the amendments of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, before the word "construction," to insert the word "the"; in line 2, before the word "completion," to strike out "for the" and insert "and"; in line 3, after "$2,500," to insert "for the construction and erection of steel storage buildings, $161,000; in all, $193,500," so as to make the clause read:

At Camp Normoyle, Tex.: For the construction and completion of main shops, $30,000; for the purchase of real estate, $2,500; for the construction and erection of steel storage buildings, $161,000; in all, $193,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Artillery," on page 4, line 7, before the word "purchase," to insert "the," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of real estate at Camp Eustis, Va., $42,198.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Field Artillery," on page 4, line 12, before the word "land," to strike out "No" and insert "That no"; in line 13, before the word "Illinois," to insert "the"; in the same line, after the word "tracks," to strike out "for construction as follows: For" and insert "and north of the Tip Top-Grayhampton Road; for"; in line 16, after the word "completion," to insert "of the" in line 17, before the word "for," to strike out "total" and insert "in all"; in line 22, before the word "camp," to strike out "such" and insert "said"; in line 23, after the word "Government," to strike out "when" and insert "whenever conditions are such that"; and in line 25, after the word "conducted," to strike out "there" and insert "at Camp Taylor, Ky.," so as to make the clause read:

To complete Field Artillery training centers:
At Camp Knox, Ky.: For the purchase of real estate, $811,338: Provided, That no land shall be purchased west of the Illinois Central Railroad tracks and north of the Tip Top-Grayhampton Road; for general construction work, $50,000; for completion of the Dixie Highway, $100,000; for plumbing, heating, and refrigeration, $25,000; in all for Camp Knox, $986,338: Provided, That no part of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Army shall be expended for construction at Camp Taylor, Ky.; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to sell the real estate and buildings of said camp to the best advantage of the Government whenever conditions are such that Camp Knox is prepared to take over the Field Artillery School now being conducted at Camp Taylor, Ky., the proceeds of such sale to be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, after the words "North Carolina," to strike out the comma and the word "for" and insert a colon and the word "For"; on line 9, after the numerals "$2,500" and the semicolon, to strike out the word "total" and insert the words "in all"; on line 14, after the words "buildings of," to strike out the word "such" and insert the word "said"; and, on line 17, after the word "receipts," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That said sale shall not be made prior to June 30, 1921.

So as to make the paragraph read:

At Camp Bragg, N. C.: For the purchase of real estate, $1,128,000; for construction as follows: For hospital, painting, and carpentry, $5,000; for glazing one hangar, $1,000; for siding on the administration building, $1,500; for gravel roads in reservation, $10,000; for gravel road to Fayetteville, N. C., $25,000; for incidental work and miscellaneous, $2,500; in all for Camp Bragg, $1,173,000: Provided, That no part of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Army shall be expended for construction at Camp Eustis, Va.; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to sell the real estate and buildings of said camp to the best advantage of the Government, the proceeds of such sale to be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That said sale shall not be made prior to June 30, 1921.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have the chairman of the subcommittee explain why it is necessary to buy at Camp Bragg. I understand that the parties who own the property do not want to sell it. Can the chairman tell the Senate why it is necessary to buy the camp there when the Government has all these other camps?

Mr. SPENCER. Doubtless the Senator was not in the Chamber when I explained that a few moments ago.

In connection with the purchase of Camp Bragg we have authorized the discontinuance of Camp Gordon. The disposition of that camp is provided for in the bill. The situation in regard to Camp Bragg is that 50,000 acres and more have already been acquired by the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. By purchase?

Mr. SPENCER. By absolute purchase, bought and paid for; and we own it, and we have actually put on that land more than $10,000,000 worth of property. This amount, which is to complete that purchase, seemed to the committee not only essential from a business standpoint to complete the purchase but it does complete that artillery field, which is the only place where long-range guns can be experimented with and shot.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator from Missouri explain how many additional acres are to be bought under the bill?

Mr. SPENCER. Nine thousand one hundred and seventy-seven and twelve one-hundredths acres, at $12, are now under contract, and some 60,000 are now in process of condemnation. For those that are under contract the Government is liable, and as to those that are in process of condemnation the Government will be liable for whatever judgment is rendered against it.

Mr. CURTIS. How much per acre will the land at Camp Bragg cost?

Mr. OVERMAN. The testimony shows that it will average about $12.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from North Carolina knows. I was looking up the information.

Mr. OVERMAN. The testimony shows that it will cost $12 and some cents per acre.

Mr. CURTIS. If they are taking it by condemnation, I do not see how they are going to get it for $10 or $12 an acre. If the Government is taking it by condemnation, it would be a question as to what the board finds the property to be worth.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the contract price.

Mr. SPENCER. The situation in which the Government finds itself in regard to this camp is this: The land which is now sought to be purchased is actually surrounded by the land which the Government has already acquired, and if it is not completed the whole project is more or less valueless. From every standpoint of economy, without any reference to whether they were right or wrong in what they did, this is the economical thing to do. So far as this camp is concerned, it was one of the first camps; it has been there for a long while. There is not the same criticism in regard to this camp, I think, that there was in regard to purchasing the land at Camp Benning.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have the testimony here, and the price was $12.09 an acre. That was the option price. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] asked what it would cost, and this is the exact amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 20, before the word "engineer," to insert "the," so as to read:

ENGINEER CORPS.

To complete the engineer training camp at Camp A. A. Humphreys, Va.: For the purchase of real estate, $20,455.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to direct the attention of the Senator from Missouri in a general way to these numerous items. For instance, we find items for Camp Humphreys, Va.; to complete the Signal Corps camp at Camp Alfred Vail, N. J.; an item for the purchase of real estate for Fort Revere, Mass.; to complete the purchase of real estate at Salt Well site, Midland, Mich.; for Edgewood Arsenal, Md.; and to complete air service fields. In addition to the numerous other air fields which the Government had during the war I find here estimates for a general depot at Fairfield, Ohio; an aviation general supply depot at San Antonio, Tex.; for the completion of barracks and quarters in Hawaii; for the construction of a sewer system at Arcadia Balloon School, Los Angeles; for general construction at Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Mich. My information, derived from the discussions during the consideration of various Army bills, was that Mount Clemens was not suitable for an aviation field; that five or six months of the year it was absolutely impossible to do anything because of the intense cold and inclement weather, yet there seems to be a disposition to perpetuate that field.

I find an item for the purchase of additional real estate for further aviation fields at Richmond, Va.; Ellington Field, Houston, Tex.; Chanute Field, Rantoul, Ill.; Park Field, Memphis, Tenn.; Mather Field, Sacramento; Chapman Field, Miami; March Field, Riverside, Calif.; Brooks Field, San Antonio, Tex.; Kelly Field, San Antonio, Tex.; Scott Field, Belleville, Ill.; for an aviation general supply depot, Middletown, Pa.; for an aviation general supply depot at Little Rock, Ark.; for Arcadia Balloon School again, Los Angeles, Calif.

Then we come to nitrate plants. But I will not refer to these items now. Does the Senator think the testimony warrants the continuation of aviation schools and supply depots at the large number of places mentioned in this bill? I understand there are also additional aviation fields and camps in some of these States as well as in other States. Let me add in passing that a strong argument in favor of the bill of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], reported some days ago, for the creation of a department of aeronautics and the bringing together of all activities having to do with aviation is presented in this bill, as well as in other measures which call for millions for aircraft and the training of officers and men for flying duties. It seems to me the way we are appropriating money for fields scattered all over the United States call for some coordination of Government agencies and departments. We are asked for millions for airplanes for the Army, and millions are demanded by the Navy for seaplanes. The Post Office and other executive agencies are asking for millions for aviation work. We have a duplication in these departments, and millions are wasted in unnecessary overhead and in constant overlapping.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did not the Senator oppose the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. No; the Senator is in error.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I am very deeply in error, because I acquired the impression that not only the Senator from Utah but also other Senators who are complaining of the extravagance in the maintenance of the fields for aviation opposed the bill, which would have consolidated all the fields under one head and stopped this very extravagance.

Mr. KING. This is what I said, if the Senator will pardon me: I said that the admirable speech made by the Senator in support of the bill was a powerful argument in favor of the bill submitted by the Senator from Indiana, and unless some other way was devised by the War and the Navy Departments of dealing with the subject of aeronautics I was inclined to support the bill.

I further stated that I was uncertain as to what course to take in regard to the measure. This uncertainty was occasioned by my lack of familiarity with the testimony taken by the Military Affairs Committee and all the reasons which prompted the committee to report favorably the bill.

It is quite likely my remarks made during the discussion led the Senator to the belief that I was opposed to the bill. I did not conclude my remarks on the measure, yielding for the presentation of some other matter. If I had discussed the measure further I should have stated that I would support it with some modifications.

I will say to the Senator that I began the study of the bill with some prejudice against it. I read some of the testimony which was scattered through two large volumes, and the more I investigated the subject the more I was convinced of the merits of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that sooner or later, if we have an economical administration in the aeronautic divisions of the War and Navy Departments, we will be compelled to put them under one management or one control. The manner in which the War and Navy Departments have handled the subject of aviation warrants criticism, because the dual administration has caused waste and duplication to the extent of millions of dollars. I think it is improper to make appropriations for so large a number of fields, many unnecessary, but the War Department seems determined to maintain them, regardless of the heavy burdens which will be thereby imposed upon the people.

Mr. SPENCER. The two items to which the Senator particularly referred, the one at Camp Humphreys and the one at Camp Selfridge, are fair illustrations of every one of the items. I will assure the Senator that the committee did with some care take up every one of the items.

Here are the facts with regard to Camp Humphreys: At Camp Humphreys the Government owns 6,000 acres of land. It is already a camp upon which they have expended a large amount of money. The bill provides for the acquisition of approximately 125 acres of land, which is comprised of parcels that are in the center and surrounded by the rest of the land, and those parcels are absolutely necessary to the integrity of the whole, and not to make the appropriation would be practically to make unavailable and substantially invaluable the entire amount that has been expended on Camp Humphreys.

Mr. KING. What I want to ask the Senator is whether the committee determined that the maintenance of Camp Humphreys is necessary? I think nobody could resist the argument which the Senator is now making, but scores of camps were acquired by the War and Navy Departments during the war. Millions of dollars were expended in their purchase and equipment; and the demand is now made that further appropriations should be made, because hundreds of millions were spent in acquiring property no longer needed. It seems to me we ought to dispose of many of these camps and fields and scrap if we can not sell the millions of dollars worth of buildings that have been erected thereon. It will be economy to do so. We have appropriated millions of dollars to pay for guarding supplies and property held by the War Department at the signing of the armistice. Instead of speedily disposing of such supplies we stored and guarded at great expense hundreds of millions of dollars worth.

Mr. SPENCER. I realize the force of what the Senator so strongly states, but I may say that if you were going to sell Camp Humphreys to-morrow, as a business man you would acquire all the land, and not own 6,000 acres without acquiring little fragments aggregating 120 acres here and there, which are keys to the whole situation. The Government now has the contract to get the land, and if they do not get it their 6,000 acres are jeopardized. Then, where is there any business acumen or economy or anything of the kind, whether you keep the camp or lose it?

These are fair illustrations of the provisions in the bill. This is not seeking to establish any camp nor to develop any camp. It is an emergency bill to take care of certain features which are in the interest of economy and seem to be necessary.

The Senator referred to Camp Selfridge. Selfridge wants $190,000 for the purchase of real estate. There is not a dollar of that in the bill because the emergency of that purchase, it being now in litigation, did not seem to the committee sufficient to justify incorporating it in the bill. Selfridge wants some $30,000. We have expended there now more than $2,500,000, and it is a reserve aviation camp in actual operation. The men are there. What is the money wanted for? It is wanted for the purpose of drainage and sanitary necessities, to make the camp a place in which human life which is now there can be safe. You could not conduct that camp without the provisions for which this amount of money is necessary any more than the Senator could conduct his house without sewerage or drainage or plumbing. It does not take up the question as to whether Selfridge is to be continued or increased or not. It is a mere emergency measure to take care of what the condition now is at Selfridge, and without it we jeopardize the life of every one of the men, whom we are sending there by the hundreds, and who are there now in the service of the country.

These two illustrations which the Senator has brought up are fair illustrations of every one of the provisions in the bill. This is not a general bill. This is an emergency bill that has been culled from an emergency bill and has been cut to the bone by the House. So far as I know it does not contain a single thing that the Senator and I, if we could sit down at the table and discuss it with all the facts before us, would not agree in saying that business economy would require that it should be expended.

Mr. KING. The Senator did not answer my question, namely, whether or not the committee has made an examination of the various sites, and the evidence in support of the contention that they were needed, and whether the conclusion was reached that they were needed and that the Government ought to continue them.

Mr. SPENCER. No; we did not consider the question of their permanent use by the Government. In the list which the Senator read here is Scott Field, $100. We found that a right of way into Scott Field near Belleville, Ill., could be acquired for $100, and whether we continue Scott Field or sell Scott Field that right of way is necessary.

We found that for the general supply depot at Richmond, Va., $5,100 was an emergency for the moment, and the question of the continued use of the camp was not before us. That is true of all the items in the bill.

Mr. KING. I think the action of the committee in dealing with this bill is somewhat of a rebuke to the War Department, as the Senator says that they have cut to the bone in respect of many of the appropriations asked by the department; but I do think that the Committee on Military Affairs should investigate further and determine upon a policy with regard to the military camps and fields to be retained by the United States.

I regret to say that I have not confidence enough in the War Department to believe that it will abolish the multitudinous camps that it should. It seems to be seeking to maintain and preserve them as if we were going to have a standing Army of a million men in the country instead of a standing Army of 250,000 to 300,000, and possibly less.

I feel that the Committee on Military Affairs in considering the bill which they report should examine very carefully these various fields and determine a policy that will be consistent with the size of the Army and with the purse of the United States. It is time that we get rid of the hundreds of useless fields now owned by the United States.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator from Utah that precisely what he has in mind is in the bill? Camp Taylor is absolutely eliminated by the provisions of the bill, and two other great camps—Camp Gordon and Camp Eustis—are put upon proof before a certain time to establish the necessity for their existence, or they go. Personally I think Camp Eustis is necessary, but the bill does provide along the very line which the Senator has outlined. One camp has been discontinued.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] I think it is fair to say that the necessity for the appropriation contained in the bill is because of the War Department attempting to determine the military policy for the country and committing the Government to the expenditure of this money. The trouble comes with the War Department attempting to usurp the functions of the Congress.

Mr. BORAH. But the Congress declines to have it usurp this power.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it will not be stopped, because, as stated earlier in the debate, the Secretary of War unquestionably has the technical authority to do these very things, to incur these very obligations, although it was as clear a violation of the spirit of the law as possibly could be imagined. He went on and attempted to determine the military policy for the country, and, having done it, went and purchased this real estate right and left for these various camps. But they can go into the Court of Claims. The contracts were no doubt legal and the Government owes the money.

Mr. BORAH. I do not agree with the Senator that there is no doubt as to the legality. Does the Senator entertain no doubt about it? It has been stated upon the floor of the Senate that the Secretary of War did not have the power to make these purchases. The late Senator Martin, in response to questions addressed to him by myself, stated that he did not think the Secretary of War had the power to make the purchases.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that that was a question to which the committee gave a great deal of consideration. The War Department informed us, and I think we had the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, as to the power of the War Department to make the contracts. I confess that I came to the same conclusion, there being no limitation in the appropriation of the authority with which he had been vested, although no one dreamed that the Secretary of War, after the war had ended for all practical purposes, would undertake to use for any such purpose as this the money appropriated for carrying on the war.

Mr. KING. May I invite the attention of the Senator from Idaho to a statement of the Secretary of War, when he appeared before the House committee and later before the Senate committee, asking for authority to make these expenditures after the armistice. He appeared in January of 1919, and the armistice, as the Senator will remember, was signed in November, 1918.

The Secretary at that time stated that he believed he had the legal right but not the moral right to spend such moneys. The Committee on Military Affairs refused to give its sanction as requested, but instead approved the resolution which had been introduced in the House expressly prohibiting such expenditures. Then the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War sought some grace before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, and they did not fare much better.

Mr. BORAH. He had a technical legal right, but no moral right.

Mr. KING. I do not think he had the technical legal right. When during the progress of the Great War an appropriation was made for the purpose of preparing for the war and the war ceased by an armistice and it was apparent, as from the situation which confronted us when the armistice with Germany was signed, that there would be no necessity for the expenditure of millions and hundreds of millions which the United States had theretofore been appropriating, I submit that it was the legal duty of the War Department to cease making these expenditures, and that it had no legal right, let alone any moral right, to continue making the expenditures.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, many of these contracts were made during the war; the lands were taken and the camp was established during the war.

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to that statement I desire to say that in nearly every case there was no contract of purchase prior to the armistice, but the Government held under lease in nearly every case, running up to 1921, 1922, and even as long as 1923, with options to purchase; and the options, in the vast majority of cases found in the pending bill, were exercised by the Government after the signing of the armistice.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is not true as to all of them.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not true as to all of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I understand. I said "some." I did not speak generally of the whole bill. I think the Senator is right as to some of them.

Mr. LENROOT. If it were not for the fact that I believe there is a legal liability against the Government for the purchase of this real estate I would not favor this bill at all; I would most strenuously object to it. If there was any way to rebuke the War Department for the action that it has taken in attempting to determine the policy and to usurp the functions of Congress, I should like to find some way by which Congress could take appropriate action with respect to that; but it would not punish the War Department by refusing to carry out these contracts; it would only be punishing the innocent owners of the real estate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to inquire is it necessary, in the opinion of the Senator having the bill in charge, that it be passed to-day?

Mr. SPENCER. I think it should be passed to-day. We have made great progress with the bill, and I should dislike to lose the advantage of the progress which has been made.

Mr. BORAH. It is very hard to keep up with the appropriation bills, Mr. President. There seems to be a question in this case as to the legal liability of the Government concerning which, naturally, I should like to inform myself before I vote. I should be inclined to take the view of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]; if there is an actual legal liability, I suppose this is the better way to deal with the situation; but if we vote to-day, I shall resolve the doubt the other way and vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee which has been stated will be agreed to without objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 5, line 24, before the words "Signal Corps," to insert the article "the," so as to make the clause read:

To complete the Signal Corps camp at Camp Alfred Vail, N. J.: For the purchase of real estate, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 4, on page 6, the last clause read being as follows:

To complete the purchase of real estate:
For Watervliet Arsenal extension, New York, $300,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that we have now reached the point in the bill in reference to the Watervliet Arsenal, to which the Senator from Utah desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. KING. In the clause just read I move to strike out "$300,000" and to insert "160,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 6, line 19, before the word "completion," to insert the article "the," so as to make the clause read:

For the completion of barracks and quarters at Fords Island, Hawaii, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 21, before the word "construction," to insert the article "the"; and in the same line, after the word "of," to insert the article "a," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of a sewer system at Arcadia Balloon School, Los Angeles, Calif., $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 11, to strike out the following clause:

For purchase of real estate and acquisition of oyster rights at Langley Field, Va., $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, after line 21, to strike out:

For purchase of Curtiss-Elmwood plant at Buffalo, N. Y., $1,804,300.49: Provided, That such payment shall be in full for all claims and accounts against the Government of the United States.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Curtiss-Elmwood plant at Buffalo, N. Y.: The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation of New York a sum not to exceed $1,804,300.49, in full and complete settlement and satisfaction of all charges and claims for depreciation, wear and tear, obsolescence and amortization, provided for, growing out of, or in any manner arising from, or by virtue of Bureau of Aircraft Production contracts Nos. 2673, 2673–1, 2673–A, 2673–1–A, and 2814–A; and for the purchase and acquisition by the United States, free and clear of all incumbrance, of the plant of the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation, known as the Curtiss-Elmwood plant, situated on North Elmwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.; said plant consisting of 79.1 acres of land, more or less, together with all structures, buildings, factories, warehouses, machinery, tools, equipment, and all improvements, facilities, and appurtenances belonging thereto, and which make up, constitute, and form the said Curtiss-Elmwood plant.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there may be sufficient justification for this appropriation; if so, I am not advised. I understood that during the investigation which was made by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate of the maladministration of the War Department in regard to the appropriations for aircraft, and during the time that the investigation was being made by Judge Hughes the organization known as the Curtiss-Elmwood plant came under observation. My recollection is—and I do not have a very distinct recollection—that in that plant there was evidence of gross mismanagement and of a scandalous waste of the public money. My recollection is that after the war was over there were some dealings with this plant or some organizations with which it was connected looking to a settlement and an adjustment of all the controversies between that plant and the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In whose State is that plant located?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is located in my State.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think the item properly in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely so, or I would never stand for it. The Senate has already passed this very item once after extended debate, the whole transaction having been fully explained.

Mr. BORAH. The fact that the Senate passed it once would not be very much of a precedent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely made that observation to show that there is nothing new about this item; it is not being sprung upon the Senate by the Senator from New York or by the Committee on Military Affairs. There was extended debate upon this very matter and there was entire agreement of opinion upon the part of everybody who has ever studied it at all that this is the only decent business arrangement the Government can make in connection with this plant. By the expenditure of this amount of money the Government will save something like $4,000,000.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to say, in a sentence, in regard to this plant that the simple facts are as follows: The Government has now $55,000,000 of property stored at this place; they are occupying 1,300,000 cubic feet of space. To build the storage which the testimony shows will be required for at least four years more would cost three times the amount contemplated by this bill. We are now paying for that storage $300,000 a year; but, because of a contract which we already have with the Curtiss organization, we have the chance of taking that whole plant, with all the buildings, for the sum of money of which the House has approved. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that if we were to look at it as a mere business proposition in connection with a corporation in which he and I had the pleasure of being associated, we would find that, as a business proposition, it would be the thing to do and that it should be done at once. I do not think those who own the property are keen for the disposition proposed of it by this bill. If we do not avail ourselves of our contract and take it, it reverts back to them, together with the millions that we have put into it. We are the beneficiaries, and not those to whom the money goes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is another fact to which I should like to call attention, namely, that we get this bargain because we were fortunate enough to make the contract.

Mr. SPENCER. That is perfectly true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If Senators would merely look into the facts and ascertain what has actually occurred before making bitter attacks on these items, it would not only save the time of the Senate but, I believe, would expedite a proper consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. The Senator from Utah had something to say about the investigation of aviation production during the war in connection with this plant——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I venture to say that he can not find in all of that testimony any charges that anything occurred at that plant involving the waste of the Government money as the result of the inefficiency of the plant itself. He is reflecting upon this item by insinuating that that company should have a black name. The truth is that the money which was wasted at the Curtiss plant at Buffalo was wasted because the Government ordered that company to do the impossible, and kept on ordering it to do the impossible over and over again, against the protest of the officials of the company.

It is only fair to state what the facts are. Even though I do happen, in part, to represent the State of New York in the Senate, I have no more interest in this item than in any other, and it was not inserted in this bill at my request or the request of my colleague [Mr. CALDER]; it was inserted in this bill on the unanimous vote of the subcommittee, of which I was not a member. It was done on a former occasion by unanimous vote of the whole Military Affairs Committee, and passed the Senate on a former occasion after an extended debate, in which it was absolutely proved beyond all peradventure of doubt that this item would save the Government of the United State at least three times its face value. That is the only reason it is here, and not because the plant happens to be in the State of New York.

Mr. BORAH. Well, no one has said that. Nobody has insinuated that that was the fact. I asked in whose State it was located so that I might get the facts, and I am glad to have them.

Mr. President, I must say that the opportunity for Senators to investigate these matters is very slight. Very few of us are on the committee, and when it is suggested that we have an opportunity even to look into the details of the question, it is thought not necessary to do so.

I should be glad myself to have a little more time that I might look into some of these things. I know that since the war closed, according to press reports, the War Department and the Congress combined have gone ahead and are going ahead as though the war were in full progress. They are expending money in a way that would be expected if we were anticipating a war to begin next week. If the facts with reference to any particular item are such as the Senator from New York states—and I have no doubt that the Senator from New York states them just as he understands them to be, and not otherwise, as to the particular item—of course, it would be proper to take care of it; but here are a number of contracts which have been made by the War Department at a time when confessedly they did not have the moral right to do it, and there is a grave doubt as to whether they had the legal right to do it. Now Congress is following its usual tactics in backing up what was improperly done by the department, and the combined action of the department and the Congress results in taking millions of dollars from the Treasury at a time when we ought not to be spending money in this reckless way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, notwithstanding the strong, vigorous language of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the apparent heat which actuated his last observations, I shall still have the temerity to challenge some of these items and to criticize them, and I shall not be deterred from offering criticisms, because my strictures may not suit the Senator from New York or any other Senator upon the floor. I am not bound by the investigation which the Senator from New York makes or which anybody else makes. I want to be satisfied, in part at least, when I vote for appropriations, that they are justified. This is particularly so when I believe that millions of dollars are improvidently spent by the Government, and when we are appropriating in peace times billions of dollars. We are compelled, because of the great number of measures passed upon, to be guided in many matters by the reports of committees. It is humanly impossible to consider all the bills reported to this body. But it is our duty to obtain the fullest possible information upon the measures calling for action upon our part. We are not all members of the Military Affairs Committee or the various appropriation committees of the Senate, and we can only get at the facts by making inquiry, by reading thousands of pages of printed testimony, by discussion, and by availing ourselves of the best opportunities presented.

Speaking for myself, I have attempted to familiarize myself with the appropriation bills. Though I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I have read hundreds of pages of testimony taken before that committee, as I have read thousands of pages of testimony submitted before the various appropriation committees of the Senate. I am not satisfied with appropriation bills that are reported because some committee may be satisfied with them. If I feel that they need further investigation and criticism upon the floor of the Senate, I propose to make such criticism.

The demands for appropriations are so enormous, and the organized propaganda upon the part of executive officials, as well as by certain elements and classes of the public, to obtain stupendous sums from the Treasury is so extensive and powerful that I feel that every Senator should seek to protect the interests of the Government and the taxpayers. The organized raids upon the Public Treasury constitute a scandal and a menace.

It is a remarkable thing to me that we are paying $300,000 a year rental for this property, which, as I understand, we can acquire for approximately $2,000,000. If there is a contract to pay $300,000 a year rental, it would seem that it was an improvident one.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] says there is $55,000,000 worth of property in this plant. I do not know the character of the property. It may be military stores. A year ago the War Department represented that it had not only hundreds of millions but, as I recall, several billion dollars' worth of property here and in France. The Senator from New York earnestly and properly urged that we permit the War Department to have in the neighborhood of 12,000 or 18,000 additional officers for one year—if I am wrong I shall be glad to be corrected——

Mr. WADSWORTH. An aggregate of 18,000 officers; not 18,000 additional officers.

Mr. KING. I was in error—an aggregate of 18,000 officers, in order that the War Department might make disposition of the property which it had on hand. The Senator knows, and other Senators know, that there has been severe criticism of the War Department for the manner in which it has attempted to dispose of the war supplies which it had on hand when the war ended. Senators know how hard it was to get any action upon the part of the War Department and to induce the officials to dispose of the hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property which was on hand.

Why has not the Government disposed of this $55,000,000 worth of property? It may be that it is property which ought to be preserved; but, if it is property which ought to have been disposed of, more than a year has gone by since the armistice, and the longer the property is held the less value it will possess.

Why does not the Government dispose of these stores? Why has it not done so before? What is the necessity of purchasing this plant? Is it the plan of the Government to engage in the manufacture of airplanes? Are we purchasing this plant because it is cheaper to buy than to rent, or are we purchasing it because the Government intends to engage in the manufacture of airplanes? I should like some information in regard to that proposition, if the Senator from Missouri or other Senators upon this committee care to give it; but, with the limited information which I have respecting this item, I shall feel constrained to vote against it.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, in response to the Senator's inquiry, I will state that the only amendment was this: If the Senator has the bill in his hand——

Mr. KING. I have it.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will notice that the language of the House, which provides for precisely the same amount, provided that the payment shall be in full of all claims and accounts against the Government of the United States. Inadvertently, that language would include, as the Senator will notice, outstanding claims not at all in connection with this plant. This company does have existing contracts with the Government which are not at all involved in this plant, and therefore the provision inadvertently included much more than it was intended to include. So the Government and the company itself agreed upon an amendment which should in every particular take care of the plant and all its appurtenances and everything connected with it, but, of course, should have no connection with any outside contracts that had no relation to the plant itself; and that is the reason of the change in the wording.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is it the purpose of the Government to operate this plant?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know. I know that they have got to use this plant for the next four years for storage, and I know that if they did not use it another day beyond those four years for storage this provision would be most economical.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain what the stores are?

Mr. SPENCER. Largely, airplane stores that have accumulated, and parts of machines, and material. There are $55,000,000 worth of them there, or were a month ago.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator realize that the machines which we have are practically valueless, and that they have become obsolete; that the machines of last year will be practically worthless next year?

Mr. SPENCER. I think there is a great deal in what the Senator says, but I do not understand that the completed machines are stored. I understand that the storage is of material and of parts of machines which are available in any remodeling or in the construction of future machines.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it may interest the Senator from Utah to know that a very large number of motor trucks are stored there. In fact, they are packed in, standing up on end, thousands of them.

Mr. KING. Why has not the War Department disposed of those motor trucks?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are the ones that are being reserved for the use of the Army. They are not declared surplus. Something like 18,000 trucks were declared surplus, as the Senator knows. These are the brand-new ones that never have been used, and are regarded as necessary for the Army itself.

I may say to the Senator that this building covers 25 acres. It is probably the largest single factory building in the world. I never heard of a larger one. It is built of concrete, steel, and glass. I have never heard that the War Department had any idea of operating it as a factory, but the Government has put something like four or five million dollars into it by way of a loan to the company, as I recollect—I forget the details—and had a contract by which it can buy it back after an appraisement; and it is now found, as the result of the most exhaustive investigation, that the company's equity in the building is about $1,800,000. The building cost something like $6,000,000. We get the building back by paying the company its equity of $1,800,000, and we can do anything we like with it. We can sell it afterwards to any manufacturing concern or we can lease it as a whole or we can lease it in sections. The building is so built that several manufacturing processes can be carried on in it at the same time. It is an enormous place. Otherwise there is no other solution for the Government except to go on paying this rental. It may be said that the rental of $300,000 per year is for the use of a building which cost nearly $6,000,000, not $1,800,000.

I will say to the Senator from Utah that I did not mean to show undue heat a moment ago in my reply. We have spent a great deal of time on these things. This particular item has been under investigation since May, 1919. It was reported to the Senate in the annual appropriation bill, and I think the Senate spent the greater part of one day in debating this very item. All the facts were brought out in the greatest detail, and the Senate, I think with no opposing votes, or at any rate but few—perhaps the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] opposed it—by an overwhelming vote adopted it. Now, the House has adopted it also, although the language of the House, as the Senator from Missouri has explained, is a little different from the language which the Senate subcommittee has recommended.

Perhaps the reason for my heat a moment ago was the fact that the Senator from Utah, in order to criticize this particular item, referred to the investigation made of aircraft production during the war, and inferentially, at least, put a charge against people who were quite innocent. Investigation shows that the mismanagement centered here in Washington, and that the Government was guilty and not the manufacturers. That is shown clear through, and that was all I had in mind when I said that I did not like to see innocent people given a black eye through the criticism of this particular item on the ground that the Curtiss Co. had been grossly extravagant and wasteful of the Government's money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I believe neither the public nor perhaps Senators have always differentiated between the War Department and its officials and some private companies with which the War Department had contracts. If I did the officials of that company an injustice, of course I should be very sorry, for I do not desire to say anything that would unjustly reflect upon anyone, but my recollection of the investigation was that there was strong and convincing proof of great waste and extravagance at this plant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true.

Mr. KING. Judge Hughes so found, as I recall, and all who have made investigations have so found. Indeed, a number of friends of mine, and one or two Army officers, reported to me that the waste and extravagance at this plant was something unparalleled; that they would receive orders to manufacture a certain type to-day, and a large number of men would be put at work to manufacture along those lines, and in a few weeks their output would be scrapped and some other design or some other plan would be decided upon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All on orders from Washington.

Mr. KING. I think that is true on orders from Washington.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As a matter of fact, that was the most unfortunate experience of its kind, I suppose, this country or any group of its citizens ever experienced in our history in war or peace. This enormous plant, Mr. President, if I recollect correctly, the largest aircraft manufactory in the world, so far as size and number of men employed was concerned, did not turn out one fighting machine during the war, for the simple reason that everything it was given to do by the Government was impossible to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I express the hope that the Military Affairs Committee will make an investigation so complete that we will know where the blame lies for the shameful waste of money in the aircraft production during the war. The public believes that this organization of which the Senator speaks was guilty of some delinquency. Under the Senator's statement, and I have no doubt but what it is true, that organization rose to the emergency, and, if it had been permitted, would have produced airplanes in large numbers to aid in winning the war; but from the information conveyed it would seem that the red tape, the officialdom, the bureaucracy, the incompetence in the War Department all conspired to frustrate the efforts of the aircraft company and to prevent the production of planes so greatly needed upon the battle fields of Europe. Somebody ought to be haled before the bar of public opinion and made to suffer for the delinquencies of which we have heard so much, and punished for the waste of hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated for the construction of aircraft for service with our troops beyond the seas.

I wish some committee would find out who was to blame, and I wish that swift punishment might come to those upon whom the responsibility rests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 21, after the word "complete," to insert "the"; after the words "purchase of," in the same line, to insert the words "or to settle the obligation of the Government for"; and on line 23, after the word "with," to insert "the"; and before the words "nitrate plant" to insert "the," so as to make the paragraph read:

To complete the purchase of or to settle the obligation of the Government for real estate contracted for in connection with the erection of the nitrate plant at Ancor, Hamilton County, Ohio, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, to strike out the word "Provided" and insert "Sec. 3"; on the same line, before the word "construction," to insert the article "the"; on line 2, after the word "or," to insert the words "any of"; on line 9, after the word "system," to insert the words "or form of contract and now," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That no contract for the construction covered by the appropriations contained in this act, or any of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the Military Establishment, except repair work the cost of which can not be clearly estimated, shall be let to any contractor under what is known as the "cost-plus," "cost-plus perceniage," or "cost-plus a fixed fee for compensation" system or form of contract: Provided, however, That work or construction let under such system or form of contract and now under process of completion may be concluded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 11, to insert the following as an additional section:

RARITAN ARSENAL.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend such portion of the unexpended balances of the appropriations made by the second urgent deficiency act, approved October 6, 1917, for terminal storage and shipping buildings as may be necessary for the payment of awards to cover the acquisition of the following-described real estate which has been requisitioned under the provisions of section 10 of the act approved August 10, 1917 (40th Stat. L., p. 276), to wit: Two thousand and eighty-nine acres of land, more or less, and appurtenances thereto belonging, situated near Metuchen, in townships of Woodbridge and Raritan, county of Middlesex, State of New Jersey, and now occupied as an ordnance depot and known as Raritan Arsenal: Provided, That where the title to the above-described real estate sought to be acquired by such requisitions, already served, proves to be defective by reason of the fact that all necessary parties in interest were not served with requisitions, or for any other reason, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or to acquire by condemnation or otherwise such outstanding titles as are necessary to completely vest the fee-simple title to such real estate in the United States of America.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri briefly explain what this tract of land will cost, when it was requisitioned, and whether there is any necessity for its retention by the Government?

Mr. SPENCER. I think it is free from any of the objections that have been made to the purchase of other tracts. It was added on by the committee after consultation with the House committee. I will state the situation:

In October, 1917, the Government determined to erect an arsenal for storage and for other purposes upon the Raritan River. The arsenal was erected, and it comprises 500 buildings. In December there was stored in that arsenal $335,000,000 worth of material. The land on which those buildings were erected was requisitioned by the Government more than two years ago, and the people who owned those lands were dispossessed. In a majority of the cases—almost all of them—the awards of the money actually due to the people who were dispossessed have been made, and yet they have not received a dollar. Many of them are poor farmers in New Jersey.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are poorer now than they were before.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; and this is to provide for the payment of the money, for which the Government is legally liable, and which in any transaction in private business would have been paid from a year and a half to two years and a quarter ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer one amendment which I hope may be adopted. Senators will remember that the other day we adopted in the Senate a provision to correct the ruling of the auditor with regard to the purchase of lands for Walter Reed Hospital. The provision we adopted ought to be added on this bill as an amendment to facilitate the matter. I hope there will be no objection to it. It is precisely the same amendment that we adopted in the Senate, I think, day before yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. It was in a bill that we passed?

Mr. SPENCER. A Senate joint resolution that we passed. It is the precise language in which it was when we adopted it. It is only for its strategic position that it ought to be on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

That no provision contained in the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919 (Public, No. 7, 66th Cong.), shall be deemed or construed to prohibit the expenditure of the appropriation of $350,000 made therein for the purchase of land contiguous to the Walter Reed General Hospital, 26⅞ acres more or less, and the acquisition of so much of said acreage for the amount appropriated as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may deem to be in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes."

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator withhold the call for a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that under the rule whenever the absence of a quorum is suggested the roll must be called.

Mr. STERLING. I thought it was the rule that after the roll call had begun then nothing could intervene, but that a Senator might withdraw the call for a quorum before it had begun.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the Senator from Utah can withdraw his request.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator withhold it?

Mr. KING. I will withhold for a moment.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to bring before the Senate the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not withdraw my demand for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Beckham	Harris	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Henderson	New	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	King	Overman	Underwood
Dillingham	Kirby	Page	Wadsworth
Elkins	McCormick	Phipps	Warren
Fernald	McCumber	Ransdell	Watson
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard
Gronna	McLean	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. LODGE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. SHERMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. HARDING, Mr. GORE, Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hope that the motion will not prevail. I have been very much in favor of a retirement plan——

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I appreciate the Senator's position and the importance of the work in which he is engaged. If the Senator will allow the motion to prevail, or will not object to the motion, I will, after the reading of the bill, consent that it may be temporarily laid aside and not proceed with the discussion of the bill to-day.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not sure that that is going to be of very much assistance to me. The Senator is aware that the conferees on the railway legislation have been in daily session six days in the week for some time. Possibly there were one or two adjournments of one day for some special reason. It is more than important that the proposed railway legislation should be disposed of. Notice has been given by the President that the railroads will be turned back March 1. I am sorry that they were not turned back March 1, 1919. The conferees of the Senate and House are doing everything they can to adjust the differences between the two Houses, and I would feel that I was negligent in my duty if I did not give practically my entire time to that railroad legislation until we get it in the form of a report to be presented to the Senate.

I know that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, is also very much interested in retirement legislation. Years ago he was the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and prepared and presented to the Senate a bill on the subject. Later I succeeded him as chairman of that committee, and, after a good deal of thought, another retirement measure was prepared and presented. I think I am within the bounds of truth when I say that the Senator from Iowa also is very anxious to be on the floor, so that he may take a part in the discussion of the bill.

I am not opposed to a retirement plan. I am just as much in favor of a retirement plan as is the present distinguished chairman of the committee, but I am opposed to his plan, and I think the majority of the Senate will be opposed to that plan when they realize how tremendous the cost is going to be.

I am not questioning the diligence or the good faith of the committee, but I am satisfied they have been grossly deceived by some of the testimony which was presented to the committee touching the question of the cost of the bill. I expect when we get to the discussion of the bill to demonstrate, I think, conclusively, what it is going to cost the Government. Beginning with about six or seven million dollars a year, it will reach the peak within about 30 years, when it will cost $35,500,000, or thereabouts, a year, and then it will gradually decline until it reaches a level of $28,500,000 a year; but the high cost of the bill has been kept in the background by the experts who have come before the committee.

I want to be on the floor of the Senate when the bill is being discussed, but I can not be here if I am to do my duty as a member of the conference committee having under consideration the railroad legislation. If the retirement bill can go over until next week or until such time as we shall have completed our work as members of the conference committee, I shall join with the Senator from South Dakota in helping to bring up the bill, for it is a question that ought to be settled. However, because of these conflicting engagements, I hope the Senate will not order the taking up of the bill now. Whatever view we may take of this subject, Senators ought to be informed upon it; and I am satisfied, knowing as I do the many engagements that Senators have, they are compelled to depend to a certain degree upon the diligence, the work, and the conclusions of the committee that has special charge of the bill.

Of course, in what I am saying, I do not mean in the slightest degree to cast any reflection upon any member of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; all of the members of that committee are my personal friends, for whom I have the highest regard personally and officially; but I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not insist on having the bill taken up at this time.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this bill has been on the calendar a long time. It is No. 89 on the calendar. It was believed that it should have been considered by the Senate long before this, but the steering committee arranged to take up bills following this bill on the calendar, and, in their judgment, it was deemed proper that those bills should be first considered. I yielded to that decision without any complaint or objection.

Mr. President, this is an important bill. There is urgent need for civil-service retirement legislation, and there has been for a long time. Our own great Government is the only civilized government in all the world, I think, that has not some civil-service retirement system, and it is to the reproach of the United States that it has not before this time adopted some just, equitable, and fair system; one that would be just to the employees; one that would be just to the Government itself; and one that would be just to the public, which, after all, is the party that is most interested. In view of the importance of this legislation, and in view of the fact that it has been delayed and put aside for other legislation, I feel that the bill should be now considered.

Mr. President, always, in the proceedings of the Senate, Senators will be on important committees considering important bills; Senators will be on important conferences considering bills that have passed the House. Must important legislation halt and wait for the release of Members who serve on committees until their work is done, the time when that work will be completed being altogether indefinite and uncertain? I can not quite agree with that proposition, much as I should like to accommodate my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] or the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], all of whom have manifested an interest in civil-service retirement legislation.

Further, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio, in his opposition to the motion to take up the bill, anticipates some of the very issues of the bill and discusses them here on the floor at this time. I desire to say that I think the Senator from Ohio has been wrongly advised in regard to the cost of this legislation to the Government of the United States, as I think we shall be able to show.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If the distinguished chairman of the committee or any other member of the committee can show that I have been wrongly advised, I shall be only too glad to change front. I want to be right about this matter, as I am satisfied the Senator does.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope when we come to a discussion of the matter I may have the privilege of being in the Senate Chamber when the chairman of the committee presents his views. I shall want to ask him some questions, and, no doubt, he will want to ask me some questions when the matter comes up for discussion.

Mr. STERLING. I shall hope to have the Senator from Ohio here when I discuss the bill.

I desire to say, as I said a while ago to the Senator, that I do not propose to go into the discussion of the bill to-day, but if the Senator will permit the bill to become the unfinished business and to be read, I shall then ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. POMERENE. The only difficulty is that I anticipate I shall be in the same embarrassing situation to-morrow that I am in to-day. I have only referred, in a way, to the merits of the respective bills for the purpose of showing the importance of the bill for which the Senator from South Dakota now asks consideration and the necessity for its full discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to taking up the bill at any time. I am in favor of retirement legislation. As to whether this bill is the proper one or some other bill be substituted will be brought out in the discussion.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator knows that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who was chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment for a number of years, and myself spent days and weeks in the consideration of a retirement bill which we reported to the Senate, but to which the Senate failed to give consideration. I was also a member of that committee at the time the Senator from Ohio was its chairman, and I think the Senator from Ohio will bear me out in saying that we gave days and weeks to the consideration of the same subject matter. Then, as time proceeded, other bills have been considered by the same committee. I know that the Senator from Iowa is deeply interested in this proposed legislation; I know that he desires to be present when it is considered. Of course, if the bill before the conference committee were merely an ordinary measure no member of that committee could come before the Senate and ask that the proceedings of the Senate upon any such measure should be postponed or deferred to suit his convenience, but the railroad bill has got to become a law if the railroads are to be turned back to their owners by March 1. It is very doubtful whether, even if the committee should agree on a conference report by the middle of next week, we should be able to get the report through the House, through the Senate, and signed by the President in time to have the railroads turned over by the 1st of March.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he now discloses the true situation; first, that it is indefinite as to when the work of the conferees on the railroad bill will be concluded; and, secondly, that there will be indefinite discussion after the report of the conference committee is submitted.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that when the conference report goes to the House it will lie over for a day, and no doubt will be discussed in the House for some time. I do not expect that there will be very much discussion of the conference report in the Senate, and, so far as I am concerned, I will say to the Senator that during that time I shall assist him in getting the retirement bill before the Senate for consideration; but I really think that the bill ought to go over at least until next week, so that the members of the conference committee on the railroad bill can be present when the bill is taken up and discussed.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, as a Senator who has no such immediate interest in this bill as any of those who have taken part in the discussion, I submit that, at a time like this, unless a measure of this kind may be made the unfinished business upon the motion of the Senator who is responsible for it, it may very well be put over again and again. The Senate will never dispatch any business at that rate. There are conferences continuing now or pending which will occupy the time of other Senators even three weeks from now when the Senator from Ohio has concluded his labors upon the great railroad bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in a general way that is true, but I think that the distinguished Senator from Illinois will agree with me that it is especially important that the railroad legislation be gotten behind us.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator, but let me say that the Senator from South Dakota has offered, if the Senator from Ohio will permit him to get this bill before the Senate, to ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside. There are two or three other Senators on the floor now who have other measures which they wish to bring before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota, it is to lay the bill over until to-morrow, so that there will be no discussion to-day. My own belief is that we will have proceeded far enough along with the conference on the railroad bill so that by the first of the week, or shortly thereafter, we can take up the retirement bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator can not bind the Senate nor can he bind what action may be taken hereafter; but tentatively will the Senator agree, if the retirement bill is now made the unfinished business, that he will not ask for its consideration, so far as debate is concerned, until the first of next week? After that we will have to rely upon the good judgment of the Senator if the conference report on the railroad bill is not presented.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I venture to say that, beginning on Monday, considerable debate upon another topic is likely to occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. If this is the unfinished business, any one Senator can prevent it at 2 o'clock any day.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], on the one hand, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], on the other, purpose to precipitate what I think is likely to prove a considerable discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the only way in which the unfinished business can be laid aside is by unanimous consent——

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely.

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. If unanimous consent is not given, then a motion can be made to take it up, and that will displace the unfinished business, and that can be done with the peace treaty at any time. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. McCORMICK. And with what resultant discussion?

Mr. POMERENE. I am sure the Senator from Illinois will be here, and he can pour oil on the troubled waters.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator would suggest "oil on the fire," I might agree with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have in mind the notices already given by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in regard to taking up the question of the League of Nations and the peace treaty for discussion the first of the week. If I could have the assurance that beginning on Monday we might proceed with this bill as the unfinished business, I would agree to the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah now; but we can not have that assurance, in the very nature of things, when we consider what notices have already been given.

Mr. SMOOT. It is entirely in the hands of the Senate. At 2 o'clock on Monday the Senator can object to laying aside the unfinished business, and then the only way in which it can be displaced is by a motion. I will say to the Senator that no matter whether this bill is the unfinished business or not, I think when Monday comes if the Senate wants to take up the peace treaty it will be taken up by unanimous consent, and if unanimous consent is not granted it will be taken up by a motion, and I think the Senator believes so.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and most probably it will be taken up by a motion, and certainly will displace everything else.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it would displace the unfinished business; so there is nothing gained by refusing to adopt the course I have just suggested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to make this suggestion to the Senator from South Dakota: I happened to be chairman of this committee last year, and I know something about the difficulties both of getting it up and of keeping it before the Senate after you get it up. If the Senator will look back about a year or a little more in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he will find almost this exact controversy arising, the only difference being that then I was trying to get up the bill, and to-day the Senator from South Dakota is trying to get up the bill. I want to say to him that in my judgment, unless he gets this bill up to-day or this week, it will stand no chance of passing, because the treaty will be taken up, the appropriation bills will come along later, and he will not have a chance to have the Senate vote on the bill. The Senator from Ohio has consistently opposed every effort to get up this legislation from the beginning.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I mean, as far back as I recall, as far as I know. I know that the Senator takes the view that he is in favor of some sort of civil-service retirement law, but he certainly is not in favor of the bill that is now before the Senate. He has been one of the most active of all its opponents. I recall many times while I was attempting to get it up having yielded to his blandishments, which are always very persuasive with me, as I am very fond of him; but we did not get anywhere, and we are not going to get anywhere now unless we have a vote. I just want to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that if we are going to get anywhere on this retirement legislation we had better have a vote on it to-day, for I doubt if we will have any other chance.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. My distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] ordinarily is accurate in his statements, but he is far afield this afternoon. This measure did come up. It is true that there were certain days on which I objected to its coming up. It is also true that I helped to get it up. It is also true that after a full discussion of it the Senate adopted my substitute for it, and then the Senator from Tennessee did not want to proceed any further. It is also true that on one or two afternoons, when there was a very small attendance here, and when the Senator thought he had the whip hand of the situation, he wanted to bring it up.

I shall be content with any action that the Senate takes after it has had an opportunity to inform itself as to the merits of the situation. I understand a lot of the distorted statements of fact on this subject that have been spread broadcast over this country by a lobby in the last few years—representations, for instance, to the effect that we were going to take 8 per cent of every man's salary, and a lot of things of that kind. I understand that perfectly, and later on I may have some observations to make upon this subject. I am quite content to have anybody advance his cause and say anything that can be said truthfully in advancement of that cause; but I want to take issue with some of these lobbyists that have been hanging around here, who are responsible for the fact that there is no retirement bill on the statute books now. I only hope that the civil-service employees of the Government will be made to understand that some of these days. They will if I have the ability to make them understand it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that the civil-service employees are quite united now and know just where they stand in regard to civil-service retirement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to say just a word?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course I am not going to argue the matter with the Senator from Ohio further than to say that in the fight last year, when we had this bill up as the unfinished business for nearly two months, if he was the friend of the civil-service employee, then I say God help the civil-service employee, because to my notion no man ever fought a measure with more vigor and with more success than the Senator from Ohio fought the civil-service retirement measure that was then before the Senate, which is substantially the same as the present measure.

I hope the Senate will vote this afternoon to make it the unfinished business. I do not think we ought to delay. I think we ought to proceed with the work. Of course we all have committee work which we are obliged to attend to, and it is important, as Senators may look at it. Each one, perhaps, thinks that his own business is the most important; but there is time to argue the case here, and the Senator from Ohio will have the time, and if the Senate takes it up and makes it the unfinished business and proceeds to the consideration of it we will find the Senator from Ohio on the floor arguing against it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the motion will prevail for taking up this bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator withhold that suggestion for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask unanimous consent to have amended a resolution that was passed some time ago authorizing the Interstate Commerce Committee to investigate the Federal Trade Commission. I have been told by the financial officer of the Senate that under the present resolution the committee are not authorized to take testimony outside of the city of Washington. I offer a resolution for the purpose of granting that authority, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 295) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 217, agreed to December 3, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to authorize the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, to sit and act at such times and places as it may deem necessary, the expenses of travel incident to such sessions to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will not the resolution have to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not suppose that would be necessary. I was told that it would not. The authorization was made heretofore, and the only question was whether we could pay for testimony taken outside of the city of Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, in this little lull of important action I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar Order of Business 358, Senate bill 3738, to abolish the United States Housing Corporation. I believe it will take but a very little time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending motion.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think in the present condition, if the Senator will pardon me, this motion should be disposed of before taking up the other matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1699.

Mr. POMERENE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	McKellar	Robinson
Beckham	Gore	McNary	Sheppard
Borah	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Henderson	Norris	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Underwood
Elkins	Lodge	Pomerene	Watson
Fernald	McCormick	Ransdell

Mr. ROBINSON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] are detained from the Chamber by a meeting of the conference committee on the railroad bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to his name when called.

Mr. GRONNA entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. HALE, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1699.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to my colleague [Mr. NEW] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I have a pair with that Senator during his absence, but on this motion I can transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ball	Glass	McCormick	Sheppard
Beckham	Gronna	McKellar	Spencer

McCumber	Penrose	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
McLean	Phelan	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

On a division, the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	Moses	Sheppard
Beckham	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Henderson	Norris	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sutherland
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Townsend
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Underwood
Glass	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Gronna	McKellar	Ransdell	Watson
Hale	McNary	Robinson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. McCORMICK and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. NUGENT, Mr SHERMAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. KELLOGG entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. WADSWORTH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we have been here for some time trying to get a quorum and evidently can not get one. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. NEW entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will yield to me that I may request the consideration of a conference report? I think it will take only a short while to dispose of the report.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are in the midst of a roll call on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and no motion, the Chair understands, is in order except to adjourn, to take a recess, or to go into executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; I withdraw my request.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT The Senator from South Dakota will state it.

Mr. STERLING. The pending motion is the motion to take up Senate bill 1699, and does a motion to go into executive session supplant that motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Motions to adjourn, to take a recess, or to go into executive session are always in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 5, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 4, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, come very close to us as we thus seek Thy presence. By Thy wisdom guide us, by Thy power uphold us, by Thy love purify us, that with brave and manly hearts we may meet the issues of life as they unfold themselves.

The weight of a great Nation is resting upon the shoulders of these Thy servants. More than a hundred millions of people are hanging breathless upon its fate. May the acts of the Members of this House follow the lead of the great statesmen of the past and inspire to happiness and prosperity for our Republic and for all the world. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 17, 1920:

H. R. 484. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo.;

H. R. 3175. An act authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation;

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army; and

H. R. 8084. An act granting to certain claimants the preferred right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

On January 23, 1920:

H. R. 9089. An act releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes; and

H. R. 9183. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old postoffice property in New Haven, Conn.

On January 24, 1920:

H. R. 2980. An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States;

H. R. 10137. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10331. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918.

On January 27, 1920:

H. R. 1216. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889.

On February 3, 1920:

H. R. 11606. An act to authorize the county of Fountain, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I submitted the matter to the Speaker which shows a question of privilege, and I understand the Speaker holds it is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did submit it to the Speaker, but the Chair thinks the gentleman had better submit it to the House, so that it can be done with the knowledge of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on January 29, 1920, I made certain charges concerning the war record of Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, most of which I had previously made on January 24, 1920, before the Committee on Rules. Concerning those charges in the daily Washington Herald of February 2 appears this heading:

Texas Member flayed by Gompers—Says Blanton "Knows not truth and would not tell it if he did."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." When I confronted Mr. Samuel Gompers with his unenviable war record and his present alliance with and defense of radical anarchists now striving to overthrow this Government by force and violence, he is unable to answer such indictments with evidence or argument, but resorts to personal abuse, villification, and a futile attempt to "muddy the waters." West Texas rules of fair play prevent striking a woman, an old man, or a cripple. Did I care to belittle myself, nothing prohibits me from using Mr. Gompers's weapons, but I will not call him a dirty, cowardly liar, because he is an old man 80 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, my charges against Mr. Samuel Gompers and his associated labor leaders were published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last Thursday, January 29, 1920, on pages 2203 to 2211, which came to the immediate attention of Mr. Gompers and the American Federation of Labor. I had previously made these same charges in the hearings before the Rules Committee on January 24, 1920, Mr. Gompers's attorney, Ralston, sitting within 5 feet of me at the time.

But not until day before yesterday, February 2, 1920, through the daily press, did Samuel Gompers give the public the benefit of any denial, and then, except as to two specific points, he merely entered a general denial, as we call it in court, by arrogantly asserting that my whole charges were false. The two particulars which he specifically denied were (1) that he and organized labor did not oppose the "work-or-fight" slogan, and (2) that no member of the unions in Washington was threatened with being fined if he did not march in the "beer and wine" parade staged by Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor in marching against the Capitol on Flag Day in protest against national prohibition and the Constitution.

Now, let us take the shorter one first. The issue is clear and clean cut. Only one of us has told the truth. Which one, Mr. Gompers or myself? I said that members of unions were threatened with being fined if they did not attend the Gompers liquor parade on Flag Day. Mr. Gompers says that I lied. Now for the proof.

Flag Day was on Saturday, June 14, 1919. The liquor parade occurred that afternoon at 2 o'clock. In the Washington Star for Friday, June 13, 1919, column 1 of page 3, under head of "Special Notices," appears the following union notice:

All members of Bricklayers' Union No. 1, District of Columbia, are ordered to meet at Union Station, June 14, 1919, at 1.30 o'clock sharp. Failing to appear, they shall be fined according to article 24, section 10.
M. A. WOLFE, Recording Secretary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notice that these American citizens belonging to this Bricklayers' Union No. 1, of Washington, D. C., were not requested to voluntarily come but were ordered to be there at the Union Station at 1.30 o'clock sharp, to do what? To march in a "beer and wine" parade, protesting against national prohibition, in connection with the public threat made by Mr. Gompers that the members of organized labor would not stand for their beer and wine to be taken from them, when many of the members of this union are likely sober prohibitionists who sincerely believe in and approve the constitutional amendment providing for national prohibition. And what was the penalty? If any good prohibitionist member of this union refused to leave his work and be at the Union Station promptly at 1.30, to march in this "beer and wine" parade staged by Mr. Gompers against the Constitution of his country, he was notified that he would be fined according to article 24, section 10, of said union. Now, which of us told the truth, Mr. Gompers or myself? I said they either had to march or be fined. Mr. Gompers says I lied. I have produced the proof.

In the same issue of said Washington Star, under said head, appears the following:

Plasterers and cement finishers, members of Local 96, will assemble at Fifth and F Streets NW., at 1.45, to participate in the Flag Day demonstration of labor against prohibition.
J. H. ELLIOTT, President.
E. P. FINN, Secretary.

And, Mr. Speaker, such union-labor notices of like tenor appeared in other Washington newspapers; for instance, in the Washington Times (final) issue of June 13, 1919, column 5, page 25, under special notices. As president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Gompers is thoroughly familiar with the provision of said article 24, section 10, cited by said Bricklayers' Union, and knows that under same, when such union orders its members to act, for any failure to respond they can be fined from $5 up. I do not blame him for wanting to keep knowledge of such matters from the general public.

It is just such autocratic domineering of union members, attempting to force sober prohibitionists to march in a "beer and wine" parade against national prohibition and the Constitution, that has caused many loyal, patriotic union members to desert Mr. Gompers. This radical wolf has been too long posing in sheep's clothing as a conservative. Mr. Gompers will not claim that there is any radicalism in Cigar Makers' Union No. 144, of which he has been a member for more than an ordinary lifetime, and from which union, as one of its officers, he became the president of the American Federation of Labor. Yet in the recent election in this union to select a delegate the loyal, patriotic American citizens in such union unhesitatingly turned Mr. Gompers down and selected Morris Brown to represent them, Mr. Gompers being fourth in the race. Read the following from one of the New York newspapers:

Among the Central Federated Union delegates to appear before Samuel Gompers to-day and receive their spanking is Morris Brown, who recently defeated Mr. Gompers in the election by Local 144 of the Cigar Makers' Union, of which Mr. Gompers is a member. Mr. Gompers believes that by spanking Brown sufficiently in the proper place, Brown will be unable to take his seat at the convention.

Do you suppose that if Mr. Gompers stood for true Americanism and was not such an autocratic despot his own lifetime union would have turned him down, telling him to "Begone; we are done with you"?

Mr. MAHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to get through.

Mr. MAHER. Just for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I can not. I must get through and answer these matters which I said I would speak of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me read you a letter just received from the New York Printing Pressmen's Union, No. 51:

OFFICE NEW YORK PRINTING PRESSMEN'S UNION, No. 51,
New York, February 2, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Samuel Gompers is not the true representative of labor or the true ideals of labor. He is now in New York City playing the cheapest kind of peanut politics.

We can not get rid of him, as our method of elections is such that the rank and file of true Americans can not get a crack at him. His old cigar makers' union defeated him, and he was fourth in the race.

If the rank and file of labor could get a referendum vote, he would be removed. I want you to send me a copy of your last speech showing his want of Americanism. If you want some real data to "skin a skunk," I will send you same.

I have no personal grievance against him, but he disgraces honest labor, and with him and his type in the lead labor can never progress properly until it has a house cleaning. We who have a pride in our true Americanism look forward to a proper clean-up of our unions. I hope that I may hear from you soon.

Truly, yours,
BERNARD NOLAN,
President Union No. 51.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would admonish the gentleman that under the question of personal privilege he must confine himself, of course, strictly to the question of personal privilege. The gentleman must not include correspondence of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. I made certain charges that Mr. Gompers was not representing true labor ideals, and I made those charges specifically in the RECORD. Mr. Gompers comes back and says that I "lied in every particular, singly and collectively." I am offering proof; I am offering the statement of his own affiliated membership, the president of one of his affiliated unions, showing that I stated the truth. I am confining myself to the specific charges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should confine himself to the specific charges.

Mr. BLANTON. Samuel Gompers has threatened the United States with so many labor revolutions that it is hard to count them all. They have been coming thick and fast ever since Congress was thereby forced to pass the Adamson law.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I regret that I have not the time.

Does any sane man believe that the Adamson law would have been passed if organized labor had not threatened to tie up every railroad in the United States, destroying the industrial life of this Nation, starving every large city in the United States, and bringing with it untold misery, suffering, and death upon millions of helpless women and innocent little children? It is to prevent him from denying his unenviable war record that I am taking this time of the House to keep such record straight.

Did Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor oppose and defeat through threats the "work or fight" law and the Thomas amendment that would have prevented labor unions from holding up their Government in war time and thereby force the drafting of 670,000 eighteen-year-old boys into service? I say, "Yes"; and Mr. Gompers says that I lie. Which one is telling the truth? Let us see.

On June 13, 1918, the War Department gave out the following statement:

WASHINGTON, June 13.

In view of many reports that the War Department was to ask modification of the draft law and extend the present age limit, Secretary of War Baker to-day authorized the statement that no such plan was under consideration.

The present provision for drafting men between the ages of 21 and 31 satisfies military requirements and there is no need whatever, it is explained, to look beyond those age limits now or in the near future. Mr. Baker would be opposed to any proposition to extend the age limit at present for the reason that he regards this as entirely unnecessary.

In the hearings held by the Senate Military Affairs Committee between the 10th and 18th of June, 1918, on page 20 thereof, the above statement authorized by Secretary Baker was repeated by Gen. Crowder, assuring the public and Congress that it would not be necessary to draft boys under 21 years of age, and especially would it not be necessary to draft 18-year-old boys, of which there were only 670,000.

But in connection with the above determination Gen. Crowder had decided upon putting into effect what was known as the "work-or-fight" order, which would take the exemption away from a laborer who refused to work and put him in the trenches to fight. At this juncture Mr. Gompers and the American Federation of Labor stepped in and said that our Government should not apply the "work-or-fight" order to organized labor, as it would not stand for it. So shortly after Congress got back into harness again, in August, after the July primaries in 1918, the War Department was forced to change its plans and request Congress to draft 18, 19, and 20 year old boys. But Senator THOMAS offered an amendment to the proposed law preventing laborers who had been exempted on industrial grounds from striking during the war without losing their exemption, which in effect carried out the "work-or-fight" idea.

The Washington Star for Wednesday, August 14, 1918, on page 10, column 3, in large headlines says:

LABOR OPPOSES "WORK-OR-FIGHT" PLAN.

Organized labor's emphatic opposition to any work-or-fight provision in the new man-power bill extending the draft ages is expressed in a letter from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, received to-day by members of the Senate Military Committee.

In this letter sent to Senators Mr. Gompers threatened that if it were attempted to force service out of labor by law it would cause a "reaction." And he took his stand against the Thomas amendment and against any "work-or-fight" order.

The Washington Times (final) for August 20, 1918, on page 1, column 5, said:

The Thomas "work-or-fight" amendment to the man-power bill is an insult to labor, Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, charged before the House Military Affairs Committee.

The Washington Star for Tuesday, August 20, 1918, page 1, column 3, said:

"WORK OR FIGHT" DECEPTIVE PLAN, SAYS LABOR CHIEF—SECRETARY MORRISON OPPOSES SENATOR THOMAS'S AMENDMENT TO MAN-POWER BILL.

Organized labor's emphatic opposition to the "work-or-fight" amendment to the new man-power bill extending the draft ages was presented to the House Military Affairs Committee to-day by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor.

Supporting the recent protest of Samuel Gompers, Mr. Morrison declared that the provision inserted by the Senate committee authorizing withdrawal of deferred classification from men absent from work without cause was an attack upon workmen and would be resented in every corner of the country. * * * Declaring that the "work-or-fight" amendment was "a deceptive method" of labor conscription, Mr. Morrison said: "Its author, Senator THOMAS, admits it is aimed at strikes. Conscription of labor in this covert way will be resented in every corner of the country." * * * Representative HARRISON declared that workmen are given the "privilege" of working instead of being sent to the firing line, but Secretary Morrison denied that it was a privilege.

The Washington Post for Thursday, August 22, 1918, on page 2, column 3, says:

OPPOSITION TO "WORK OR FIGHT."

The only serious controversies expected are over the "work-or-fight" amendment and the amendment postponing service for boys 18 and 19. * * *

For the work-or-fight legislation, opposed by organized labor, Chairman CHAMBERLAIN and Senator THOMAS are prepared to make a vigorous fight, with its disposition in doubt.

The Washington Post for Friday, August 23, 1918, on page 2, column 2, concerning the "work-or-fight" provision, said:

TELLS OF LABOR PROTESTS.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN said he had received telegrams of protest from 109 labor leaders.

The Washington Post for Saturday, August 31, 1918, page 3, column 1, said:

THOMAS WORK-OR-FIGHT CLAUSE STRICKEN OUT AFTER DEBATE—"WORK-OR-FIGHT" DEBATE.

Senate debate yesterday centered on the elimination of the "work-or-fight" amendment by the conferees. Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, author of the amendment, and MCCUMBER, of North Dakota, vehemently protested against the striking out of the provision, which has been fought by organized labor. * * * Senator THOMAS said that workmen who are exempted to work, and fail to do their duty, "are traitors, stabbing our soldiers in the back."

And notwithstanding the fact that the War Department had 21,000,000 available grown men in military age from which to select only 2,300,000 needed soldiers, and by putting into effect the "work-or-fight" order it could have gotten twice the number needed, without taking any of the 18 and 19 year old boys, Mr. Gompers and his American Federation of Labor killed the work-or-fight plan, would not let it apply to the exempted laborers, and thus forced 670,000 18-year-old boys to be drafted into the service. And his men continued to strike. And posted men know how many times the President had to order them to go back to work in order to meet our military requirements. The President had to pet, cajole, praise, applaud, and eulogize Samuel Gompers periodically in order to get any kind of performance out of him.

Now, in this connection it may be of interest to observe the sentiments expressed by some Representatives during this debate. Let me read a few excerpts of speeches from the RECORD. From my own speech on August 23, 1918:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is undisputed in the record that there are within the United States 23,000,000 men within the ages of 18 and 45 years, of which number we have called already 2,000,000 men, leaving 21,000,000 subject to call, and out of which number we must get the required number under this draft provision now before the House. The question has been asked here repeatedly, and still remains unanswered, Why is it necessary to resort to boys 18 years of age when we have 21,000,000 men from which to select only 2,300,000 new soldiers, and the record further shows that there are only 670,000 of these boys? * * * It is a question of labor organizations that have had so many men exempted of these 21,000,000 available men that it is claimed to be necessary to take 670,000 18-year-old boys from their homes. [Applause.]

I have lately come from my district, where, with an election staring me in the face, I looked into the eyes of my constituents and told them without a tremor that I was going to vote to give the President of the United States every dollar and every soldier he demanded, no matter how far down the line it cut; that if it took their 14-year-old boys I was going to vote to put them in; and they applauded me for it, and I stand ready to make that good.

It is simply a question as to when it becomes necessary; but when we can draft into the service of the United States the railroad corporations of the country, when we can draft into the service of the United States the telegraph and telephone lines, when we can take the money from the big corporations of the United States, when we can take everything, shall it be said that when we get to organized labor we have got to keep our hands off? On June 13, two months ago, the Secretary of War said that we would not have to take the boys, that we would not need any new draft legislation, but at the same time, in almost that same breath, he said that there would be another order immediately promulgated and put into effect by the War Department. That order was that the men of this country must work or they must fight. Ah! Has this work-or-fight order made it necessary to use 18-year-old boys in the trenches? When he said that, we found Mr. Gompers coming in and saying, "You can not apply that 'work-or-fight order" to the labor organizations of this country." I told my people that when I came to Congress I was as good a friend as labor organizations ever had, but that since I had been in Congress a few months I had come to the conclusion that henceforth labor organizations must show me in future that they are right before I am going to vote for a single one of their demands.

As long as this war lasts I am going to vote to give the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, every dollar and every soldier and everything else he deems necessary and asks for to win this war quickly and successfully; but the President has not asked Congress to draft 18-year-old boys into the trenches.

I told my people that when Mr. Gompers stepped in and told me that we could take everything in the world so long as we did not interfere with organized labor, but we could not withdraw an exemption whenever an exempted laborer refused to do some necessary work needed to win the war, that we could not do this and could not do that, I would tell Mr. Gompers to go to hell. [Laughter and applause.]

Under the Constitution of the United States we can not draft labor. I realize that. I will tell you something that we can do: When the laboring man, a member of organized labor, comes in and gets exemption by reason of an industrial enterprise in which he is engaged, if he refuses to work in that or some other essential enterprise, we can take that exemption away from him under the Constitution of the United States and make him fight when he refuses to work. That is exactly what I hope this Congress will do.

I am going to offer an amendment such as the Senate amendment, to this bill, if it is not offered by older Members. I hope when the time comes that the manhood of Congress will stand up and tell organized labor that they are going to be just with them, but they are going to make organized labor stand up and justly take its medicine with every other citizen of the United States and either work or fight to win this war. [Applause.]

[From speech of Congressman POU, Aug. 23, 1918.]

This proposition comes with great suddenness. A few weeks ago, less than six weeks ago, the statement was published that any new draft would probably not go below 21; probably, indeed, not below 20; certainly there was not even a suggestion that boys of 18 would be asked for. Now suddenly we are confronted with the proposal to take the 18-year-old boys and send them across the water after a brief training, possibly after a few months, to take their places with older men on the firing line. Since this proposition was submitted I have made it a point to investigate for myself the military fitness of the 18-year-old boy, and, while it does not concern me personally, for my home already is empty and silent, I can not bring myself to the conclusion that it is right at this time to make this sacrifice.

The question is, Shall we send minors to the front while thousands of mature men who could go are exempted and allowed to remain at home?

We in framing the new draft law must choose between the minor, the 18-year-old boy, and the shirker and slacker. To me my duty is plain. Until the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, shall proclaim that the hour has come for the 18-year-old boys to go, for my part I can not by my vote make those boys go. [Applause.]

France, glorious France, invaded and drenched in blood, has not yet ordered her 18-year-old boys to the firing line. Here in America in every community there are grown men who ought to go before the boys are sent.

[From speech of Congressman HARRISON, Aug. 22, 1918.]

There is no place in this country for the loafer and the nonproducer, and I do not care if such a one belongs to the idle rich or to the hobo class. He should not be a tax on the productive energy of the worker. "Work or fight" is the slogan. A slacker who reverses the scriptural rule by working on Sunday for double pay and who rests the greater part of the week is better fitted for the Army discipline than for a place in industrial life. I think this rule of work or fight should apply to everybody—rich or poor—labor, industrial or agricultural. There should be no exception.

[From speech of Congressman MONDELL, Aug. 22, 1918.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the McKenzie amendment placing the men of the ages of 18 and 19, which it is proposed to draft under the bill, in separate classes to be called later than the men above 20; but I shall also offer, if I have the opportunity, or vote for if offered by some one else, an amendment eliminating from the draft men of 18 and 19 years of age.

Within 30 days the President has more than once expressed himself in a way to make it clearly evident that he doubted the wisdom, the advisability, or the necessity of reducing the draft age as it is now proposed to reduce it. Within a like period the Secretary of War has expressed himself in like manner, and his evidence before the Military Committees of the House and Senate within the past few days clearly evidences a doubt on his part even now of the necessity or of the wisdom of the reduction to the age of 18.

Before the Senate committee the Secretary stated that it was with the greatest reluctance that he had agreed to the proposal to reduce the draft age to 18. He called attention in his testimony before the House committee, as did the President, in a recent letter to Secretary Lane, to the harm that would come to the country should the education of the youth of the land be interfered with and interrupted as would occur if all able-bodied boys above 18 were inducted into the service.

[From Congressman Gordon's speech, Aug. 22, 1918.]

I shall support the McKenzie amendment. If I could have my way I would strike out the ages of 18 and 19 and make 20 the minimum age, on the ground of efficiency. When men stand here and tell me that with 20,000,000 men in this country we are reduced to the absolute necessity of drafting boys, they simply speak against common sense. No man on this floor believes any such thing as that.

We have heard the Secretary of War quoted here as to the military necessity of drafting these boys. I want to read you what the Secretary of War said in an authorized statement on June 13 last. That statement was repeated by Gen. Crowder in the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and you will find it on page 20 of the hearings dated June 10–18.

Now, what has happened since the 13th of June to change that situation? If we admit that he has changed his mind, what reasons have been given for it? Is it possible that this House is going to vote to give notice to the wide world, including the public enemy, that we are reduced to the extremity in the second year of the war of drafting boys?

[From speech of Congressman GRIFFIN, Aug. 23, 1918.]

I have been trying to fathom the animus of the advocates of this McKenzie amendment, and at last it was disclosed in the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who threatened to send Mr. Gompers to hell.

There is the animus—opposition to the labor unions. Now, gentlemen, do you not know that the majority of the men who have been put into the deferred classification are engaged in industries which are essential to the war, and would it surprise you, or need it surprise you, to learn that the majority of those men engaged in riveting the steel structures of our ships and in the other industries essential to this war are members of labor unions?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I stated that when Mr. Gompers asked us to do with organized labor something that was not right, then so and so should happen, and I would like to ask the gentleman what he would say to Mr. Gompers if Mr. Gompers told him that the proposition of work or fight should not apply to the laboring class of people of America?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not want to go into that now.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think the gentleman would.

[From speech of Congressman WILLIAMS, Aug. 23, 1918.]

I have listened carefully to the debates and have failed to hear a single argument advanced convincing to me of the necessity of lowering the draft age to 18 to secure the additional men required. There is no argument against raising the age limit to 45. The whole country approves of that proposition. It is estimated there are 21,000,000 men in the country between the ages of 21 and 45. Three million are already in the Army, leaving 18,000,000 to draw from to get the required extra 2,000,000. Does anyone undertake to say these 2,000,000 men can not be obtained out of this great reservoir of man power, and obtained quickly and easily?

We should not take a single boy under age by the draft until every available man physically fit and liable for military service under the rules and regulations of the draft has been taken between the ages of 21 and 45 years.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I could encumber the RECORD with numerous other unanswerable arguments that were made against drafting the 670,000 18-year-old boys. But Mr. Samuel Gompers and his American Federation of Labor won their fight against the "work-or-fight" proposition, and Congress bowed to such autocratic will and eliminated the Thomas "work-or-fight" amendment and drafted the 18-year-old boys.

Now, Mr. Gompers asserts that my charges, singly and collectively, are malicious lies. One of my charges was:

(4) That during war time, from April 6, 1917, until November 11, 1918, Mr. Gompers permitted 6,000 strikes in the United States, of an average duration of 18 days each, and in many instances the President had to command the men to return to work by threats.

Is there a man in this House who will question that? They were exempted from the draft. Was this charge false? Is there a posted man who does not know that the President had to command strikers to return to work? And did he not permit 6,000 strikes? Here is the proof:

NUMBER OF WAR STRIKES CERTIFIED TO BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 6, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 23, 1919, addressed to Hon. W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, is received. In reply thereto I will say that the Bureau of Labor Statistics of this department compiles, from various newspapers and other sources, as complete a list as possible of all strikes that occur. This list is not complete, and it may also contain some duplications, because it is not always possible to tell from newspaper reports whether the report is concerning a new strike or whether it refers to a strike previously reported. Therefore the figures given can not be more than an approximation. After eliminating duplicates as far as possible this list shows that there were approximately 6,000 strikes between April 6, 1917, and November, 1918, the average duration of which was approximately 17 or 18 days.

Regretting that I am unable to furnish you more accurate information, and trusting that this approximate figure may be of some value to you, I am,

Very truly, yours,

H. L. KERWIN,
Assistant to the Secretary.

Now, what were the other charges I made against him, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD January 29, 1920? Let me quote them:

Mr. Gompers got members of union labor exempted from the draft.

He helped to put the cost plus 10 per cent profit provision in war contracts, by which the Government was swindled out of hundreds of millions of dollars, and saw-and-hammer men with union cards were paid as high as $15 per day for doing little or nothing.

I have men in my district who never did any carpenter work in their lives who were paid as high as $15 a day for carpenter work on these cantonments, and they were told day after day not to work too fast, because if they did they would be fired; to make the work last out as long as possible. These men will make affidavits to that effect.

Another one:

When it was proposed in giving the 240,000 Government employees drawing salaries up to $2,500 per annum a bonus of $120, that they should work eight instead of only seven hours per day, Mr. Gompers said that to make them work eight hours "was damnable," and by threats of marching on the Capitol and of having the employees walk out and leave the Government helpless in war time, he forced the President to veto the law, and the clerks continued to work only seven hours, although drawing the $120 bonus, and later the $240 bonus, which Mr.

Gompers forced from Congress. These employees get 30 days' vacation each year on full pay, 30 days' additional on doctor's certificate on full pay, all 52 Sundays, all holidays, half of each Saturday during the three summer months, and all special occasions, so numerous in Washington, besides working in comfortable buildings, under pleasant surroundings, getting their pay in cash twice a month, enjoying all the free pleasures provided for them here, the parks, the swimming pools, the tennis, polo, and cricket grounds, the horseback-riding paths, the many public buildings of interest, the Zoological Gardens, the museums, the lovely Congressional Library, the fine churches, the splendid theaters, and the miles and miles of paved streets which have been half built with the people's money of the United States. And all the while we had 2,000,000 soldiers in foreign lands, working sometimes 24 hours out of 24 for $33 per month, when a falter meant court-martial and dishonorable death by shooting against a brick wall, facing death in trenches knee-deep with mud, cootie infested, and who on return to their native land, victorious, received only a paltry $60 bonus, and not one word has Samuel Gompers ever said to a Republican Congress to do one single thing for them, a returned victorious army.

Another charge:

Mr. Gompers permitted the four railroad brotherhoods during war, through death threats of murdering the industrial life of this Nation by tying up every railroad so tight it could not run, which meant defeat of the war to the United States and our allies, to force Director McAdoo to hand over to them $754,000,000 in cold cash, and then later permitted them through such threats to force Director Hines to hand over to them $67,000,000 more in cold cash, and has lately permitted them to force Director Hines to hand over more millions in cold cash, with promise of still more, and has forced a law that makes all these raises permanent to be passed by the House and now held up in the Senate, and has threatened a revolution if Congress protects the people by passing an antistrike provision in the railroad bill.

Another one:

Notwithstanding that in his book W. Z. Foster preached the overthrow of this Government by force and violence and advised the anarchists of this country that the way to do it was to "bore from within" and to accomplish it through the labor unions of this country by first getting under control the constabulary, having all peace officers, policemen, and firemen join unions, and in this way get the Government under control, by taking charge of it through force and violence, Mr. Samuel Gompers selected this anarchist, W. Z. Foster, to conduct the steel strike and put him in charge of it—a steel strike, when some of the steel workers were getting as high as $40 a day. And then he helped with the coal strike, whereby every man, woman, and child was discomforted and caused to suffer. And Mr. Gompers criticized the court for granting an injunction, denounced our courts, and denounced the President, claiming that he was promised that the Lever law would not apply to his unions, but that unions should be exempt, but every other of the 110,000,000 people should be affected by it. And he again threatened revolution and a disregard for and disobedience to the law of the land.

Another one:

And when the anarchist, W. Z. Foster, did carry out his program by "boring from within" and having the policemen join and strike, when the Boston police turned Boston over to thugs, and in one night $300,000 worth of property was destroyed and women were attacked and many crimes committed, it was Mr. Gompers who defended the police and tried to defeat Gov. Coolidge, who stood for law and order. And it was Mr. Gompers who threatened Congress time and again when we passed the two measures preventing policemen and firemen in the District of Columbia from joining the American Federation of Labor or any other strike organization.

It was Mr. Gompers who sat on the platform with Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted bomb-throwing anarchist of California, at the Atlantic City convention of the American Federation of Labor and helped to applaud Secretary of Labor W. B. Wilson when he said that he and the Government was doing much to free Mooney and was not done yet, but still trying to free him. And after the President removed Frederick C. Howe from Secretary Wilson's employ because Howe had helped thousands of anarchists to escape, it was Mr. Gompers who helped to put said Howe in charge of the Plumb Plan League, which is now robbing the union laborers of the country out of at least $10,000,000.

It was Samuel Gompers who helped the McNamaras in California and again helped the anarchist Mooney.

It was Samuel Gompers who led the parade of the American Federation of Labor from Atlantic City in its historic march on the Capitol, on last Flag Day, protesting against the Constitution and threatening that unless the union laborers got their beer and wine there would be a revolution.

Mr. Speaker, the files of any reputable daily newspaper during the past few years and the general knowledge of the intelligent, posted readers of this Nation confirm each and every one of the foregoing charges, and Mr. Gompers can not escape his unenviable war record by the general assertion that same are lies. The overwhelming proof is against him. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. He can not escape. He can not warp or change it. It is a matter of history.

Now, let me call the attention of this House to another thing, and then I am done. I asserted that it was Mr. Gompers who had killed the antisedition bill before the Rules Committee. Is there a man in this House who denies that? If there is, I yield to you. I want to see who you are. He did kill it, and you know it and I know it. When we have spent millions, through both the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice, to apprehend anarchists—and we have apprehended 60,000 of them—and the Attorney General tells us and has told the chairman of the Committee on Rules that he must have additional law with which to wipe out anarchy in this country, we are denied the privilege—Congress is denied the privilege—of giving the people proper legislation asked for by the Attorney General.

I appeared before the Rules Committee on the 24th of January, 1920, in behalf of that bill and made most of these statements concerning the attitude of Mr. Gompers with respect to anarchy. Right after I appeared before that committee, immediately following me that morning, my colleague from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] appeared and was heard. He immediately followed me in that hearing. That was on the 24th day of January, mind you. Others followed on that day, and the hearings closed before the 27th day of January. When—before the hearings were held, on January 17, 1920—I asserted that Mr. Gompers was dictating to the chairman of the Rules Committee, our good friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], got up here and said Mr. Gompers had not done it. That was in reply to the reference I made to the New York papers of Saturday, the 17th of January. I want to show you that this great president of the American Federation of Labor does have a wonderful influence over this chairman. After I appeared before the committee on January 24, 1920, and Representative DAVEY followed me, and others followed us on that day, then, on the 27th day of January, 1920, when those hearings had been virtually closed, Mr. Gompers sat down in his office down here in the American Federation of Labor Temple and wrote all these vicious, vituperative charges against me. Did he appear before the committee and stand up like a man and put those things in the record in a public way? No; he sent that document to our distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, and said, "Phil., I want you to put this in, and I want you to put it in right after BLANTON'S statement." It called a Congressman a liar, without any proof. It said, "BLANTON is this and that." It called me every name you can think of, and Mr. Gompers said, "Phil., I know that you will be willing to put that in without telling Blanton anything about it. I know that although the hearing is closed you will stick that into the record as a part of the hearings, and although it is dated January 27, 1920, and BLANTON and DAVEY made their statements on January 24, 1920, you will stick my letter of January 27, 1920, in between the statements of BLANTON and DAVEY made on January 24, 1920." This all appears in the printed hearing. And, without notice to me, Chairman CAMPBELL did stick it in as a part of the hearings. I was given no notice of it. It was not a part of the hearings. The numerous pages of that vituperation and personal abuse were not a part of the hearings. I gave Mr. Gompers a chance to confront me when I made my statement. His attorney, Ralston, was sitting within 5 feet of me and heard every word I uttered. Why, gentlemen, my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the Republican chairman of the Rules Committee, ought to have done me the justice to let me know something about it instead of publishing all this mass of vituperation and personal abuse in this document and giving me no chance to answer it when the hearings were closed and it did not form any part of the hearings.

Gompers said, "Phil, put it in"; and my friend Phil, who employs three or four tonsorial artists to keep busy all day trying to train his hair to hang down and make him look like Bobby Burns [laughter]—he put it in, and then ran off; and I have not seen him since. He would not say a word. He would not give the newspapers anything about it until after it had been officially printed on the 1st day of February, and then all this mass came out in the newspapers on the 2d of February. Is that the way you Republicans conduct a fight against the Democrats? I do not believe it. You are fairer men. I meet you on the square. You men know that I never say anything about anybody behind their backs that I will not say to their faces. Why did not PHILIP CAMPBELL, in all fairness, tell me about these things that he was requested by Samuel Gompers to put into the hearings as a part of the record and which did not constitute any part of the hearings? And why did he not give me a chance to answer them before he wronged me and wronged the record of the hearings by putting same in it? But I am not mad at him. He is a fine fellow, after all. I like him. Phil does the best he knows how under the circumstances. [Laughter.] He thought that was all right. He did not think there was any impropriety in sticking that great, big mess into the hearings. Samuel Gompers asked it! I know what it means to Phil, and I know what it means to my colleagues.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am going to get to the gentleman from New York in just a minute.

Mr. SNELL. I think if the gentleman has any controversy with Mr. CAMPBELL, he ought to wait until the gentleman is present.

Mr. BLANTON. I am now done with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. I am now going to take up the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. Now, every time anything comes up against the American Federation of Labor and Samuel Gompers, the great dictator, I will tell you why the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] arises. He knows——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rose to a question of personal privilege. He ought to confine himself to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but when a Member interrupts me I think I have the right to answer him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to his question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not embarrass the gentleman from New York; but whenever anyone attacks union labor as I have done, I will tell you why there is always some fellow ready to jump up here in the House, and I will tell you why there are always some fellows ready to applaud him. It is because they know that as soon as they get outside, Mr. Gompers pats them on the back and says, "I will bring you back one more term. I will not promise to bring you back more than one more term, because I have got all of you on probation." It is just like the powers in the great State of Pennsylvania are now saying to all their would-be officers, "Now, organized labor is going to send you a questionnaire—every candidate—inquiring whether if elected you will do our bidding whenever organized labor calls on you, and whether you will repeal the Volstead Prohibition Act, and whether you will agree to repeal the constitutional amendment; and if you answer that you are going to vote against prohibition, and that you are going to vote to repeal the Volstead law, and that you are going to vote to resubmit the prohibition amendment to the people in the way of a convention, and that you will always stand by organized labor—if you answer these questions all right we do not give a continental whether you are a Democrat or a Republican or a mugwump, union labor is behind you and will elect you." That is the way it is in Pennsylvania just now. If you oppose prohibition and stand by union labor, they promise to bring you back the next time.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Was that a union-labor organization or a booze organization?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they always go together. I refer to their leaders. You can not separate them. Not the great, splendid, loyal, patriotic men who belong to these unions and never have a vote, like this president of the union from New York, who writes me that they do not get a vote in the referendum; not this great, fine body of men; but I am talking about the leaders like Mr. Gompers, who on Flag Day marches on the Capitol, and whose unions, in the newspapers of Washington, put notices, "If you do not appear, prohibitionists or otherwise, and march in protest against prohibition and the Constitution we are going to fine you."

My friend from California ought to be well versed in that. But I am done. I will submit the charges I have made against Mr. Gompers and his associated labor leaders to the fair-minded, intelligent, well-posted, reading public of America. They know that these charges have plenty of foundation, and my colleagues know it. And my colleagues are, deep down in their hearts, except a few who have labor cards in their pockets—most of my colleagues—think like I do on this subject, but they can say nothing. I sympathize with you. [Laughter.]

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds may sit during the session of the House to-morrow in order to complete a hearing on the soldiers' hospital bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds may sit during the session to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11368, an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we had better have the report read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 24, 32, 35, 47, 73, 74, 90, 121, 125.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, and 133, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "forty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "eighty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend not less than $15,000 out of applicable funds in the work of determining the competency of Indians by competency commissions on Indian reservations outside of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"For the construction of a bridge across Salt River, on the Salt River Indian Reservation, near Lehi, Ariz., $15,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians on the Salt River Reservation, to remain a charge and lien upon the funds of said tribe of Indians until paid: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Arizona in the construction of said bridge: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Arizona, or the County of Maricopa, satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said State or county of at least three-fourths of the cost of the construction of said bridge: Provided further, That the said State or county shall agree to defray all expense of the maintenance and repair of said bridge and its approaches and to keep the same in good condition at all times."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"FLORIDA.

"SEC. 4. For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education, $5,000, including the construction and equipment of necessary buildings."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1920, a report relating to the construction, enlargement, and improvement of said Fort Hall irrigation project, including the irrigation of such additional lands as may appear to be feasible and practicable, together with the estimated cost of such irrigation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used except for school or schools of the Mississippi Chippewas now in the State of Minnesota."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of the above amount shall be used to aid the public schools in the Chippewa country: Provided further, That Indian children shall at all times be admitted to said schools on the same terms and conditions as white children."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"For the construction of a bridge across Two Medicine Creek, on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, being a link in the highway connecting Yellowstone National Park with Glacier National Park, to be paid out of funds now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Blackfeet Indians, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"To reimburse the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., for 253.04 acres of land embraced within the boundaries of the Verendrye National Monument, established by presidenital proclamation of June 29, 1917, the sum of $1,265.20, representing the appraised value of said land at $5 per acre: Provided, That the sum appropriated shall be subject to expenditure upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$195,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"Provided further, That until further provided by Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, is authorized to make per capita payments of not to exceed $200 annually hereafter to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma, entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, of all the available money held by the Government of the United States for the benefit of said tribes in excess of that required for expenditures authorized by annual appropriations made therefrom or by existing law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of any of the funds to the credit of the Indians on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, and to apply the same to the construction of a bridge and abutments and approaches thereto across the Cheyenne River in the State of South Dakota. This appropriation shall be available only on the condition that the interested counties or the South Dakota Highway Commission contribute to the cost of said bridge in the ratio of $2 for every dollar of Indian funds so expended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert "Of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians"; also, on page 57, line 17, of the engrossed bill, after the word "children," insert the following: "the tuition of such Indian children to be paid out of tribal funds to be covered into the Treasury"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$5"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment No. 4: Is simply a change of total.

On amendment No. 5: Reduces the amount for stream gauging by the Geological Survey from $4,000 to $2,000.

On amendment No. 6: For reservation purposes on the Klamath and other reservations are receded from by your committee.

On amendment No. 7: Simply corrects the totals of the various irrigation projects mentioned.

On amendment No. 8: Provides $65,000 for suppressing liquor traffic in lieu of the $75,000 granted in the House.

On amendment No. 9: Increases the amount of the Senate appropriation of $330,000, for relieving distress, to $350,000.

On amendment No. 10: Reduces the appropriation of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Hospital by $5,000.

On amendment No. 11: Decreases the appropriation for the Crow-Creek Hospital, South Dakota, from $10,000 to $8,000.

On amendment No. 12: The House recedes, with an amendment fixing the requisite number of pupils for the continuation of reservation schools at 45, and amendment No. 13, of nonreservation schools at 80.

From amendment No. 14 your conferees recede. This amendment fixes the basic number of pupils for the continuation of day schools at eight.

On amendment No. 15: Appropriates $68,000 for the transportation of pupils from and to Indian schools, reducing the amount granted by the House by $2,000, to which your conferees agree.

On amendment No. 16: Provides $460,000 for farming and stock raising, etc., a reduction of $5,000.

On amendment No. 17: Reduces the amount of House bill by $500 for telegraphing and telephoning.

On amendment No. 18: Reduces the House appropriation of $1,000 to $800 for the payment of court costs.

On amendment No. 19: Reduces by $1,000 the appropriation for judges of Indian courts.

On amendment No. 20: Providing for competency commission, was stricken out by the Senate, but your conferees receded, with an amendment reducing the amount from $25,000 to $15,000, and restoring the item in the bill.

From amendment No. 21 the House recedes.

On amendment No. 22: Was reduced by the Senate from $50,000 to $40,000, in which your conferees agree.

On amendment No. 23: The House recedes from the amendment authorizing the use of clerks as disbursing agents in the Indian Service to act in their places during any time an agent may be incapacitated.

On amendment No. 24: Was receded from by the Senate, leaving it as it passed the House. This amendment authorizes certain charges for work incident to the sale and leasing of timber.

On amendment No. 25: Reduces the appropriation for general repairs at the Phoenix School by $2,500, and amendment No. 26 corrects the total.

On amendment No. 27: Reduces the appropriation for canals on the Colorado River Reservation by $3,400.

On amendment No. 28: Makes the necessary correction in the total.

On amendment No. 29: Reduces the development of water supply for the Navajo and Hopi Indians by $5,000, to which your conferees agreed.

On amendment No. 30: Included the terms "to be immediately available," to which your conferees agreed.

On amendment No. 31: Is the same as amendment No. 30.

On amendment No. 32: From which the Senate receded, strikes out some unintelligible language, which evidently crept into the bill through error.

On amendment No. 33: For bridges over the Little Colorado and Canon Diablo Rivers is agreed to by your conferees.

On amendment No. 34: To assist in the erection of a steel bridge on the Salt River Reservation, was agreed to by your conferees with an amendment.

On amendment No. 35: The Senate receded from the words "to be immediately available."

On amendment No. 36: For the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians, was accepted by the House with an amendment reducing the amount by $5,000.

On amendment No. 38: Reduces the pay of employees of the Fort Hall Reservation by $1,000, from which your conferees receded.

On amendment No. 39: For the operation of the Fort Hall irrigation system, was reduced to $50,000, to which the House conferees agreed with an amendment.

On amendment No. 41: Was receded from by your conferees, as it reduced treaty stipulations with the Bannocks of Idaho $500.

On amendment No. 45: From this amendment your conferees receded with an amendment which provides for the expenditure of treaty funds for the establishment and maintenance of certain schools.

On amendment No. 46: Your committee receded with an amendment decreasing the amount appropriated from $85,000 to $60,000 of certain Chippewa funds.

On amendment No. 47: The Senate receded. This amendment directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an attorney of the Chippewa Indians the sum of $12,500.

On amendment No. 48: The House receded. This amendment is for the relief of distress of Choctaw Indians of Mississippi.

On amendments Nos. 51 and 51: Relate to the pay of employees under a treaty on the Crow Reservation.

On amendment No. 52: Corrects the total.

On amendment No. 53: From which the House receded, reduces the amount paid to the Northern Cheyenne and Arapahoes for certain employees by $5,000.

On amendment No. 54: From which the House receded, reduces the amount for the support and civilization of the Rocky Boy Band $1,000.

On amendment No. 55: Increases the amount for the construction and maintenance and operation of irrigation systems on the Flathead Reservation $100,000, to which your conferees agreed.

On amendment No. 56: Reduces by $50,000 the amount which may be withdrawn from moneys of the Crow Indians to expend for improvement and operation of irrigation systems.

On amendment No. 57: Provides for the construction of a bridge across Two Medicine Creek, on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, connecting Yellowstone Park with Glacier Park, and was receded from by your committee with an amendment making the funds payable out of the Treasury from the funds of the tribe.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment reduces by $5,000 the reimbursable funds which may be used on the Pyramid Lake Reservation for irrigation.

On amendment No. 62: Cuts from $25,000 to $15,000 the amount to be expended from Indian funds for roads and bridges on the Mescalero Reservation.

On amendment No. 63: Provides the expenditure of $100,000 by the Navajo tribes to purchase from their funds certain lands for their benefit.

On amendment No. 67: Decreases the amount paid at Fort Berthold Agency $500.

On amendment No. 68: Was receded from, with an amendment, by your committee. This item reimburses the Fort Berthold Indians for 253 acres taken from them by the Government for the Verendrye National Monument.

On amendment No. 70: Reduces by $200 the amount allowed for the support of the Wichitas of Oklahoma.

From amendment No. 71, for the civilization of Cheyenne and Arapahoes, the House recedes.

From amendment No. 72, reducing the amount by $200 for the support and civilization of the Kickapoo Indians, your committee receded.

The Senate receded from amendments Nos. 73 and 74, reducing the amount for employees under treaties with the Pawnees.

The House receded from amendment No. 75, authorizing certain Osage funds to be appropriated for the construction of a fireproof building.

On amendment No. 76, from which your conferees receded, provided for the sum of $10,000 to pay the expenses of the Osage tribal council for visits to Washington, D. C.

On amendment No. 77: The House receded with an amendment, which increases the Senate's appropriation $10,000, for the compensation of employees among the Five Civilized Tribes.

On amendment No. 79: The House receded with an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Interior may make per capita payments not exceeding $200 annually to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians.

On amendment No. 80: Corrects the title of a publication.

On amendment No. 82: Was receded from by your committee, as it simply reduces the pay to employees at the Klamath Agency by $250.

On amendment No. 83: Reducing from $3,000 to $2,500 the expenditures for support and civilization of the Grande Ronde and Siletz Agencies, was receded from by your committee.

On amendment No. 84: Reduces the maintenance and operation of the Modoc irrigation system $1,000 and this action was accepted by your conferees.

On amendment No. 86: Strikes out $7,000 from the $200,000 appropriated by the House for the support of different Sioux Tribes. Your committee receded from the amendment.

Your committee also receded from amendment No. 87, which the Senate reduced by $7,000 for the transportation of supplies.

On amendment No. 88: For the maintenance of the Canton Insane Asylum, reduced the amount for maintenance by $5,000. To this your committee agreed.

On amendment No. 89: Authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to withdraw $175,000, which was $10,000 less than the House appropriation, was agreed to.

On amendment No. 90: From which the Senate receded, appropriates $25,000 for construction of roads and bridges on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

On amendment No. 91: From which the House receded, allows $10,000 of the Cheyenne Indians to be withdrawn for the construction of roads and bridges.

On amendment No. 92: From which the House receded with an amendment decreasing by $15,000 the amount which may be expended for Indians on the Cheyenne Indian Reservation in the construction of bridges and dams, etc.

From amendment No. 94, appropriating $26,200 for employees at the Ute Agencies, the House receded. Amendment No. 95 simply corrects the total.

On amendment No. 96: From which the House receded, reduces by $2,000 the amount for the support and civilization of the Utah Indians.

On amendment No. 97: Receded from by the House, reduces by $50,000 the withdrawal of the Ute Indian funds. Amendments Nos. 98 and 99 provide for the distribution of this sum.

On amendment No. 100: Was receded from by the House committee with an amendment to read, after the words "white children," in line 21, page 66, as follows: "the tuition of such Indian children to be paid out of tribal funds to be covered into the Treasury."

On amendment No. 102: Reduces expense on the D'Wamish Reservations, in Washington, by $500.

On amendment No. 103: Provides for the sale of the Cushman School lands at Tacoma. Committee receded.

On amendment No. 104: Reduces by $50,000 the House appropriation of $300,000 for the cost of Wapato irrigation and drainage systems.

On amendments Nos. 105, 106, and 107: Were receded from by the House with an amendment which provides that white landowners under the Wapato irrigation system shall pay $5 per acre for each acre of land on which water can be delivered to them.

On amendment No. 108: Reduces the House appropriation of $125,000 to $75,000 for the completion of dams and canal systems on the Yakima Indian Reservation.

On amendment No. 109: Continues in the bill the reference to the unexpended balance for the construction of a road on the Quiniault Reservation the terms "to be immediately available."

On amendment No. 110: Your committee receded from this amendment, which seeks to investigate the payment of taxes on the allotted Indian lands in Washington under existing law.

On amendment No. 112: Reducing the appropriation for the Pottawatomie Indians in the State of Wisconsin from $7,000 to $6,000, was receded from by your conferees.

On amendment No. 113: Was receded from by your conferees, which provided for the support and civilization of the Pottawatomie Indians in Wisconsin, the payment to them of an unexpended balance of appropriation and the manner in which the payment shall be made.

On amendment No. 117: Provides $10,000 in part settlement of the amount due the Saint Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, to be expended in the purchase of land for the benefit of said Indians.

On amendment No. 119: Reduces the pay of certain employees on the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming.

From amendment No. 121 the Senate recedes. This amendment provides $50,000 for the so-called Riverton project in Wyoming.

On amendment No. 123: Reduces the amount authorized to be expended from funds of the various tribes for support and civilization.

On amendment No. 124: Reduces the amount appropriated for the Red Lake Indians by $12,500.

From amendment No. 125 the Senate recedes. This amendment provides for the payment of the unexpended balance on the Jicarilla Reservation.

On amendment No. 126: Reduces about $10,000 an appropriation of the Eastern Cherokees for support and civilization.

On amendment No. 127: Reduces the appropriation to $5,000 for the support and civilization of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

On amendment No. 128: Reduces by $3,000 an appropriation for the civilization and support of the Sac and Fox Indians.

On amendment No. 129: Reduces the appropriation for the support and civilization of the Lower Brule Indians $5,824.

On amendment No. 130: Reduces the appropriation for the support and civilization of the Rosebud Indians $1,950.

On amendment No. 131: Reduces the appropriation for the civilization and support of the Sisseton Indians $5,000.

On amendment No. 132: Reduces the amount for the civilization and support of the Colville Indians $21,000.

On amendment No. 133: Reduces the item for civilization and support of the Tulalip Indians $3,000.

Your committee receded with an amendment from amendment No. 134, reducing the appropriation for the civilization and support of the Lac du Flambeau Indians $5,000, and excluding the words "to be immediately available."

HOMER P. SNYDER,
J. A. ELSTON,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to offer than what has been disclosed by the reading of the report, except to say that this report has been made and the result has been brought about by the continued hard work on the part of this committee since the beginning of last July. While there may be some errors or omissions, and while there may be some language in the report, a word here and there, which is not, perhaps, what some one better versed in parliamentary government than I might have put in, it is the best result that we could bring here with the efforts the committee have put into the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state how the total amount appropriated compares with the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. SNYDER. The bill left the House appropriating $12,868,748.19. As it passed the Senate it carried $12,788,397.39, a reduction from the amount of the House bill, which in my five years' experience is something unheard of in appropriation measures. As reported back to the House by the conferees the bill carries $12,847,997.39, or $20,750.80 less than when it left the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman has done a very good job.

Mr. SNYDER. The original estimate as presented to the committee carried $17,400,000.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, that included, of course, the appropriations from the tribal funds, which are not a tax on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SNYDER. That, of course, the chairman of the committee agrees to, but he has always believed that it was just as important to point out the amount of money which was being used from the tribal funds, so far as the Indians are concerned, as to point out the amount taken from the Federal Treasury. Therefore, in all the statements he has made he has included in the total all the money appropriated from all sources and from whatever account.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman fully that the United States handles these funds in a fiduciary capacity, and that in handling the trust funds we should handle them with just as much accountability as we would our own funds. The only point I make is this: That when we come to consider the cost to the Treasury of the United States, the tribal funds do not figure, because they are held in the Treasury of the United States as trust funds and for draft only on account of the Indians.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Reading the conference report—and I have not had the opportunity to read it carefully—I note two amendments which were added by the Senate and which the conferees agreed to. I ask the chairman of the committee to explain amendment 117, on page 73. The reason I desire an explanation is this: It seems to me that while there is an appropriation for $10,000 there is a very dangerous practice of obligating the Congress to carry out an appropriation of $141,000, which it recognizes as a settlement and which, while the conferees only agree to the appropriation of $10,000, it actually appropriates and makes positive recognition of a liability of $141,000. Therefore, instead of an appropriation of $10,000, it means an appropriation of $141,000 in fact.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say in reply to the gentleman that this item is covered by a bill which has passed the Senate and has been reported to this House by the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a treaty item and must be paid by this Government. It was thought in the consideration of the matter it would be better to do it in this way and give these Indians $10,000 or $20,000 a year rather than appropriate the whole sum and pay it at once. This same item, the gentleman will recall, defeated this bill in the last Congress, the session which closed on March 4. Since then a careful investigation has been made and a report has been agreed to upon this item by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and this will supersede that legislation.

Mr. GARD. It seems to me that it is a very dangerous practice to appropriate $10,000 under the guise of saying $10,000 is appropriated, whereas in fact it means a recognition of an obligation of $141,000, which must be continually appropriated for until the whole amount is paid.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, the gentleman understands and has seen the reports which make this item necessary. Back in 1914 and 1915 reports of investigations were made by the bureau, and it was found that up in Wisconsin there were about 100 Indians who had refused some 60 or 80 years ago to take up the land which was allotted to other members of the tribe. There was at that time a sufficient amount so that each allotment would mean in money value about $1,500 due to each of these Indians. They have established their claim to the amount, and while it has been put off from year to year, there is no question in the mind of the committee that it is a justified item, and the money will have to be paid some time. We felt, however, on account of the condition of the Treasury of the United States, since we have recognized the justice of the claim and have reported a bill to the House to that effect, that it is better to pay it in installments than to put the whole amount in at this time.

Mr. GARD. As I understand, there has been no recognition by any act of Congress of this claim, and this appropriation of $10,000 is the first recognition of a liability of $141,000. That is the true statement of fact, is it not?

Mr. SNYDER. Except that the Senate has passed the bill.

Mr. GARD. But the Congress as a whole has not passed it?

Mr. SNYDER. It has not.

Mr. GARD. And what this means is that under the guise of an appropriation the committee is recognizing, and the House is recognizing, a liability of $141,000.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not agree with the gentleman there, because, while that may have been in the mind of the men who insisted upon this going into the bill, it did not enter my mind. My notion is that if this House decides to refuse to appropriate on that item next year there is no obligation created here that it shall be done.

Mr. GARD. I understand what the gentleman says, but the practical meaning of it is that once having recognized by act of Congress the validity of this claim, if it can be called a claim, and paying $10,000 upon it, then the committee and the House is practically pledged to the appropriation of the remaining $131,000. It does not make any difference what the gentleman says was in his mind. That to me seems to be the practical side of it. We are pledged to appropriate $135,000 more, and under the guise of a small appropriation of $10,000 we recognize the validity of the appropriation of $141,000.

Mr. SNYDER. I have already stated to the gentleman that there is a bill in the House now, reported unanimously by the committee, recognizing this claim in full. Of course, the House has not yet passed that measure.

Mr. GARD. I understand that.

Mr. SNYDER. I can not give the gentleman any fuller explanation with regard to it than I have. My understanding is that we shall have to appropriate if we desire to cover this same claim, but I do not understand that we have agreed to the $141,000 item any more than we would if we put in a bridge item, when we knew that $50,000 was going to be required and we appropriated only $25,000 for it at the particular time.

Mr. GARD. I think we may as well understand that the committee has decided to recognize and the House has decided to recognize the appropriation of $141,000, and that is what it amounts to. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to another item on page 47, which is likewise a Senate amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. GARD. Amendment No. 63, the purchase of land for Navajo tribes, $100,000. Is this intended to cover the same situation that we had some years ago when it was purposed to allot to the Navajoes certain lands?

Mr. SNYDER. I would state to the gentleman that this land is where between six and seven thousand Navajo Indians live to-day who have never lived on the Navajo Reservation. This information I am now giving to the gentleman has come to me within a very few days from the Franciscan Fathers out there. I did not have the information when the bill was before the House. These Indians have lived off the reservation and can not be put back upon it, according to the testimony before us, due to the fact that allotments have been made to such an extent that there is no more grazing land than is absolutely required for the Navajoes now on the reservation.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The Navajo Indians, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], as I recollect, number something like 31,000 people. They compose a great, large tribe of Indians living about at different points over the desert. They are not, strictly speaking, an agricultural people, but are more in the line of herdsmen, raising sheep. I think I know what the gentleman has in mind. Several years ago in the Indian appropriation bill there was an item permitting the Indians in the United States to make allotments on the public domain. The intention was that these allotments should be made in Arizona and New Mexico. The provision went into the bill in the House, but when it got to the Senate it was practically nullified by having placed on the end of it a proviso excluding the States of New Mexico and Arizona from the provisions of the item.

When we went into conference, the whole purpose of the amendment having been aborted, and it being impossible to get the Senate conferees to agree to the House provisions, the entire amendment was stricken out, as I now recall. I violate no confidence when I say it was admitted during the conference that these are the same Indians, the Navajo Indians, for whom we attempted at that time to provide allotments on the public domain in Arizona and New Mexico. Some of the lands may be the same, but as a rule these are lands which have been taken up by railroad companies, in some kind of railroad grant. Now, the railroads, already having preempted or foreclosed whatever rights they have and taken over the water holes, springs, and so forth, the lands left are of no value as allotments for the Indians, and so the necessity for purchasing lands which have some character of stock water to supply these Navajo herds.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Under existing law, and especially with reference to what the gentleman has so well said about prior legislation, is it not possible to still secure the provision of allotted lands to the Navajoes?

Mr. CARTER. On the public domain?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no. I had just referred to that. All of the lands that have water holes or springs have been taken up since this other legislation was proposed, and the land that the Indian might now get by allotment on the reservation would not be of any value because there is no water.

The principal reason that this money is desired to purchase land for Indians is in order that water holes and springs might be purchased, and so far as I am advised there is little desire by anyone to take up any of the balance of this dry land.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman should know that this is a self-supporting band of Indians. There will be no future appropriations and they have plenty, not funds, but they own plenty of timber and other valuable materials, so the Government will eventually get its money back from this appropriation.

Mr. GARD. What I desired to understand was whether this is for the benefit of the same Indians who have not yet proceeded to get allotted lands that we are now buying lands for $100,000 to give to them?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; these are the same Indians, but the situation is that they hold land on alternate sections. The railroad owns one section, and then the land in between is public land. Now they have an opportunity to secure from the railroads a sufficient amount of these lands, so that they will have title to them forever, and while I did not understand this situation when the bill was before the House, we have since secured information which led us to agree to this report. The probabilities are, unless this is done now, they will lose the opportunity to get these lands.

Mr. GARD. The information that the gentleman has is that these are railroad lands, and I assume by that the gentleman means the land belongs to the railroads?

Mr. SNYDER. Every alternate section belongs to the railroad and the balance is public land. That can be purchased at this time, and thus give them a continued holding of land, including water rights, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, there is plenty of land. It is not so much of a question of land as of water. All the water holes have been taken up either by the settlers or by the railroad grants, and the land is valueless for herding or grazing purposes without water. As I understand the matter, this $100,000 is to be used to purchase land with water on it, so that the Indians will have stock water, while their stock will graze perhaps partly on the public domain.

Mr. GARD. It nowhere appears that this land is to be purchased for water holes, and I am very glad to be advised of its purpose.

Mr. CARTER. That was stated in conference.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman this item did not come before the Committee on Indian Affairs in its investigation of the Indian Bureau; neither did it come before the committee when it was investigating the appropriation estimates. It came in afterwards, and the only discussion we have had on it has been either in conference or since the bill passed the House, except a statement made to us when the item was brought up after our investigation of the bill, and I did not take any stock in it and was against it and was glad to see it go out of the bill. But I did not understand the situation, and since then I have become advised with respect to it. I will also say to the gentleman that we did not concede this amount without taking something else out of the bill to compensate for it.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit me further, I will say that a mistake was made when we did not pass this provision to allot these Indians this land, because the water holes would have been held if that had been done.

Mr. GARD. How long ago was that?

Mr. CARTER. That was probably four or five years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? I desire to ask him a question or two. How does the total appropriation of this bill compare with the totals in the last few years?

Mr. SNYDER. The total of this bill is two and a half million dollars less than the current act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The current act was how much more than the one before?

Mr. SNYDER. They were practically the same. There was only a few thousand dollars difference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, in the last few years thousands and thousands of Indians have been made citizens, and so forth, and so on. Are the expenses of this Indian Bureau diminishing or not?

Mr. SNYDER. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that in opening my remarks in presenting the appropriation bill to the House I compiled a statement showing that the number of Indians had decreased some 71,000 in the last 7, 8, or 10 years, and the cost of operating the bureau has increased from $9,400,000 to $15,300,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I am trying to get at is to find out if there is any prospect on earth of this Indian Bureau ever petering out?

Mr. SNYDER. There is absolutely none on the face of the earth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How can they keep it up with the Indians being made citizens and getting their allotment and being taken from under the tutelage of the Government; with that constantly going on how can they keep as many clerks as they do, and what are they doing?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, if the gentleman will permit me, it will take a minute or two to answer that intelligently perhaps; it seems that the Indian Bureau down here is assuming to look after not only the tribal affairs of every Indian but the individual affairs of every Indian.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How is it their business, after an Indian is made a citizen, to be pestering themselves and asking money to take care of him?

Mr. SNYDER. For the simple reason they never discharge an Indian completely. There is always some way they hold onto his property or something which keep that Indian in individual touch with the bureau; and so, where the bureau has been operating for a tribe which has 20,000 Indians in it, it carries on all the correspondence covering the tribe. If they discharge 10,000 of them, they add 10,000 accounts to the work of the bureau, which they think they must do in their behalf after they have become competent.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to suggest that the Cherokee Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma have had their tribal affairs wound up and all the Indians who have not restricted lands are now completely out from under the tutelage of the Indian Bureau and supervision of the Government. Perhaps there are 30,000 or more Cherokees who are now full-fledged citizens and with whom the Government has nothing to do whatever.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri further that I started out on this investigation with the same idea in mind that he evidently has, judging from the questions he is asking me, and wondering why it was with the diminishing number of Indians to care for the expenses of the bureau were continually appreciating. And I think we have found the reason. We have brought in this bill and put in it some new and perhaps novel legislation, so that from those Indians who are discharged, who are able to pay for service in the future—while the Indian Bureau may have to take care of them—we will collect a sufficient amount from them to pay for that service.

As you can see, we have reduced the amount from the estimates some $4,500,000. We are trying to force the Indian Bureau to relinquish some of its duties over the Indian and thereby reduce the amount of expense.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if the expense and labor down in the bureau increases as the number of Indians under tutelage diminishes, when they get down to one Indian they will have a bigger bureau than they have now.

Mr. SNYDER. That is a fact. And under the system which is in operation down there, the bureau here will have more work when one-half of the Indians who are now under restriction are released than there now is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there not a way to frame up a bill that will put an end to that idiocy?

Mr. SNYDER. I can not see that where an Indian is declared competent he can not be declared the same as dead. The bureau holds that would require an amortization of accounts, which would be impossible. I am not a technician in those matters, but I believe it could be done, and I am trying to get some idea into their minds which will bring it about.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri that there are two things the Indian Bureau has supervision of with reference to the Indian: First, they have supervision over his tribal affairs. That began when the Indian was first put on the reservation and brought under the bureau. At that stage of the proceedings the Indian had no individual estate to supervise, because all his lands, funds, and so forth, if he had any, were owned in common by the tribe. But in process of civilization it becomes necessary to parcel out an allotment of land to each member of the tribe, and when the Indian is allotted, then the individual Indian problem arises, and the problems multiply by the number of Indians in the tribe. Say, for instance, one tribe contains 10,000 people. So long as no allotments or divisions are made we have only one problem, that of the tribal or community ownership to protect and supervise, but when allotments are made then we have the share of each Indian to supervise, so that instead of having one problem we have ten thousand and one, because in making allotments to individuals we invariably have some remnant or tribal estate remaining, and that must be cared for also until some final disposition can be made.

After the Indian has been brought upon the reservation, the Government has also undertaken the duty of caring for his health, teaching him civilized habits, educating his children, instructing him in farming, agriculture, or other arts, and so long as their lands are restricted money must be appropriated for all these purposes.

Now, the next move in this process of civilization is the removal of restrictions and granting to the Indian of a certificate of competency so that he may be absolved from further tutelage, relieved of all restrictions and supervision, and placed upon his own resources. In the shop parlance of dealing with Indian affairs we have come to refer to this procedure as "removal of restrictions."

Now, my friend from New York said that when an Indian receives his removal of restrictions he is not turned loose from the bureau. In some instances that is true and in others it is not. For this reason. If he has removal of restrictions before final settlement of his tribal estate is made, then certainly the Government still holds a string on that tribal estate, and it can not be said that he has been turned completely loose from Government supervision. In order to turn an Indian loose completely from all governmental supervision and to make him in fact a full-fledged United States citizen, it is necessary not only to remove his restrictions but it is necessary to divide up his tribal estate and give him all that is coming to him from the Government. Then he is cast loose from the Government into this great struggle of the "survival of the fittest." While not a very large percentage of Indians in the United States have been turned completely loose from the Government, which embraces not only a complete removal of restrictions but full and final division of tribal property, still this has been done in several notable instances. Take the Cherokees in Oklahoma, the largest population of any in the United States to-day, embracing more than 41,000 people. The tribal estate of the Cherokees has been completely distributed and finally settled. They have not a dollar in the Federal Treasury, and the Government is fully relieved from any expense on account of supervising their tribal affairs. Moreover, more than one-half the population of the entire tribe have had complete removal of restrictions on the property allotted to them, and are now under no supervision of the Federal Government and no expense whatever to Uncle Sam.

The process of graduating the individual Indian into citizenship, that is, removing restrictions on his individual property, has progressed much faster than settlement of tribal estates for the reason that it is necessary to dispose of unallotted tribal estate usually by sale and on deferred payments. This, of course, entails delays which can not be avoided, but I know of no reason why our Indian Bureau should not be able to wind up the tribal affairs of the Creek Indians within the next fiscal year; and with proper and expeditious management the tribal affairs of the Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles should be completely settled within the next five or six years, which winds up the tribal affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, consisting of about 101,000 persons, nearly one-third of all the Indians in the United States.

Now, do not forget the distinction that must be made between tribal affairs and individual affairs. While tribal affairs may be settled as soon as the residue of the tribal estate is sold, collections made, and moneys divided, it should be understood here and now that the problem of supervising the individual Indian property will abide with us as long as one Indian remains with restrictions on the sale or lease of his property, and so long as that condition exists it will be necessary to appropriate money from the Treasury for the service.

Mr. SNYDER. There is one thought I want to give to the gentleman from Missouri: The bureau in Washington, while we may increase the number of employees to-day, now has about 250 or 260, but the number of employees in the field is something over 6,000. Now, we do not propose to reduce the number of employees in the bureau here in Washington, but we do hope by this process of elimination to reduce the number of activities in the field. We have found that we had a surplus of school capacity of nearly 15,000—little schools which dotted the whole Indian country and some of them had but two or three pupils and were being kept up at an expense of, say, $2,000 a year. We found that they had eighty and odd hospitals, 23 nonreservation boarding schools, and 80 reservation boarding schools, some of them only partially occupied. We found a splendid school, with the capacity of 250 or 260 pupils, with only 16 pupils in it. We propose to eliminate this and coordinate the scheme.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When are you going to do it?

Mr. SNYDER. We have in this bill the legislation that will bring it about, we hope.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman from Oklahome [Mr. CARTER] if these Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes are not just as capable of attending to their own business as we are?

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that 80 or 90 per cent of them are as capable of attending to their own affairs as the white man in Oklahoma.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why does the bureau want to interfere with their business, then?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Missouri talks very much like an Oklahoma citizen. In fact, if he were a stranger, I might be persuaded to believe that one of my own people had made that remark. The difficulty with the Indian Bureau is just this. They have not in the past addressed themselves sufficiently to the subject of separating the competent from the incompetent Indian. That procedure is the solving of the Indian problem per se. Of what is the Indian problem composed? Nothing more nor less than so-called incompetent Indians. Therefore the more incompetent Indians we have the larger and more comprehensive grows the Indian problem. When all the Indians are graduated into self-sustaining citizenship and get certificates of competency, then, and not until then, will the Indian question be solved, and I repeat, just as long as there is one incompetent Indian for the Government to supervise, just that long will we have the Indian question to haggle over and make appropriations for.

What has been our procedure with reference to this in the past? In the past Congress has set back on its oars and expected the Indian Bureau to separate the sheep from the goats, and let us not forget that that is nothing more nor less than calling on a man to eliminate himself, which is not in the cards of human nature. It is calling upon the Indian Bureau official to eliminate himself, because when all Indians are given certificates of competency and all tribal estates finally settled there will be no further use for the Indian Bureau. It will cease to function; its jurisdiction will be gone; it will go out of business and lose its prestige.

I do not intend by this to speak in a disparaging manner of any of the present Indian Bureau officials. There is that in the nature of the genus homo which causes him to resist surrender of authority. Even judges hesitate to surrender jurisdiction. It is but the law of human nature. In fact, the very first law of human nature—self-preservation—and is no more perhaps than many others of us would do if we were placed in the same position of these officials. This being the situation, Mr. Chairman, there is but one way to solve the question. There is but one body that must do it, or that will do it, and that is Congress. Why? Because Congress has jurisdiction over more things now than it can properly attend to and is not directly interested in continuing this supervision. Their prestige does not depend upon it. Their jobs do not depend upon it. Their salaries and positions, either in this body or in the country, will not be lessened by final settlement of Indian Affairs.

We have passed through this House a bill known as the citizenship bill, which proposes to make citizens of all Indians in the United States, and to eliminate from the control of the Government all Indians of less than one-half Indian blood. It further provides for competency commissions to remove restrictions from other Indians who are one-half or more than one-half Indian blood. The members of these commissfons will be appointed by the President, who, I presume, will seek the advice of the Secretary of the Interior in making such appointments. After they are appointed, under provisions of the bill, they are no longer responsible to the Secretary, but responsible to Congress, and must make their reports to Congress. This bill, in my opinion, is one of the greatest steps that can be taken toward a real solving of the Indian problem. The House has passed the measure. If the Senate will pass it, I think we will begin to see through the openings of the forest the light of the prairie beyond.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The chairman of the committee has made the statement that it was the object to eliminate as many of these schools as possible. I want to call attention to this condition: Down in Oklahoma there is an Indian school that has an average attendance of over 150. All of those children are full bloods. Many of them have what is called trachoma. Is it the idea of the gentleman's committee to eliminate this school or to let the Indian Bureau eliminate it?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman did not mean by any means to state we would eliminate all the schools. The theory is that we have too much capacity for all the children who are in the schools. If we can not fill them up by putting a limitation upon the number that they must have in each school, certain schools will be eliminated. But we have left that wholly in the purview of the bureau—to select such schools as they may see fit, such schools as can best be eliminated or closed down until such time as they can bring them up to the numbers we say must be in the schools in order to be appropriated for.

Mr. CARTER. Let me say to my colleague that there is nothing in this bill, or in any bill that has been adopted by the Indian Committee, that bears on his school at all, because we do not propose to cut down the schools except where the attendance in boarding schools is less than 80, I believe. Is not that what we agreed to in conference?

Mr. SNYDER. Eighty-five.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The point I make is this: The chairman of the committee has called attention to the fact that some of these schools had an attendance that was very, very low, and in his opinion should be abolished. But in my section of Oklahoma they have only one Indian school, and that has a large attendance.

Mr. SNYDER. There is no restriction on them. They can build another school if necessary to make capacity for those who ought to be cared for.

Mr. McCLINTIC. These children that I refer to are all full bloods. There is no white school to which they can be sent. Many of these Indians are diseased with trachoma. The question to my mind is whether the white schools will take these children and let them attend until this disease has been eradicated.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will look at this section of the bill, he will see that that matter is wholly covered, and there is nothing for him to worry about in the proposition.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] said the policy was to prepare these Indians to be competent if they can properly be so declared. I understood there was a proposition to have $25,000 applied to the competency commissions. I notice an amendment was made by the Senate that puts the amount at $15,000. Would that be sufficient?

Mr. SNYDER. The Senate cut it out entirely, and we succeeded in getting that much of it back.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will that cover the entire case?

Mr. SNYDER. I doubt if it will cover the entire case and have all the work done that should be done, but it was the best we could get.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I want to ask as to amendment 92. The Senate cut down a House item. I want to ask as to the reason for the reduction of the amount?

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman that the information given to the conferees by the members of the conference has turned out to be erroneous, but on the strength of that statement, which was that there was only $70,000 of tribal funds in the Treasury of the United States, we decided to reduce the amount from $40,000 to $25,000. The gentleman from South Dakota has pointed out to me that these Indians have $1,500,000 on deposit. Had I known that at the time, I would have insisted further on putting in his amount. But we also considered the fact that in all these bridge items of which I have known there must be subsequent appropriation, and we thought $25,000 would be sufficient to make the agreement with, and that he can come in next year, and if his Indians still have money, he will not have any difficulty, I think, in getting the amount he desires.

Mr. GANDY. I hope the chairman will bear with me until I say for the RECORD that the Cheyenne River Tribe of Indians, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which is House Document 349, second session, Sixty-sixth Congress, will on July 1, 1920, have in the Treasury of the United States $1,419,800; and, further, that of what is known as the proceeds of labor, or, in other words, the lease of tribal lands, these Indians will receive $93,000 during the coming year for the lease of the lands that we seek to improve by the building of this bridge, and, of course, it is understood from the report of both the Indian Office and the governor of the State, as chairman of the Highway Commission, that $75,000 would not build this bridge. The $25,000 for one-third, as the chairman says, will perhaps be enough to start it, and the balance, I assume, can be taken care of in another bill.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will recall that there were three items which were put in the bill without investigation with regard to the desires of the bureau, and when we did communicate with the bureau they were opposed to all three of them, and we thought we were treating the gentleman pretty well when we put in two of his three items, even though we did reduce the amount a little on one of them.

Mr. GANDY. I rather think the chairman is somewhat in error in that statement, because I was present as a member of the committee which interrogated the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who appeared before the House committee, and the assistant commissioner stated that all three items would be desirable from their standpoint.

Mr. SNYDER. The information I am giving the gentleman is information I have received from members of the conference committee.

Mr. ELSTON. I think a further point with regard to these items is that nothing was had from the Indians in regard to their desires or as to how it would affect their welfare. Of course, the statement is made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] with regard to the necessity, but no record of tribal resolution or action was put in as evidence. I think that may have affected the committee in their action.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I notice in several places in the report items like this:

> Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert.

I make the inquiry that I do partly to assist possibly the enrolling clerk. The gentleman understands, of course, that the enrolling clerk of the House, in enrolling the bill, has to follow copy. He takes the engrossed copy of the bill, and then with the conference report has to make up a new bill. Now, in this particular case—and there are several others like it in the report—while it says—> in lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert—and so forth, there was no matter proposed by the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment proposes to strike out matter which was in the bill as it passed the House. Now, I take it, of course, and possibly the enrolling clerk will take it, that what the conferees intended was that in lieu of the matter stricken out by the Senate the other matter should be inserted.

Mr. SNYDER. That was what was intended, of course.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the enrolling clerk will be able to get the intention. Of course, after all, we do not give a great deal of authority to the enrolling clerk. He has to act upon the record, and unless he did there would be many changes in enrolled bills which were not designed.

Now, I should like to ask the gentleman one other question. I notice that amendment No. 94 is referred to in the statement, the statement being that the House recede, I suppose, from its disagreement to the Senate amendment. That would mean to agree to the Senate amendment. But in the conference report itself, through inadvertence, I suppose, amendment No. 94 is not mentioned at all. I understand the gentleman has a concurrent resolution to correct that?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; I have. I want to present it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will present it after the conference report is agreed to?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enroll the amendment of the Senate No. 94 to said bill in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement thereto and had agreed to the same.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask the gentleman the reason for this resolution?

Mr. SNYDER. It simply corrects an error with reference to the figures in amendment 94.

The resolution was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GANDY and Mr. CARTER were given leave to revise and extend remarks on the Indian appropriation bill and the conference report thereon.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the second deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 12046), with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there was one matter that had not been disposed of, lines 4 to 11, on page 18, which was passed over at the request of some gentleman on the other side.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] desires to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment by Mr. HUDSPETH: Amend the bill, page 18, line 4, by striking out all after the word "of" in line 4 down to the semicolon in said line and inserting in lieu thereof "the Union and Confederate Navy"; also amend the bill, line 8, by striking out after the last "the" in said line the word "Rebellion" and inserting in lieu thereof "between the States."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Gentlemen of the committee, upon an investigation I find in talking with the chief of the division under which this would come in the Navy Department that the account is carried on the books of the Navy Department under the head of "Union and Confederate Navy." The bill as it is written refers to "the naval records of the Rebellion." It occurs to me, gentlemen of the committee, that this is an indivisible country, and that in view of the fact that it has been over 60 years since the Civil War ended, and in view of the fact that in the Spanish-American War that distinguished Confederate soldier, Gen. Wheeler, marched alongside of that splendid American, Theodore Roosevelt, in the defense of this country; in view of the further fact that in the last World War every part of this great country united in the defense of this Government, that every part of this country sent her sons to the foreign country to defend that flag; in view of the fact that in the State I come from the conservative people deprecate any reference to anything that would continue that feeling of strife or reflect on the Government; in view of the fact that the courts of that country prosecute vigorously any treasonable utterance against this country; in view of the further fact that this question was fought out in the United States Senate several years ago and has since been referred to in that body as "the War between the States," it seems to me that my amendment should be adopted.

I am not a bloody-shirt man. I deprecate any utterance to that effect. I believe, gentlemen of the committee, that this amendment ought to be adopted and the point of order ought not to be made against it. I want to say that the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, that great American, although of a different political faith from the majority of the people in my State, is held in that State as sacred as in any other part of the Union. [Applause.] I want to say that the memory of the martyred McKinley in the State I have the honor to represent in part is held as sacred as in any other part of this Nation. [Applause.] For these reasons, gentlemen of the committee, I believe this amendment ought to be adopted, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. I think a similar amendment to this was adopted to a bill in the special session. I trust without further discussion the point of order will be withdrawn and this amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not time to discuss the merits of this proposed amendment. If we were creating this department we might choose some appropriate words that might not be as offensive as these used. But in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of 1894 we created the office of naval records of the rebellion, and therein carried an appropriation to collect and print those records. Every year or two since that time we have appropriated sums sufficient to publish the record. Now, the gentleman desires to call all the records that have been given a name by statute something else. It is legislation on an appropriation bill and clearly subject to a point of order. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, what did the Chair do with the point of order I made against the section when we passed it?

Mr. GOOD. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I made a point of order that it was not a deficiency, and if you refer back to the RECORD at the time we passed it you will see that I made also the point of order that it was new legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I did not withdraw it.

Mr. GOOD. It is a deficiency, certified to in the regular way, and under the ruling of the Chair it is in order and it is not new legislation, having been authorized by statute and been on the statute books for 20 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless it is shown to be a deficiency it would not be authorized at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has cited the law authorizing this work, and an examination of the appropriation bill carries an appropriation for it. It seems to the Chair that it is authorized by law and that it is a deficiency. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am informed by what seems to me to be good authority that in the Sixty-first Congress a law was passed which prevented the use in the future of this term "rebellion," and provided that in the future where reference was made to the conflict of sixty-one to sixty-five it should be referred to as "the War between the States." I submit that under that law, if it is a law, it is improper for this appropriation committee or this deficiency subcommittee in this bill to use that term which was proscribed by the act of the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no such law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have the gentleman from Texas cite the Chair the statute he refers to.

Mr. BLANTON. I presume that the Chair would take official cognizance of the substance of all laws passed by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the duty of the Chair. It is the duty of the gentleman who cites the law to call it to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. The judge on the bench takes official cognizance of the existence of all laws, and the Chairman is in the nature of a judge on the bench.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not apply in this case. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk called the attention of the Chair to the fact that the provision on page 40, line 23, was passed over.

Mr. GOOD. Those matters will be taken up when we have disposed of the naval items.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will not the chairman take up the items on page 40?

Mr. GOOD. I prefer to take them up in the order in which they appear in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is nothing controversial in that.

Mr. GOOD. I think the orderly procedure is to take up the passed-over items as they occur in the bill. The next items that we passed are the items with regard to the naval appropriation. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], there is an amendment pending for an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the Bureau of Yards and Docks. I understand it is proposed to offer an amendment for $1,050,000 for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, an amendment for $3,250,000 for Construction and Repair, and $2,500,000 for Steam Engineering. I want to see, if that be correct, whether we can not agree on general debate, so that the matter can be presented in a businesslike and logical way all at once, because one amendment involves the whole program in all of the amendments, and, while the others may be subject to a point of order, and I think they are, yet it seems to me they are all linked together in such a way that we should have the discussion at one and the same time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman speaks of general debate. General debate on this bill has been exhausted, and we have read the bill under the five-minute rule and completed it with the exception of going back to certain items.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman had waited a moment until I propounded my inquiry to the gentleman from South Carolina, he would have seen clearly what is intended. I want to see if we can arrange so that this matter can be discussed in a general way under the five-minute rule, so as to give Members an opportunity to discuss the whole problem.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Undoubtedly the only way we should proceed is to discuss all of the amendments at once, because they are bound to each other, and while I am in favor of the amendments, if offered, I do not intend to offer them. My information is, however, that amendments are going to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], and I am perfectly willing to agree to time and that it shall include a discussion as to all of the amendments.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think it will require more than an hour and a half for discussion?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Iowa knows that since he suggested that the other day I have told him that in view of the requests to me for time I could not possibly agree to that amount. If the gentleman would give me an hour and 10 minutes, I will not be able to comply with the requests that have been made, but I will be forced to accept the agreement, and I know that we can then get through.

Mr. GOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the pending amendment and the proposed amendments for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, for the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and for the Bureau of Steam Engineering be limited to 2 hours and 20 minutes, the time in favor of the amendments to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the time against the amendments to be controlled by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending amendment and the three other amendments indicated by him, to be offered hereafter, be limited to 2 hours and 20 minutes, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether that provides for me?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether that would also include, as I hope it will, all amendments to the amendments that have been offered, so that the debate upon the entire matter will be limited to the time stated.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the idea.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the purpose.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It takes in all amendments to the amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this going to limit the debate to these amendments, the subject matter of the amendments?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is understood, is it not, that debate is to be limited to the subject matter of the amendments?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Iowa couple with his request the suggestion that amendments offered to the paragraphs referred to must have debate concluded upon them within the time stated?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That was understood with the modification that I asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman so modify the request?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are two pages of paragraphs relating to the Naval Establishment. I understand that there are some amendments to be offered which might possibly be subject to points of order. These paragraphs have not been read, and it would seem to me that to fix the time for debate on proposed amendments, which the gentleman mentioned, would exclude legitimate debate upon legitimate amendments to some paragraphs that have not yet been read under the Naval Establishment.

Mr. GOOD. That was not my intention.

Mr. WALSH. That is what it will do.

Mr. GOOD. My request was simply in regard to the amendment pending and the three other amendments that will be offered; but whether or not we limit the debate upon those that have not been read and confine ourselves to the one that has been read, which is so linked up with the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and the Bureau of Construction and Repair that an intelligent consideration of the pending amendment necessarily involves consideration of the other.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Of course, I assume from the gentleman's request, and I think it is probable that he intends it to be so considered, that all debate on the points of order on those two other amendments will not be included in the time of this debate.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, certainly not; and my request would not limit debate at all to the paragraphs pending in the bill that have not been read. Those would be open to the decision of the committee with regard to what is desired to do regarding debate on those provisions or amendments to them. It is only this question of the $9,300,000 that has been requested by the Secretary of the Navy for the Naval Establishment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think that is what the debate should be limited to—to the amendment that has been offered and to the amendments that will be offered when this paragraph has been read. To open it up to amendments that have not been offered, that may be offered to subsequent paragraphs of the bill, may possibly not be in order, and it seems to me it is rather unwise.

Mr. GOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that strictly speaking, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has my attention.

Mr. GOOD. I can not have his attention if somebody else is talking to him.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can have my attention even if some one is speaking to me.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will stop to consider this just a minute he will see that the minute some one takes the floor and commences speaking about this proposition, if a point of order was made when he is discussing steam engineering, and steam engineering is very closely tied up with the proposition of yards and docks, that you can not separate the two in your discussion, and if some one makes a point of order you will not have any intelligent discussion of the subject at all.

I was simply trying to present the matter so that the discussion could proceed in an orderly and intelligent way, but if we enforce the rules strictly I am sure we will not get very far.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I will suggest to the gentleman that he offer his amendment to the Bureau of Engineering and the other two items, and I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he believes it would be impossible to arrive at an agreement which will allow debate, including all of them?

Mr. WALSH. I do not intend to offer an amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was referring to the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], who has, I understand, some amendments to offer.

Mr. WALSH. The orderly way, I submit, would be to permit the reading of all the paragraphs under the Naval Establishment, and then an amendment might be offered to any of those paragraphs within the 2 hours and 20 minutes and debate had upon them. That would be the orderly way to have it done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the event an agreement is reached for 2 hours and 20 minutes of debate and an amendment should be offered and a point of order should be raised upon it and arguments should be had pending the point of order, would that be excluded from the time fixed by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that debate should proceed on the amendment that is pending before the committee and it is permitted to take the scope of also discussing amendments to be offered later on, but so far as the parliamentary status is concerned the amendment that is pending before the committee will be the one discussed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think the Chair understood my inquiry. In the event any proposed amendment is offered and a point of order interposed against it and discussion was desired upon the point of order, would that time in discussing the point of order be taken out of the 2 hours and 20 minutes agreed upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the other amendments will not be in order at all when this amendment is pending, and therefore no point of order could be made against the other amendments, which could be read only for information and could not be pending, because they could not be while another amendment is pending.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, why would it not be good policy for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] to submit all of his amendments and then thrash out the parliamentary situation of the points of order then made?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MILLER. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor by unanimous consent in an effort to reach an agreement.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I object—Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not ask for a reservation of the right to object in the face of the demand for regular order. Does the gentleman from Washington object to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to have it made clear; I understood the gentleman from Iowa to couple with the request originally made——

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The suggestion I had made, and I understood the gentleman from Iowa assented to, was that debate will be limited to the time already suggested, taking in not only the amendment now pending but such as may be offered thereto.

Mr. GOOD. The amendments to which I referred and not anything else.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have reference to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized to control 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Iowa is opposed to the amendment, and he would suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina, who is in charge of the time in favor of the amendment, should proceed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BRITTEN. I suggest the amendment has not been read; some of us do not know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was again reported, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TINKHAM: Page 18, after line 20, insert the following:

"Maintenance, Bureau Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a further point of order against it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that it is a duplication of such item as already appears in this bill. It is not a deficiency, and is new legislation for that reason. There is already such an item appearing in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was offered several days ago; the point of order was made against it and the point of order was overruled, and it is too late now to make an additional point of order. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 1 hour and 10 minutes in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman has a parliamentary inquiry, I will yield for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Was not this paragraph and this amendment by unanimous consent passed over without prejudice?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not. This amendment was read and a point of order was made against it; it was discussed at length and the point of order was overruled, and the committee rose with the amendment pending.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated, this is one of four amendments involving $9,050,000 deficiency appropriation in the Navy Department items now in the deficiency bill before the House. These items were before the Committee on Appropriations and were defeated by 1 vote. The majority of the Committee on Appropriations, in my opinion, was profoundly wrong in excluding them, and as I feel strongly that they were profoundly wrong, I shall speak strongly in relation to their inclusion in this bill.

I believe that the majority of the Committee on Appropriations—and I am a member of that committee, and am extremely sorry that I have to speak as strongly as I shall and dissent from its position—by the exclusion of these items, first, in the name of false economy torpedoed the American Fleet; and, second, it has stultified itself and now desires that this House or this committee of this House shall stultify itself.

What are the facts? They are these: Five months ago recommendations were made by the Secretary of the Navy, and they went to the Committee on Appropriations through the Speaker of the House, advocating that $9,300,000 should be appropriated for essential and necessary repairs to the Navy of the United States—necessary and essential because repairs could not be made during the last three years in which the fleet was engaged in active war service and many ships were in urgent need of repair.

In this communication the Secretary of the Navy said—and this was five months ago—that those repairs must be made and would have to be made at some time, and that the sooner they were done the cheaper they could be done; he also stated that marine repairs were such that if they were not done and done immediately when needed, the costs would mount and increase, so that the exclusion of these items is not in the interest of economy if they are necessary and essential repairs, and they are so certified, and at some time would have to be made.

The Appropriations Committee who considered those arguments reported to the House in the first deficiency bill these very items last September, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in an ardent address to the House, advocated their inclusion in the bill four months ago in the interest of economy. He stated at that time that he had consulted with Mr. BUTLER, of the Naval Affairs Committee; that he had consulted with Mr. PADGETT, of the Naval Affairs Committee, and other members of the Naval Affairs Committee, and that those members said it was a necessity, and that they were glad the Appropriations Committee had included them in their bill. This House passed these items four months ago, on the 18th of September, as necessary and urgent deficiency appropriations, and they were defeated in the Senate. Then what are the following facts? Again, in January, the Secretary of the Navy certified to the Speaker of the House the increased necessity for these deficiency appropriations. The subcommittee on deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee considered them and excluded them from the bill which it reported. The bill was then referred to the whole Committee on Appropriations, and before it could be considered by the full committee an urgent communication was received from the Secretary of the Navy and from the four admirals of the bureaus of the Navy certifying not only were these appropriations essential and necessary as repairs and in the nature of economy to make them now, but that they were absolutely and uncontrovertibly necessary in the interest of and for the national defense. Yet the Committee on Appropriations defeated them by 1 vote.

Now, what did the Secretary of the Navy say in transmitting these reports of the bureau chiefs on the 21st of January?

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I decline to yield.

The serious situation with reference to the military efficiency of the Navy impels me to write earnestly inviting the attention of Congress to the necessity of the deficiency appropriation of $10,314,962.19, requested by me in my letter to you of the 18th day of December, 1919, and which passed the House last summer, but which failed of passage in the Senate. The conditions are much more serious now than they were when presented at that time and are set forth fully in the accompanying letters from the chiefs of the Bureaus of Operations, Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Yards and Docks.

Admiral R. E. Coontz, who has taken the place of Admiral Benson and is now Chief of Operations of the American Fleet, says in his report, transmitted by the Secretary of the Navy:

2. The present unsettled conditions throughout the world demand that the ships of the Navy be kept in efficient condition for action. The number of ships now capable of operating effectively in case of emergency is dangerously small. This condition is a direct result of a lack of funds with which to prosecute vigorously the required repair work on vessels whose material fitness has been lowered through the excessive and continuous demands of war service.

3. Although every effort has been made to reduce maintenance charges by disposing as rapidly as practicable of the vast accumulation of shipping that it was imperative to incorporate into the Navy to meet the needs of a wholly unprecedented war, it has not been possible to adjust to the money available the work necessary on the remaining vessels required for service, as might have been done in a period of peace. The situation, therefore, which now confronts the Navy in case additional funds are not made available by February is a reduction of the number of ships which can be made promptly available for operation to a point which will seriously compromise our national security and also a marked reduction of the force of civilian employees now at work in our navy yards. An estimate of the number of artisans, mechanics, and other yard employees involved in such a reduction has been made, and amounts to 13,900 men.

4. This situation was clearly foreseen, as is indicated by the steps taken last August to secure an extension of the maintenance appropriations. It has now developed to the point where further delay in securing additional funds will affect disastrously both the material efficiency of the fighting forces of the Navy and also, in so doing, the valuable work organizations of thousands of skilled mechanics now employed in our navy yards.

That is not the formal and ordinary request for funds from the head of a department or a bureau. That language is the language of necessity; it is the language of emergency; it is the language which should compel this House and this committee to give now and liberally what is asked by the Chief of Naval Operations.

And then let me read what the chief in charge of the Bureau of Construction and Repair has to say on this matter, Admiral Taylor:

4. In connection with the overhaul of vessels of the fleet, it is noted that there is a large accumulation of work resulting from two causes—first, the necessity for the postponing during the continuance of hostilities of work which was not of immediate urgency, and, second, the necessity for undertaking on the more modern vessels of changes the necessity for which was made evident or emphasized by experience gained during the war. While the deterioration and reduction in military efficiency that results from postponing work of this character can be accepted during hostilities when keeping the vessel in condition for immediate service is of vital importance, the undue postponement of work under peace conditions puts the Navy of the United States at a disadvantage as compared with other navies and should be accepted only when the reasons for postponement are extremely urgent.

5. A general statement of the condition of work on the principal types of vessels of the fleet and the progress possible with and without additional funds is given below:

(a) Dreadnoughts: Of the 15 dreadnoughts actually in service, the overhaul on 2 has been completed, the overhaul on 2 can be completed and 1 about half completed from the funds now available, the overhaul of 4 has been well advanced and could have been completed from the funds available had it not been found necessary to withdraw them from the navy yards before all work had been accomplished, and no work can be done on the remaining 6. With the additional funds work can proceed on all these vessels that can be made available.

(b) Predreadnoughts: Of the 18 predreadnoughts which it is expected to keep in condition for active service, but without undertaking changes necessary to keep them strictly up to date in a military sense, the work on 3 has been partly advanced, but in general the work has not yet been started, due to concentrating on more modern vessels. With the additional funds it will be practicable to proceed with the overhaul of all these vessels, but without the additional funds work will have to stop.

(c) Armored cruisers: Of the eight armored cruisers which it is expected to keep in condition for active service, the work on one has been completed. Practically nothing has been done on the other seven, and little, if any, work can be undertaken unless additional funds are provided.

(d) Destroyers and destroyer tenders: As it is contemplated to keep only about half of the total number of destroyers in active service with the fleet at any one time, it is the bureau's intention to undertake the changes necessary to improve the military efficiency of these vessels on those not with the fleet, replacing the vessels with the fleet in rotation. With the additional funds the work on a certain number of these vessels could be completed, but unless additional funds are provided no work of this nature can be undertaken. The expenditures for the maintenance of these vessels, owing to the large number, 288, involves a considerable sum, although the expenditure per vessel is small. Owing to the limited number of destroyer tenders available, it is very important that they be kept in efficient condition, and practically no work can be done on these vessels unless additional funds are provided.

(e) Submarines and submarine tenders: The conditions affecting the work on submarines and submarine tenders are in general the same as those affecting the work on destroyers and destroyer tenders.

(f) Fuel and supply ships: Under present conditions and with the number of vessels available, the overhaul of these vessels so as to place them in efficient condition is of great importance. Little work other than routine docking can be undertaken unless additional funds are provided.

(g) Miscellaneous vessels of the train: Two of the hospital ships and 12 of the mine sweepers required for fleet operations should be placed in efficient condition. Rather extensive repairs to mine sweepers are necessitated by the work in connection with the removal of the North Sea barrage. The work on the mine sweepers required for immediate service can be undertaken from the funds now available, but no work can be undertaken on the remaining vessels of this class.

(h) Cruisers, gunboats, and miscellaneous vessels not operating with the fleet: Unless additional funds are provided, no work other than absolutely necessary maintenance work can be undertaken on these vessels.

The Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, Admiral Griffin, states in his report, included in that of the Secretary of the Navy:

The necessity for the additional appropriation arises from the fact that Congress appropriated only $30,000,000 instead of $35,000,000 requested in the estimates of the bureau, which were very carefully made on the basis of the fleet to be maintained and the general condition of the machinery. Subsequent inspection of the ships by the Board of Inspection and Survey has in almost every case shown the necessity for greater repairs than were contemplated when the estimates were prepared.

As a result of the reduced appropriation it has not been possible to proceed with repairs as expeditiously as it was desired, and thus far only five battleships have been overhauled and returned to service, some without the complete accomplishment of some important fire-control work, the necessity for which had been demonstrated from experience gained during the war.

Of the remaining battleships in full commission 14 are now at navy yards, some under repair and others awaiting their turn to be taken up when funds are available.

One armored cruiser has been repaired and returned to service, another is under repair, and six others are at navy yards awaiting their turn, the only work in progress on them being that necessary for care and preservation.

The condition with respect to cruisers and destroyers is similar to that of the armored cruisers, except that in the case of destroyers it is possible to substitute new ones as personnel becomes available and put those in need of repairs in reserve or out of commission, with the repairs held up indefinitely, a condition which is very undesirable and which leads to further deterioration.

Work on destroyer and submarine tenders and on vessels of the train is necessarily subordinated to that on capital ships, but with the large number of destroyers and submarines operating with the fleet it is more than ever necessary that the tenders should be in condition, because their presence assists materially in keeping down the cost of repairs, and estimates for this class of vessels were made with this in view. Unless the tenders are available, the volume of repairs to be done at navy yards is automatically increased.

If these facts as reported by these chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department are true, it is indefensible in the abused name of economy to exclude from the bill now before us the deficiency items which I am offering—the very items which are recommended by these chiefs of bureaus for the proper maintenance of the American fleet and the saving of a great expense in the future. What member of the Appropriations Committee or of the Naval Affairs Committee dares to say that these men are attempting to commit fraud upon Congress and the people and are not telling the truth? What other reason have they than to tell the truth and nothing but the truth?

In this second deficiency appropriation bill the estimates of the departments have been reduced about 33⅓ per cent, on the average. The estimates of the Navy Department have been reduced by over 93 per cent. This is plain discrimination against the American Navy, and should be resented by every loyal American. Large sums are contained in this bill for the enforcement of prohibition. The philosophy of the majority of the Appropriations Committee seems to be "Millions for the enforcement of prohibition, but not one cent for the American Navy." This is the philosophy of effeminacy and pseudo-Americanism, and some day will receive its rich reward. The American people at least demand the maintenance of its present Navy. In my opinion, America should have a Navy second to none in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. May I have five more minutes?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am sorry, but I can not yield additional time.

Mr. TINKHAM. I have two communications from the Secretary of the Navy that I would like to read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. After full consideration I feel that it is my duty to sustain the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his opposition thereto. The chairman has informed the House and the country that, in view of the estimated receipts and expenditures of the Government, there will be a deficit for the fiscal year 1921 of between two and three billions of dollars. Thus it is apparent that we should not appropriate public funds except for necessary governmental needs, and those needs should be determined by those committees of the House having jurisdiction of the subject matter involved. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I will have to refuse to yield. I have not the time.

No one can offer any substantial reason why the Committee on Appropriations should presume to pass upon the needs of the Navy. The House has created a committee for that particular purpose, and the assertion of a Member of the House that the Navy needs this or that appropriation has no force in the absence of action by the Committee on Naval Affairs, or recommendation from that committee after reasonable hearings in relation thereto. In this connection it is one thing for an officer of the Navy to send a communication to a Member of the House, or to a committee thereof, demanding an appropriation, but it is quite another thing for such officer to appear in person before the proper committee and be examined in relation to the public necessity therefor. Under the rules of the House the Committee on Naval Affairs has jurisdiction of subjects relating to the Naval Establishment, including the appropriation for its support. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I can not yield. I have but a limited time.

The mere fact that the House placed a similar item in a prior bill is immaterial. Such item was struck out by the Senate. And history will probably repeat itself. We can not continue the Army and Navy upon a war footing. We must get back to a peace-time basis. No one contends that a deficiency exists. What is demanded is an increased appropriation to keep busy the existing force in the Navy for the balance of this fiscal year. If such need is imperative, then the Navy Department should present its case to the Committee on Naval Affairs, the guardian in the House of the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. They have $21,000,000 now for this purpose.

Mr. MAGEE. I do not yield to anyone in my admiration for the American Navy, for its marvelous achievements, and for its glorious traditions; but as a member of the Committee on Appropriations it is not my duty to pass upon the needs of the Navy. How many Members from Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts would vote for this amendment if the Government did not have a navy yard at Philadelphia, at Brooklyn, and at Boston? It is the old game of district grab that has been the curse of congressional legislation from time immemorial. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MAGEE. Any Member who publicly professes to stand for economy in public expenditures, and at the same time demands the appropriation under consideration upon the ground that it is imperative to maintain the efficiency of the Navy, could very appropriately after retiring to the corridor of the House shed a few crocodile tears. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. It is demanded by the Navy Department.

Mr. MAGEE. One thing is certain. We can not get economy in the House unless at least the Republican Members will sustain the policy of the House as set forth by the majority leader. [Applause on the Republican side.] In sustaining this policy we can not expect much assistance from our Democratic friends. You can not find the word "economy" in their party lexicon. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania 11 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Never mind the applause. I want you to vote against the proposed appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GOOD] the Committee on Naval Affairs has spent two days in an effort to learn whether or not in the judgment of that committee the appropriations asked for should be made, and, after listening eight hours and employing all of the ability that we had within us, we reached a conclusion this morning; and upon a motion made by my esteemed colleague from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], the committee voted 12 to 3 against supporting the proposed appropriations, because they believed them absolutely unnecessary. [Applause.]

Here is the motion that was made and the one that was carried:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the chairman of the committee inform the House that we think it wise to remove the limitation so as to authorize the appropriation, as recommended, of an additional expenditure of $400,000 for technical help in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and that it is further the sense of the committee that other appropriations sought by amendments that have been offered are not needed and will not be needed until after July 1, 1920, when they will be cared for in the regular appropriation bill.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I can not. If the gentleman can lengthen my time, I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The Bureau of Steam Engineering and the Bureau of Construction and Repair have $21,000,000 unexpended for use during the next few months—appropriated but unexpended and unobligated in any way—that they can use for these very purposes.

Now, do not think that I am having an issue with the Secretary of the Navy over this. I recognize him as my chief, and whenever I can agree with him, or he with me, upon mutual reasoning, I have not the slightest hesitation in supporting him in the House, although he belongs to the other party. But I can not agree with him that the increases he requests are necessary. I know positively that they are not, because, as has already been stated by some of these bureaus, they can not expend all this money, including the proposed increases, before next July, and therefore we do not think it wise at this time to go back toward a war basis. If the House sees fit to put this in, all right; but it will have to come from some other place if I can make it come. If you are going unnecessarily to expend this $9,000,000 or $10,000,000, I will ask the committee over which I preside to consider it when we write the next annual appropriation bill.

Let me tell you where this comes from, which has not yet been fully developed. A great deal of this, I say to you, Mr. Chairman—between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars for yards and docks—comes about in this way: Some of the yard authorities have overexpended their allotments in violation of the law and in defiance of its mandates. Have you discovered that? We have worked two days to learn the facts. The law provides that money shall be allotted to these naval stations, which have grown now to 92 in number. Some of them must be abolished if we are to come back to peace times. Of these 92 stations, about 25 have violated the law; admittedly they have. They have overexpended their allotments. The law of 1906 absolutely compels these commandants to stay within their allotments. At one point in the United States, in Virginia, the commandant of that navy yard has overobligated his station expenditures for maintenance and repairs $58,000 a month, so stated by the Chief of Yards and Docks. Secretary Daniels, through the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, allotted him $30,000 a month. He cooly admits that he spent $88,000. We will have to make the expenditure up some way. We can not allow the Government to decline to pay its debts. What I take exception to, and with considerable warmth, is the fact that some of these navy-yard commandants defy the terms of the act of Congress as they see fit, and there seems to be no way to restrain them.

So far as it concerns me and such official action as I may take, I will ask this House to lock these yards up if there is to be a continued violation and a defiance of the wishes of Congress and the laws of the land.

Oh, it is said that I favored this at one time. So I did, until I became informed. My mind was open yesterday morning when men like Mr. KELLEY of Michigan and Mr. OLIVER and Mr. PADGETT, Judge VENABLE, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. HICKS, and other gentlemen of the committee undertook an examination to see whether or not we should join with you in voting for these proposed appropriations. I am thoroughly convinced that there is no occasion for them, as I have said to you. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. BUTLER. Gentlemen, listen to a few figures: It is costing this Government to maintain these navy yards and for the repairs that are necessary incident to these ships $84,000,000 a year as against $23,000,000 in peace times. Some of the gentlemen here will go into details and will tell you that this money is not to be spent upon our fighting ships. Money remains in bureau's hands to be expended, if necessary, upon the repairs of our fighting ships. I have a navy yard alongside of me, and I say to you that if I can not remain contentedly in this House and do what I think is right, I had rather remain at home. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I can understand the reason for this. My eyes are not closed. The same pressure has been brought upon me that has been brought upon some other gentlemen, and I do not propose to give way to it.

If this were necessary to keep this great fleet in fine fighting trim, then I would vote for it cheerfully, but I will not vote for an appropriation to mend old ships that should be broken up. Before the war we had 240 ships. We have 942 ships now. Three hundred of these old hulks are offered for sale, and nobody to buy them, at from $2,000 to $4,000 apiece, for the whole lot, I am told.

Some of the workmen must go from the navy yards; many will remain. I believe a large portion of those engaged upon repairs will be assigned to construction work which they are capable of performing. I mean of those whose discharge from repair work might occur should these proposed amendments fail. The building program to be continued will furnish much for the workmen to do. Nearly four hundred millions of dollars will be necessary to complete ships which Congress has authorized. Added to this great sum will be the annual appropriations for repairs and preservation of ships—necessary ships—to operate with our mobile fleets.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. If it relates to the gentleman's amendment, I will.

Mr. TINKHAM. Does the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania know that the four admirals in charge of the various bureaus certify in their urgency reports that it is for dreadnoughts and ships of the line principally that these repairs are necessary?

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the gentleman's question; and we asked them and went through it and found that they were not. Some of the money would be used for that purpose, but they have $21,000,000 on hand with which they can repair every dreadnought and every predreadnought.

Mr. BROWNING. And the armored cruisers.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how many armored cruisers have we? Do not look at your book.

Mr. TINKHAM. I am not a member of the Naval Committee, but of the Appropriations Committee, to which these admirals have certified in writing the facts which I have asserted.

Mr. BUTLER. I pretend to know something about this subject. I have been at it for 24 years. They have 16 dreadnoughts and 14 predreadnoughts, and there is no necessity to mend those old armored cruisers. They are out of date. We will have soon 16 of the finest ships to take their places. Do not mend them. Do not waste your money on that kind of material.

But they say that the Secretary of the Navy recommended this. So he did, and I dislike to be against my chief, but I can not understand his reasoning. There is no party in this. When we voted this morning we were nearly as much on one side as on the other. Consequently it is not in obedience to the Secretary of the Navy that any gentleman on that committee may have voted in favor of this, and I say it is not going to be in obedience to anyone that I will either oppose it or be for it.

Now, gentlemen, to go a step further. The Secretary of the Navy himself for the next year has reduced these items $14,000,000, showing that he does not need the money. He has reduced estimates from $84,000,000 to $70,000,000 for the next year. Do not fail to remember that these admirals of whom my friend from Massachusetts speaks are the bureau chiefs. They are not commanding fleets. They are fine men, absolutely reliable and able, but they are expending this money and asking for this money as bureau chiefs. Congress must say where this money should be spent and the amount to be spent. You should not permit any commandant of a navy yard or his bureau chief to defy you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I can not say in five minutes all that I would like to say about this item and the need of the naval service for money which the Committee on Appropriations has denied it. When the subcommittee on the deficiency appropriation bill, of which I am not a member, reported the bill to the full Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member, it so happened that I was not present at the meeting, having been called to Boston to deliver an address at the unveiling of a tablet in memory of some brave Boston boys who were killed in the World War. That tablet was unveiled under the auspices of the Michael J. O'Connell Post of the American Legion, at Jamaica Plains, Mass., January 25. Excepting for this engagement, made some weeks before, I would have been present at the meeting of the Appropriations Committee, and I would have voted to insert this item in the bill, as I would have voted for the other items offered as amendments by my colleague.

It is well for my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to say that he has a navy yard almost at his door and that he realizes that there is always pressure brought to bear upon Members from cities where navy yards are located. That may be true in many instances. The navy yard in my city is not in my district, and may I say to the distinguished chairman of the Naval Committee [Mr. BUTLER] that from what I know of the personnel of the navy yard in Charlestown 60 to 80 per cent of the employees belong to his political party? There has been no pressure brought to bear on me to vote for this appropriation, because it was not necessary to do so. I favored the appropriation from the day that the Secretary of the Navy asked for it. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we who come from cities where navy yards are located support measures of this kind because we know more than do the Members here present who live in sections far removed from the coasts of this country, and we know the needs of these yards and the merit of the demands made from time to time upon Congress. My friend was not quite certain that the rear admirals in charge of these departments knew what they were talking about when supporting the requests for these appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations had these bureau heads before it, and they testified that the work waiting to be done was of the utmost necessity and, to do it properly, required the substantial sum now asked for. When the gentleman says that they have not told the truth, then it is a question of veracity.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not say that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then I misunderstood my good friend from Pennsylvania. I notice that some Members of the House applauded certain statements made that these appropriations are for the purpose of keeping slackers on the pay roll. May I remind the Members here present that once more we are face to face with the question as to whether or not this Congress is to keep its promise to the men who went into the World War, whether on land or sea? Among the thousands referred to who now constitute the working forces of the navy yards of the country, there are some thousands who saw service in this war. I recall the promise during the time when the boys were in action that on their return a grateful Nation and an even more grateful Congress would never forget their service and sacrifice, and yet men are rising on this floor to-day and charging that the purpose of this amendment, and the other amendments which are to follow, is solely to keep slackers on the pay roll of the country. I deny the charge.

It has been clearly shown that our Navy, of which we were once so proud to boast, is deteriorating, and that hundreds of ships will rot at their berths in the navy yards on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts unless immediately repaired. It has not been proven by any argument on this floor that these repairs are not necessary. The appeals of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks for the immediate passage of these necessary funds have been most earnest. Their statements have not been denied that this work must be done and must be done now if we are to have any sort of a Navy.

When our boys were overseas I heard this Chamber resound with voices on both sides of this aisle, Members of Congress pledging everlasting allegiance to and loyalty and support for the boys when they would come back; but now, Mr. Chairman, they are side-stepping the question of bonuses, they are side-stepping and forgetting all the promises they made to the American Expeditionary Force and to the sailor boys in the recent war. They are trying to rally support enough to turn the boys out into the street, thousands of them, who because of skilled workmanship have been placed in navy yards of the country since they were discharged from the service. I deny that these men are slackers. What are you going to do, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the 100 ships that are in the navy yard at Philadelphia? Are you going to let them rot? I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. We are not going to repair them if I can help it. They are old ships and have been there a long time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not according to the leading Republican newspapers of Philadelphia. I read yesterday in the Ledger that there are more than 100 ships at the Philadelphia yard awaiting repairs, and that at no time in the history of the yard have the men been so busy. Three $15,000,000 battleships—the Kansas, New Hampshire, and the Connecticut—are out of commission awaiting repairs, and the newspaper story said that if there is a wholesale discharge of the men at that yard the result would be the tying up of these ships for some time to come.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a statement?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will gladly yield to my friend.

Mr. VARE. For the benefit of my colleague I will read the names of these vessels now lying at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. They are the battleships Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, and Wisconsin.

Mr. GALLIVAN. My friend refers only to the battleships, but it is well known that there are scores of other ships awaiting repairs at that important yard. At the Boston Navy Yard there are now awaiting repairs two battleships, one cruiser, one submarine tender, five destroyers, and other small ships badly used up after service in the World War. Do you want these ships to rot? Let it not be forgotten that the work on new ships is not dictated by the Secretary of the Navy but by congressional action. The repair work on ships now in commission is necessarily recommended by the bureau chiefs, who ought to know more than we know about such matters, and who, in my judgment, are to be trusted. The money now asked for will be expended on repair work. I appeal to my colleagues not to be mislead by misinformation at this time, and I earnestly urge the adoption of the amendment now under discussion so that the work can be speedily done and that many faithful employees will not be thrown out into the coldest winter I recall in many years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise, extend, and correct my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DARROW having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3383. An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service; and

S. 795. An act to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. OWEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,500 copies of the national banking act as amended to date for the use of the Senate and to be distributed through the Senate Document Room.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the Members of the House desire information that will enable them to vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], in which he asks for an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The House Naval Affairs Committee have for the past two days held hearings, not only on this amendment but on the other amendments which the gentleman from Massachusetts states he will offer, namely, an appropriation of $3,250,000 for the Bureau of Construction and Repair and $2,500,000 for the Bureau of Steam Engineering and $1,050,000 for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. The chiefs of these different bureaus of the Navy were called before the committee, and the information which I will endeavor to give as to these several amendments is based on the hearings so had. May I here state that the Navy has no stronger friends than the members of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and no member of that committee would knowingly fail to give proper support to the Navy. The committee is trying to practice proper economy, without hurt to the efficiency of the Navy, and party lines are forgotten in the consideration of all questions affecting the Navy. If the chairman of the committee should later hold that the appropriations sought in the several amendments for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, Construction and Repair, and Supplies and Accounts are not in order on this deficiency bill, then a large part of the amount asked for in the pending amendments for yards and docks will not be required, since Admiral Griffin, chief of that bureau, informed our committee on yesterday that $1,500,000 of the $2,500,000 asked for in this amendment is solely contingent on the increases being given to Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering. In other words, the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks only asks for $1,000,000 unless increased appropriations are given to the other bureaus. So, if the point of order to the other amendments be later sustained, as the Chair by a previous ruling has clearly indicated will be done, there is confessedly no need for an appropriation of more than $1,000,000 for yards and docks. Now, the House will be interested to know whether the increased amounts asked for the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering, which amounts aggregate $3,250,000, are urgently needed at this time. Unquestionably, funds are needed for the repair and construction of naval ships, and much more is needed for this work than any amount now called for. This work, however, must be carried on in a proper and business way, and many considerations enter into the question of how much money should at any given time be appropriated for this purpose.

One important problem facing the Navy is the lack of trained personnel for our ships, and if we had every vessel in the Navy now repaired and ready to go to sea, there are but few more vessels, if any, than those now at sea which could be provided with trained personnel. We have at present about 100,000 enlisted men, and of this number, 65,000 have enlisted since the armistice was signed. From ten to fifteen thousand of this number will be discharged before July next because of the termination of their enlistments, and their places must be supplied with new recruits after a term of proper training.

The serious handicap to the Navy at present is the loss of a large number of skilled mechanics and artificers, and who are absolutely essential to the operation of naval ships. The young men who have enlisted within the last 12 months can not be trained in these important ratings for a long time. Realizing this, the Naval Affairs Committee reported last week—and this House passed—a bill increasing the pay of the skilled men now needed in large numbers for the operation of the naval ships. We are encouraged by statements from the Bureau of Navigation to feel that if that bill becomes a law a large number of highly trained men who left during the past year will return to the Navy.

Admiral Griffin called the attention of the Appropriations Committee to the fact that much of the repair work now needed on ships at navy yards could be avoided since the skilled men we are endeavoring to have return are splendidly qualified to make these repairs, and ordinarily make the same. I quote from a letter of Admiral Griffin, dated January 14, 1920, as follows:

> 9. The reduced condition of the enlisted personnel, especially in the artificer branch, has made it necessary to do in navy yards much overhauling and repair work which has heretofore always been done by the ship's mechanics and has served to correspondingly increase the expenditure for repairs.

I will also quote a part of Admiral Griffin's hearing before the Appropriations Committee, which will be found on page 363 of the hearing:

> The condition (referring to the Navy) is getting worse on account of the lack of experienced men in the Navy. Scarcely a week passes that we do not have a big repair bill due to the inexperience of the men. Nearly every week we have a boiler burnt out on a destroyer due to inexperience; that means $20,000.

Now, when you consider these two statements the conclusion follows that with the return of skilled men, which we have reason to believe will follow the passage of the increased pay bill, many of the repairs sought to be made at navy yards can be made by the personnel of the Navy; and, furthermore, even if a large number of the ships were now fully repaired, that it is costly and unwise to send them out with inexperienced crews and few skilled instructors, because they are too often returned in a few days with burnt-out boilers to repair, which costs in each case $20,000.

Admiral Taylor stated to our committee on yesterday that if no increase in the appropriation was made for his bureau he would have sufficient funds out of the amount already appropriated and yet unexpended to care for all urgent repairs on the battleships and the necessary auxiliaries. He further stated that if sufficient trained personnel was now available, seven of the predreadnoughts in the yards awaiting repairs could and doubtless would be sent to sea for service. From this it would appear that a failure to provide the additional funds called for in these several amendments will not result in real hurt to the Navy, and all repairs on the essential ships can be made out of funds now available. The Bureaus of Steam Engineering and Construction and Repair now have an unexpended balance of about $21,000,000.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Not unless the gentleman can secure for me more time.

From what has been said, you will understand that the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] relative to the number of capital ships and predreadnoughts now at navy yards awaiting repairs will not suffer if an increased appropriation is not carried in the pending deficiency bill. The Atlantic Fleet will have eight capital ships, and all of these are now in commission and at sea. The Pacific Fleet will have eight, four of which are now in commission and at sea, and three of which are in the Puget Sound Navy Yard awaiting repairs, and the funds on hand, as stated by Admiral Taylor, will be sufficient to make these repairs.

One of the ships assigned to the Pacific fleet has not yet been completed, but will be commissioned within the next 60 days. It is even questionable whether we have at this time a sufficient number of trained personnel for the three capital ships now undergoing repair at Puget Sound Navy Yard.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Not unless further time can be secured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman from Iowa grant me two more minutes?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. Let the House understand that there is an unexpended balance sufficient to make the urgent repairs on the battleships and on the necessary auxiliaries. The committee realize the importance of keeping a proper number of ships in full commission, with trained personnel and every help has and will be extended to the Bureau of Navigation to secure the required personnel for these ships. No fault can attach to the Navy Department because of the present lack of trained personnel. Under the law many thousands have been discharged since the signing of the armistice, and we are now confronted with a condition that can not be overcome at once. Men to man the ships must first be secured, and time is required to properly train this new personnel. Every effort is being made to secure the return of many petty and warrant officers and trained mechanics, and it is confidently expected that when the increased pay bill passes many of these will return to the service. The annual appropriation bill for 1921 will be reported to the House at an early day, and ample funds will be supplied to the different bureaus for the maintenance, upkeep, and operation of the fleet, and we are hopeful that a well-considered policy will have then been determined on as to the number of ships that can be kept in active commission for 1921 with properly trained personnel.

Mr. Chairman, every member of the committee holds in high and affectionate regard the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, Mr. BUTLER. He is making every effort to conserve economy and at the same time properly provide for the Navy. You who know him fully recognize that he is deserving of this tribute irrespective of party lines. [Applause.] The chairman of the committee in reporting the action of the committee this morning, relative to the pending amendments, omitted to state that the committee has recommended to the House that an additional sum of $800,000 be carried in this bill for the Bureau of Yards and Docks. I will offer to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] by reducing the amount of $2,500,000 to $800,000, in accordance with the recommendation of the House Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say I did not make that omission intentionally.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course not. I would not convey that impression. I know it was simply an oversight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, it is with extreme reluctance that I find I have to differ with my esteemed friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as to the advisability of making this deficiency appropriation.

And, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] has stated, we all know that the estimated revenues of the Government for the fiscal year fall far short of meeting the estimated expenditures of the Government. We also know that there is but one practical way of forcing a balance between them, and that is by the practice of the most rigid economy—a cut to the limit wherever a cut can be made without becoming "penny-wise and pound-foolish."

I am satisfied that a careful examination of the facts, uninfluenced by preconceived notions of those who just think they know what is or is not economy, will convince us all that it is a good sound business policy to vigorously prosecute the work now underway on the ships that we want to retain in the Navy. There is no kind of property that deteriorates so rapidly as a ship when in urgent need of repairs; the quicker they are attended to the less it will cost. The whole question is, Do we want to keep our naval vessels in commission and have them ready for emergencies which may arise? If so, then it is economy to appropriate this money now. The longer we wait the greater will be the repairs and the cost will be increased. Many of our battleships have been used as transports to bring the troops back from France, and they require extensive repair.

Mr. Chairman, I want to place in the RECORD a letter from Rear Admiral Hughes, commandant of the League Island Navy Yard, one of the most efficient and economically conducted yards in the country. The admiral has never spent more than his allotment, as some have been accused of doing; in fact, he has kept more than $15,000 a month within his allotment.

COMMANDANT'S OFFICE, NAVY YARD,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 1, 1920.

DEAR MR. DARROW:

* * * * * * *

A good many of the destroyers will be sent to other navy yards to have their repairs made as funds become available, but I estimate that should the $10,000,000 deficiency bill pass and we be allowed the funds for labor as has been allowed for the past six months there is full two years of repair work laid out for us, and at the decrease rate that goes into effect to-day I can not estimate at present how long it would take to repair them all. The ships generally require extensive repairs, for they have to be done as the accumulated work of several years.

Seven of the battleships came here immediately after several months of continuous cruising as transports bringing troops home from Europe, and the same applies to the armored cruisers and cruisers. The destroyers came here after their hard work in the war zone, and they had little or no work done on them while in European waters.

I am trying to inform you that the amount and cost of repairs is large, because we have got to catch up with the heavy wear and tear during the war, during which time there was no opportunity to do work except that absolutely required to keep the ships going.

Last night we discharged, or placed on furlough, 327 men, and more will have to be let go immediately. If the ships are to be repaired, the present organization should be maintained and the work vigorously prosecuted, for the ships are deteriorating rapidly; if the work is not undertaken now, the work will cost considerably more at a future time.

As you know, it is uneconomical to run a big machine like at a navy yard at a low rate of production, because the percentage of unavoidable overhead expenses becomes very large.

The foregoing is entirely an argument from the Government and the Navy side; from the point of view of the employees we can always get more work when the men are assured there is plenty of work to be done, and they are more inclined to hustle to finish one job when they know the next is waiting. The future of the Navy, both as to size and composition, is being determined by Congress, and until that is determined we should keep our best workmen. Good workmen can always get a job, but if the force at the navy yard fluctuates we will only get the "floaters" for employees; in other words, we will get only those no one else cares to employ.

I hope you will get the deficiency, as it will give us a chance to fully consider the future, which I suppose will be determined by the next naval bill. Until that is finally passed we should hold all our skilled employees.

Most sincerely,

C. F. HUGHES.

Hon. GEORGE T. DARROW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield two minutes of his time to me?

Mr. DARROW. Yes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand here a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, dated January 28, which I desire to read:

THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, January 28, 1920.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Confirming what I told you over the telephone in connection with the failure of the Committee on Appropriations to include the $9,000,000 item for the repair of Navy ships, I want to emphasize especially that the request of the Navy Department was at no time based on any desire to keep a needless number of mechanics employed in the navy yards merely for the sake of preventing a lay off.

The sole question is without any "camouflage" a military one. The fleet, i. e., the fighting ships of the Navy, are tied up in large numbers because we have no money to repair them with. That is a definite statement which I have shown several times by detailed figures and names of the ships.

Also, it is not a question of an insufficient number of men to man these ships we want to repair. I can assure you that by the time they are repaired the men will be there to man them.

If you want any proof of the need for this money, I wish you would go to any navy yard in the country. You will find the water front literally packed with regular ships of the Navy—ships which will be kept in the Navy and not the bunch of vessels taken over temporarily before the war—and these ships are waiting their turn for repair and overhaul. The reason they practically all need repair and overhaul is that for three years—in other words, since early in 1917—they were engaged in war duties, and were kept running day and night for war purposes.

Somebody may say that it is not necessary to repair them all immediately. This is perfectly true, and the department has no intention of repairing them all immediately; in fact, it would take two or three years to put them all back in shape under the most favorable circumstances. What we do want is to repair the vitally necessary ships for the fleet; i. e., the dreadnoughts, destroyers, submarines, and fleet train.

Just one word about this navy-yard employment question. On November 11, 1918, the number of mechanics, helpers, laborers, etc., was approximately 100,000; to-day it is approximately 80,000. This 20 per cent cut has weeded out practically all of the deadwood, i. e., the less efficient workers. The yards are much more efficient to-day than they were during the war, and, in the natural course of events, they are becoming increasingly efficient as the normal turnover of labor takes place from day to day. Any idea that by letting ten or fifteen thousand more men go at the present time would make the yards still more efficient is not, in my judgment, warranted.

I believe that the actual efficiency of the navy yards at the present time is about on a par with that of the general run of large manufacturing plants, i. e., not as efficient as under prewar conditions but still returning to a better degree of effectiveness with every day that passes.

All of this, however, is not the main point to be emphasized. The efficiency of the fleet—of the fighting part of the American Navy—is what is at stake. The fleet must be returned to a proper condition as quickly as possible, and that is why, and that is the only reason why, we need these $9,000,000 that has been asked for.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

P. S.—Don't forget that the Navy can't go back to prewar size, either in number of ships or in number of men. For instance, we have to-day half a dozen more dreadnoughts and several hundred more destroyers than we had in 1916.

Hon. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, I take that statement, coming from the responsible head of the Navy, who is not in any way influenced by a policy which says that he must follow political dictation, but is influenced by a policy which is directed by his understanding of the idea of national defense.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I read in the press some days ago that Gen. Leonard Wood had characterized the Navy as "a floating death trap." I do not know whether he was quoted correctly, but if he was he certainly did not mean that literally. He was indulging in hyperbole for the purpose of focusing the attention of the country upon the need of helping the Navy at this time and for the purpose of molding public opinion and of trying to convince his side, which is so ardently opposed to this particular appropriation for the Navy, as to its duty in the premises.

Why have gentlemen changed their position on this matter? Last September we remember that this same Appropriations Committee brought in a deficiency bill that carried the exact amounts that we now desire to be inserted in this measure, and that appropriation, championed at the time by the chairman of the committee, failed because the Senate desired to force an appropriation about the air service that was really not in any sense a deficiency. And when I asked the majority leader on Saturday why this change of front he blandly and debonairly replied that the Navy Department had misled the Committee on Appropriations. Oh, is it not sad that Franklin Roosevelt and his bureau chiefs can lead astray legislative lambs like JIM GOOD and Uncle JOE? Why, it is to laugh. Nobody believes such a thing as that. Everybody knows that the omission of this item from the present deficiency bill is to keep step with the program of retrenchment that the majority party has generally announced [applause on the Republican side], a program of economy that incidentally includes a new pension bill for Civil War veterans and their widows that will cost the American people $64,000,000 more annually. [Applause.] What kind of economy is that? Why, fellow members of the committee, it is economy pro bunko publico. That is what it is. It is economy that reminds me of the French saying, "Leursfinesses sont cousues de fils blancs"—their finesses are sewed with white thread. Everybody knows what they are trying to do. They are trying to get votes. They are willing to sacrifice anything in the effort. They sacrificed ruthlessly the other day the waterway interests of the country in their action on the river and harbor bill, and now they do not hesitate to imperil the national defense and to strike the Navy down in its efforts to keep our warships in good condition. Oh, just so they can say through one of the daily bulletins of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], "We are practicing economy." Well, I think they will get what is coming to them, because the American people can see through their hypocrisy and their bunk. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], to answer the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, after all a policy of real economy carried out requires action and not mere lip assertions by the House of Representatives and the Senate. In addition to words spoken on the floor it requires a proper vote when the voting time comes to put economy into effect. I take it that we would have economy in this country if my Democratic colleagues on this side and my Republican colleagues on that side of the House would give the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations proper support in his efforts to bring about economy in a true sense. [Applause.] I know that he means economy. I can not say so much for my friend from Wyoming, the leader on this side, because much of what he says here in favor of economy is politics pure and simple; but the position taken by the chairman of this committee is the position of economy. He has passed on this matter, he has given the matter close, careful, and diligent consideration, he and his committee, and he and his committee have held that this proposed expenditure of $9,300,000 is not needed at this time. Are you going to carry out his judgment, or just because our friends from these shipyard places like Philadelphia and Boston—we know that they love pork and like to get their hands into the pork barrel; we know that they like to get money expended in their district; but when this Congress has said that during this session it is not going to provide a public-building bill, when this Congress has said through its majority steering committee that it is going to retrench, when this Congress has said time and again to the people, the unsuspecting tax-paying public, that we are going to economize, do not you think the time has come to help and support the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations? Now, I am going to help him. I am a Democrat, but I am going to help the Republican chairman of ordinarily a very expensive party, a very extravagant party, to bring economy about in the affairs of this Government. [Applause.] Why can not we get enough help on that side? Are you Republicans going to turn him down? I wonder if the party whip is to pop on that side this time. This is one time I want to hear it pop; this is one time I want to see the steering committee pop its whip and sting its colleagues into the line of this economy proposition to help us save $9,300,000 for the tax-burdened people of the United States.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to call to the attention of the committee that these navy yards have been used by the Shipping Board very extensively to repair the Shipping Board vessels. This has been done successfully and economically. In the case of the Lake Harris, it was repaired at the League Island Navy Yard in 10 days quicker time than any repair yard offered and at $20,000 less cost, a saving, counting in demurrage value, of about $50,000 on this one repair job. In repairing the stern of a vessel a short time ago the bid of a private yard was $8,000. It was done at the League Island Navy Yard for $2,000, a saving of $6,000. Last year there were over 140 vessels of the Shipping Board repaired at the League Island Navy Yard, and I estimate that is true of the other navy yards of the country. But if we allow this force to be dispersed, undoubtedly the repairs of the Shipping Board vessels will be very much greater if not more than doubled in the next year. I yield back whatever time may remain.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, there are two kinds of economy, one true and the other false. I take it that the denial of the appropriation asked for by this amendment is false economy. I heard it said on the floor of this House the other day that an attempt to secure the appropriation called for by the amendment was to keep men in work. Well, very true. I understand that if the appropriation now asked for is defeated there will be thrown out of employment 13,600 skilled workmen. Do you want in these times of unrest, in these times when the cost of living is mounting ever higher, such a large force of skilled workmen to be thrown out of employment? Do not you think that when you disorganize so excellent and efficient a force as the mechanics who are now employed in the navy yards you are doing a positive injustice to the Navy service?

It has been asserted by Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, in the hearings before the committee, that a failure to provide the appropriation now asked means the deterioration of vessels that absolutely and essentially need repair. Is it true or false economy to allow these vessels to go to rot, ruin, and destruction for want of sufficient repair or get to work and keep in good condition and repair these vessels, keep them in condition which would render them serviceable and effective in case of emergency, which, in the last analysis of things, means a large saving to the Government? I, too, believe in economy. I favor economy in every department of the Government where it can be made consistently. I think much money has been wasted in the past. The public at the present time insists upon economy, and have a right to demand it. But the retrenchment in expenses must not be of the penny-wise and pound-foolish variety. We should have the right kind of economy. We do not want the kind of economy that would mean ultimate waste and destruction of vessels necessary for the naval service and the throwing out of employment of the large force of men to which I have alluded. For the reason that I believe that the Government will really save money by making the needed repairs, save the ships, keep them in working order, or else they may go to the junk and the scrap heap, and for the reason that I would not have the force of men the Secretary of the Navy says is so much needed disorganized, I support heartily the amendment. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be at least quite a difference of opinion as to the propriety of this amendment and this appropriation between the experts on the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and the experts of the Navy Department. We were told by the Naval Affairs Committee that this appropriation is not required or needed, but the gentlemen who have charge of the Navy to-day, including the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary, have informed us that it is absolutely necessary.

Now, I realize that a Member of this House who comes from a district wherein lies a navy yard of the Government is more or less held up to ridicule because of the fact that certain Members of this House say that they support this for selfish reasons. Not at all, Mr. Chairman. I want to say as a sound business proposition, as one who has had something to do with the handling of first-class machinery—I wish to say, show me the man who would invest millions of dollars in high-class machinery and, for the want of an expenditure of a few dollars, would allow that machinery to stand at the dock and go to ruin, and then a few months later invest millions of money to pay for the loss that has taken place because of that neglect. That, my friends, is false economy. When this Government appropriated these billions of money for this war and these billions of money for the Navy did they intend that one year after they purchased those ships that they would be thrown into the junk heap? Oh, I hear Members from districts who do not come in contact with the Navy say that this is for the benefit of the cities where the navy yards lie. Not at all. The statistics of the Navy will prove that two-thirds of the boys who make up the men that man our Navy come from Kansas, Illinois, Oklahoma, Texas, and other States. What are you going to say to those boys now, when you said to them, "Join the Navy and see the world," and then give them hulks in which to sail that are unfit to sail the seas?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come from a navy-yard district, and I know as much as some of the experts of the Naval Affairs Committee about the wants of the Navy, so far as repairs are concerned. I have been around the yard and I know the conditions that prevail. There has been no influence brought to bear upon me. I know the conditions, and I say that it is a disgrace to the Government, it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people, to see their money tied up in the form of ships at a dock unfit for service when only a few dollars are required to put them in condition.

The opponents of these amendments tell us we do not need them. We did not need them three years ago, but we were glad to get them, and we paid the top price for them. Are you going to pay the top price for them again?

Then gentlemen say, "Oh, the slackers that work in the navy yards!" Mr. Chairman, that is an insult to the mechanics of this country. There is not a better force of men anywhere to be found than those who work and make up the mechanics in the navy yards of this country, and I defy any man who knows anything about it to contradict it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] spoke very pathetically in favor of this amendment, because, he said, if it was not adopted we would turn thousands of boys out in the cold and pitiless world who a few months ago were fighting for you and for me. That is a beautiful sentiment, but the conditions do not warrant the assertion. These men now employed in the various navy yards during the time that the boys were fighting for you and for me were in bomb-proof positions, fighting for increases in wages, and succeeding in getting them, until at the time of the signing of the armistice they were receiving more money on the average in two days than the boys who were saving the country and the world were receiving in two months.

Mr. MAHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have no time to yield.

I have heard it asked why it is that they are demanding this additional $9,000,000, if this $21,000,000, which the evidence in the case discloses, is now on hand with which they can make all the repairs for all the vessels they can possibly man? I will tell you why it is. The head of every department connected with the Government and which was made larger during the war, desires it to be maintained at war-time strength, and thinks that to have it reduced in the least is to discredit his department. That is not only true in the Navy but it is true in the various branches of the Army and in the various bureaus created during the war. It may be interesting for the committee to know, and I know it will be interesting for the public, that they have 71,000 men employed in these navy yards to-day. If this amendment is not adopted, it will let out 14,000 men. Take 14,000 away from 71,000 and you will find you have 57,000 men still employed in the navy yards of the United States, three times more than were employed in 1916.

The people of this country are more interested, if you please, in seeing that the Congress of the United States is keeping faith with them in our promise to try to bring back this country to a prewar basis of some character. Now, we are trying to carry out the proposition made by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who declared over in New York the other night that we are to build a Navy which will cost a billion dollars a year to maintain. This is one step in that direction.

Then I want to say to you, that if the evidence, not the conclusion, submitted to the committee by those who are in a position to know amounts to anything, they have money now that they can use for the purpose of repairing more ships of the first class than they can man when they have them repaired. So then, why should we be exercising ourselves here in trying to find some way to spend $9,000,000 of the people's money that is needed in so many, many other ways?

They say it will turn some men out of employment. Five months ago, when this matter was up here for consideration, they were urging its adoption for the same reason, alleging that it would not do to turn these men out on the public and insisting that we should take care of them as well as we could by giving them employment in these navy yards. Now, we are confronted with a demand from all over the country for labor and for yet more labor, and still the United States Government, which demoralized labor in the first instance, is keeping these 14,000 men there in the navy yards that are needed around in the different industries throughout the country. Why not let them go where they are needed and not keep them where they are not needed? [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, without regard to politics, Democrats and Republicans alike, joined in a resolution to the effect that they would not recommend the appropriation of a single dollar for public buildings during this session of Congress. We all know that in many places public buildings are needed far more than these vessels are needed. We all know that public buildings should be repaired and that there is more demand for the repair of them than there is for the repair of these ships, which must lie idle at the docks when repaired. And in keeping with that idea of saving money of the people and lessening the burden of taxation, all of the new projects were taken out of the river and harbor bill, not by Democrats, not by Republicans alone, but by a joining of all Representatives who are trying to afford some relief to a tax-ridden people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a short time ago a great and magnificent fleet was sent into the Pacific. Three of those capital ships, including the magnificent New Mexico, the flagship, are tied up at my navy yard at Puget Sound without money to repair them. Less than a month ago I visited the Puget Sound Navy Yard, in my district, and $120,000,000 worth of war vessels are tied up in that yard awaiting repair, with no money available.

There is some discrepancy here between the Secretary and the admirals at the head of the various bureaus on the one hand, when they tell us that this money is necessary, and the experts of the Committee on Naval Affairs on the other hand. I fear for the accuracy of some of these "dry land admirals" when they tell us that we have $21,000,000 on hand now. I say if we have $21,000,000 on hand now, why in the name of God are $120,000,000 worth of war vessels tied up in that yard and no money to repair them?

We have at the Puget Sound Navy Yard—which, by the way, is the only yard on the Pacific coast that the capital ships may enter, and there are only two yards in all the Pacific coast—we have there 3,200 men at present. We had 6,500 during the war. Every man that is left at the Puget Sound Navy Yard is a skilled mechanic in the highest sense of the word. Some of these men will be discharged. The great organization that has been built up at the Puget Sound Navy Yard by Admiral Coontz, who is now chief of the Bureau of Operations of the Navy Department, will crumble and fall to pieces unless Congress grants enough money to keep that organization intact. It is folly, gentlemen, to let that organization go to pieces. There is no such sorry spectacle in all the world as a dilapidated Navy. It is folly to allow a $20,000,000 war vessel to lie in the yard and rust out simply for lack of a few hundred thousand dollars to keep that vessel in repair.

Now, without any reference to politics, under this spirit of economy that we all join in, we can not have a new Federal building, and we can not have a river and harbor improvement, and we can not have enough money to transport the "reds" across the country; but, still without reference to politics, we have now before us an appropriation of $50,000,000 to go beyond the sea when we can not get $9,000,000 out of our own countrymen to keep our own Navy afloat. [Applause.]

I have a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, under date of January 26, which gives four of the prewar dreadnoughts, three of the four dreadnoughts, and four of the other cruisers at the Puget Sound Navy Yard awaiting repairs there. We have at that navy yard as good an organization, as good a class of mechanics, as there is in this country, and we are going to turn some of these men away. Now, those men can not live. Hundreds of them have their families there. Their homes are there. You can not take a mechanic at a navy yard and transfer him to some other point in the twinkling of an eye. His home is there. He owns his home. He has his family there. He must have constant employment. Tell me that you can take a skilled mechanic who has worked for years in that yard and within 24 hours tell him to go somewhere else to get work! These are the men, gentlemen, who kept the navy yards ablaze 24 hours a day during the war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include the letter I mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1920.

Hon. JOHN F. MILLER,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to your letter of January 23, 1920, requesting information relative to the work in prospect at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, and to the effect on that yard of a failure to provide additional funds under the appropriation "Construction and Repair, 1920," the work actually in sight under this appropriation, considering the Navy as a whole, is, as I explained to the Appropriations Committee, in excess of what could be handled even with the additional funds requested by the Navy Department. This condition is even more marked on the Pacific coast, as the organization of the Pacific Fleet has largely increased the work on vessels in service to be handled on that coast and there are only two navy yards available.

The following are the principal vessels under repair or awaiting repair at the Puget Sound Navy Yard:

Arkansas: Under repair, estimated date of completion April 15.
New York: Under repair, estimated date of completion May 1.
Wyoming: Under repair, estimated date of completion May 20.
Nanshan: Under repair, estimated date of completion March 15.
Charleston, Montana, North Carolina, Seattle: At navy yard, no work started; dreadnoughts have precedence.
Texas, New Mexico, Mississippi, Idaho: With Pacific Fleet, date of overhaul dependent on employment of fleet and conditions at navy yard.

In addition to the above vessels, the navy yard has to care for a number of the smaller vessels of the Pacific Fleet.

From the best information immediately available it is estimated that the total cost of the work remaining to be done on the vessels named will be in the neighborhood of $1,250,000, and will be sufficient to occupy the yard at the present rate for 12 months or more, after allowing for the current expenditures for other purposes.

The bureau is unable to give exact information of the effect on the allotments to the Puget Sound Navy Yard of a failure to provide additional funds under the appropriation "Construction and Repair, 1920," as the allotment of funds among the several navy yards must be modified to meet the exigencies of the service as they arise. Considering only the allotment to the Puget Sound Navy Yard for labor, which is the one immediately affecting the size of the force, the best information available at present indicates that the reduction in the monthly allotment would be $40,000 or a little more. This would necessitate a reduction of approximately 300 men in the number paid from this appropriation. It is impossible to estimate the number it would be necessary to discharge, as the number who could be transferred to new building work is unknown. To give you a general idea of the conditions, it is noted that in December there were about 3,200 men engaged on work under cognizance of this bureau in the Puget Sound Navy Yard, of whom about 1,400 were paid from the appropriation "Construction and Repair, 1920," and 1,800 from other appropriations.

The following vessels are under construction at the Puget Sound Navy Yard:

One ammunition ship, nearly completed.

One ammunition ship, about three-fourths completed.

One repair ship, preliminary work well along and about to be laid down.

One submarine tender, recently allotted and practically no work started.

Trusting the above will give you the information you desire, I remain,

Very sincerely,

D. W. TAYLOR,
Rear Admiral, Chief Constructor of the Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

Mr. MAHER. Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of misstatements made on the floor here to-day, and one of the most grievous misstatements that were made was the charge that men holding positions in the navy yards held bomb-proof jobs during the war.

I want to say that orders came from the War Department and the Navy Department to the draft boards not to allow any of the navy yard skilled mechanics to enlist in the service. I have had as many as a hundred navy-yard mechanics come to me individually and say, substantially, "Congressman, we want to enlist in the service, but we have been asked to claim exemption. We do not want to claim exemption; we want to go into the service and go to France." They said, "They showed us a letter from the admiral, the commandant of the yard, to the effect that our services are needed more in the navy yard than in the trenches." These men were compelled to stay in the navy yards against their will, and to-day they are called "slackers," seeking bomb-proof jobs. [Applause.]

To-day we have an illustration of how politicians would run an industrial plant. It is true that the Navy Department must appeal to Congress for the necessary funds for the building of new ships and making the necessary repairs to the other ships, just as the private plants must appeal to the bankers to get the money to carry on their business. But what a situation we would have if the bankers would interfere with those private industries to whom they loan their money. That is the situation here to-day. The supervisory forces of the navy yards, who are the practical men, the very brains of the Government yards, have recommended that this appropriation be made to prevent these ships, valuable Government property, from going to the scrap heap.

When slack times come in the private shipyards the managers hold their skilled forces by putting them to work in positions of minor importance. This is not so with the Government yards, for when slack times arrive they break up their organization and the skilled mechanics are scattered all over the country.

Prior to the late war we had only one set of building ways equipped to build our large dreadnoughts at the New York Navy Yard. To-day we have two sets of ways, and we expect to start building two battleships—Nos. 49 and 50—within the next 90 days, so that instead of having a surplus we will have a scarcity of skilled mechanics. Gentlemen, I hope this House will pass this important appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. ECHOLS].

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Chairman, the observations that were made Saturday on the points of order raised against this amendment were, to me, very interesting, especially the one that it was not a deficiency. It is not at all surprising that there are deficiencies in the Bureau of Yards and Docks. It is more surprising to know just how the Government can expect to raise money to conduct the operations under this department and some others if expenditures are to go on in the future as they have in the past. My understanding is that this amendment, together with two or three others that will be proposed along the same line, will increase the appropriations in this bill by about $9,000,000. I expect to vote against this item and those that follow it along the same line.

Recently the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department had before it a witness, Mr. William H. Cutchin, who was in the Federal employ from 1893 until March 15, 1919. The last 10 years of the time he was in the Federal employ he served in the capacity of detective at the Norfolk Navy Yard. There are some 200 pages in his testimony, including certain reports that he made to his superior officers. That testimony and those reports show that the waste of property and money at the Norfolk Navy Yard reached into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. There was theft, idleness, and extravagance on every hand. Mr. Cutchin (p. 69) spoke as follows:

> They had lost and were losing by theft a lot of stuff there, and nearly every day Mr. Farnum, the chief storekeeper, would come to me and tell that it was impracticable for him to keep anything down there, and that thousands of dollars worth of stuff was stolen there every day. * * * We found hundreds of packages broken open. Just opposite that place or the annex some of the foremen or leading men had rented a place and started a saloon and eating house, and we found a great deal of this stuff going out into this eating house. I went to Pay Director Hicks, who has charge of that department, and told him about the condition of affairs, and he said that he knew it, but that he had his own police down there and that he wanted me to stay out of there and to keep my men out of there.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECHOLS. I can not yield. I have not the time.

Another specific example is found on page 71 of the hearings, where Mr. Cutchin states:

> On February 21, 1918, between 2 and 3 p. m., were in southwestern section of yard. One foreman and 29 negroes, employees of Stevedor Campbell, were engaged in moving ties. They were moving the ties approximately 50 feet, and by actual count moved 15 ties in 10 minutes.

On page 74, he states that as he went through a certain building he found between 50 and 100 workmen loafing, and there was no one there to keep them busy.

On page 93 Mr. Cutchin states:

> The chief of police, Cleaves, was seen coming out of annex with two other workmen carrying alcohol. They got drunk. I reported this matter to the head of the supply department, and he told me to stay away from the annex and also to keep my men away and stop making reports, as they might get to the department and cause trouble. Shortly afterwards Cleaves was promoted and given more pay.

Mr. Cutchin further states that the Government was losing at the yards anywhere from 1 to 75 gallons of alcohol a day.

Mr. Cutchin (p. 95) further states:

> In this Pile case, on November 3, Mr. Henry Pile, sanitary inspector, arrived at the yard at 8.40, left at 2.45, arriving at his house at 4.25. The total number of actual hours made was 5 hours and 30 minutes. The pay roll shows that for this date he was paid for 10 hours. The pay roll shows that on November 4 he made 8 hours and 35 minutes, while he was paid for 8 hours straight time and 2 hours and 30 minutes overtime. On November 5, he made 9 hours, while the pay roll shows he was paid for 8 hours straight time and 2 hours and 30 minutes overtime. On November 9 he made 9 hours and 50 minutes, and the pay roll shows that he was paid for 8 hours straight time and 2 hours and 30 minutes overtime.

Mr. Cutchin (p. 108) testifies that timekeepers would come in the yard and check up and the names were put on the roll; then they would leave the yard and go to town.

The testimony (p. 124) shows that men were sold from one labor agency to another. Three hundred men were brought down from New York at the Government's expense to work at Craddock. They were put on the pay roll there and then sold to another labor agent. They were put at naval base, then sent to McNeil Bros., and finally, after passing two or three labor agencies, would land at Craddock. While the witness does not state specifically this to be a fact, it is reasonable to assume that these labor agencies were not performing such services without compensation, and that they received so much per head for each man transferred from one point to another. (Page 125.) Men were checked in by phone. They were checked in by one name, given a certain number, went to another department or another section of the navy yard, obtained another number, were assigned to duty under another name, and actually drew compensation covering the same period of time under two different numbers and two different names. One man was employed as a laborer. He was given his discharge as a laborer to take up certain duties as a checker. He was not dropped in the accounting department as a laborer, but continued to draw pay both as a laborer and as a checker. He was kept on the two pay rolls for a period of two weeks before there was any detection.

There was so much complaint about the operation of the Norfolk Navy Yard that even the newspapers and the ministers took it up. (Page 132.) One of the ministers, Mr. Abernathy, gave the witness a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, which he took to the Secretary, together with a letter from the editor of the Virginia Pilot; and, using the witness's own language:

I gave them to Mr. Daniels, and he turned the whole matter over to his stenographer, and I have not seen or heard anything of it since. Some time after this I wrote a letter to Mr. Daniels telling him that on the 31st of October the commandant of the yard (Mr. Fechteler) had sent for me and instructed me to investigate the men coming into the yard and leaving at any time of the day that they wanted to and drawing eight hours' pay, and frequently overtime. The commandant had told me to report the true facts to him, as he wanted to know them. He told me to report to Civil Engineer Moore, which I did. I was also instructed that this was to be strictly confidential, and that my business would be with the commandant and with Mr. Moore. Mr. Moore gave me a list of names, and among those names was Mr. Pile, whom we found padding the pay rolls, and who has since been indicted by the grand jury, over the protest of the officers of the yard.

Concerning this matter, the witness, in response to questions, spoke as follows:

Mr. RADCLIFFE. In your statement, did you mention the name of the commandant?

Mr. CUTCHIN. The commandant was Admiral Fechteler.

Mr. BURDICK. You stated that this man Pile was indicted over the protest of whom?

Mr. CUTCHIN. Of certain officers in the yard, and the district attorney.

Mr. BURDICK. Did you give the names of them?

Mr. CUTCHIN. No, sir; I can only say that Mr. Chadwick, the disbursing officer in the yard, was very active in the matter, and Capt. Brumby was also very active in the matter.

I will direct your attention a little later on to the reason that there was a protest by the officers against the indictment of Mr. Pile.

Men would come in and check up. (Page 134.) Their names were put on the muster sheets, and a large number of them would then leave the yard and not come in again until 1 o'clock, and the names were then checked up again and put on the muster sheet. They would then leave again and walk around town.

Memorandum (p. 160) filed by the witness shows:

On October 23, 1917, between 11 and 11.30 a. m., entered toilet building across from machine shop. At this time a big crap game was going on. About 6 enlisted men and about 15 or 20 workmen were around the circle and some dollar bills were on the floor.

An alarm was given and the game broke up.

Beginning with page 151 of the hearings and extending to page 181, there are memoranda and reports filed showing the names and numbers of literally hundreds of employees who were idle engaging in theft and even publicly carrying and hauling away property belonging to the Government. I direct the attention of the committee to the fact that these reports and memoranda were made in 1917 and the early part of 1918, when there was no ill feeling between the witness and those under whom he was employed. It can therefore not be said against the witness that these statements were made on account of hatred or spite to get even with some other employee of the Government.

The statements show that hundreds of laborers on the Federal pay roll loafed around on the job primarily for the purpose of evading the draft law. They were simply using their navy-yard passes for the purpose of evading the law. Hundreds of these laborers on the Federal pay roll from North Carolina and Virginia were brought there through labor agents who received either a specific fee for securing them or, as is shown by the witness (p. 206), that Mr. Campbell, labor agent, guaranteed to the Government that he would furnish laborers at from 40 to 70 cents per hour, and, according to the laborers' understanding, he—Campbell—received 10 per cent of their wages. For example, when he employed a man at $4 per day, he got $4.40 per day.

On page 182 the evidence reads:

Mr. BURDICK. When you reported those things to the captain of the yard, what instructions did he give you?

Mr. CUTCHIN. He would say, "That is all right; let it go." Frequently he would tear up the reports and throw them in the wastebasket.

On page 191 is shown the following testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. In your report of November 23, 1917, to the commandant, subject: Annex, navy yard, Norfolk (Exhibit No. 1), is a statement as follows:

"Since July, 1917, this office has reported on a number of occasions that numerous packages have been allowed to go out through annex gates without any examination whatever being made by watchmen."

Did you personally see any such packages go out?

Mr. CUTCHIN. Yes, sir; hundreds of them.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of packages were they?

Mr. CUTCHIN. I examined several of them. I found condensed milk; I found coffee; I found butter; I found cheese; I found lots of stuff such as that—small stores.

Page 194:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of cases where men using more than one name were employed by contractors working on a cost-plus contract?

Mr. CUTCHIN. I know of a number of cases, but we were only able to get the names and check numbers of people submitted in Mr. Davis's report relative to the large amount of checks that we found. As soon as they found out that I was after getting the names of these people they destroyed all muster sheets, and I was only able to take the duplicate names that they used—if that is a good word—in getting this money.

On pages 197 and 198 of the hearings, Mr. Cutchin gives a rather full statement of his position respecting the matters about which he testifies in which he charges that there were padding of pay rolls, stealing, grafting, and violations of the law, and that he brought these matters to the attention of his superior officers, sometimes making 15 or 20 reports daily; that he came to Washington to explain the matter in person to the Secretary of the Navy; that he was unable to see Mr. Daniels, but was referred to Mr. Curtis, his chief clerk. He says that he was told by Admiral Fechteler that he did not like these reports he was making and he would recommend his discharge; that it was not the intention of either Mr. Fechteler or Mr. Moore to have Mr. Pile investigated, although Mr. Pile had been indicted by the grand jury. He was told to stop making reports and was discharged at the same time. He had been making these reports for many months, but up until October, 1918, Admiral Fechteler, according to the witness' story, was very well pleased with his work and satisfied with his reports as long as they applied to laborers only; but, to use the witness' own language:

When these reports began to apply to negligence on the part of heads of departments, it was at that time he told me he would recommend my discharge unless I resigned.

If this man's statements can be relied upon, there was, during the last few months of his service as detective at Norfolk Navy Yard, property belonging to the Government, about everything from a ship anchor and a hundred cases of hams, at one time down to a pound of coffee, wrongfully taken from the yards right under the noses of those whose duty it was to protect Government property there. If these are the things that make up deficiencies it is no wonder such bills grow into the millions, almost a hundred millions, as this one does. If 10 per cent of this man's statements are true there ought to be a general cleaning up at Norfolk yards and some business methods inaugurated so that the Government can be protected. It is no answer to say the war was on and waste was expected. That answer is growing somewhat stale. Waste was expected but millions of dollars could have been saved and could be saved to-day by the exercise of ordinary intelligence in the conduct of governmental affairs.

There were employed at Norfolk yard 4,000. During the war the number was increased to 11,000. The Bureau of Docks and Yards told me this morning that on July 1, 1919, eight months after the armistice, the number had been increased to 11,220.

The witness having been in the Federal employ for 26 years, employed as a detective 13 years, with 10 years of that time spent at the Norfolk Navy Yard, was considered an excellent employee, received commendations (p. 92, P. F. Harrington, rear admiral, U. S. N., retired) by a retired admiral and others in authority; and as long as his work disturbed no one except the common laborers it was satisfactory. Immediately upon his reports showing that the higher-ups were involved in the waste of public money and property, he was called upon to resign and told if he did not resign he would be discharged; and to put the finishing touches on it, I direct your attention to a letter written by the Secretary of the Navy to the commandant at Norfolk Navy Yard, which letter is found on page 150 of the hearings and reads as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1919.

From: SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.
To: Commandant, Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va.
Subject: W. H. Cutchin, yard detective, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., transfer of.

1. The department has decided to drop the position of yard detective and will transfer the present incumbent, if he so desires, to the position of policeman at $4 per diem, or clerk at $4.16 per diem, in the yard under your command, or the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Norfolk, Va.

2. You will advise the department of Mr. Cutchin's decision in order that the necessary action may be taken.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Under date of March 11, 10 days afterwards, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, wrote almost an identical letter to Mr. Cutchin.

I make no charge of any kind whatever against any officer in authority at Norfolk; I submit the facts and suggest that with nearly every kind of petty crime in the calendar being reported to those in authority at that yard by a man who had been in the detective service of the Government for 13 years and when these crimes were at their height, it is difficult to understand how the Secretary of the Navy and others in authority did not discover that his services were no longer needed until he began to make reports which involved the officers of the navy yard.

I further submit that there was a general denial of the statements made by this witness by Capt. Watt and Capt. Chadwick of the navy yard, but there was little reference by either of these witnesses to the specific cases cited by Mr. Cutchin.

I shall vote against this amendment for the very simple reason that I know from long observation that as long as the officers in charge continue to wink and condone at the waste and extravagance of public money, the waste and extravagance will continue so long as the Congress makes appropriations that are not absolutely necessary.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised to hear my colleague from New York, Mr. MAGEE, make the statement that the Naval Affairs Committee, and the Naval Affairs Committee alone, ought to have brought in this appropriation. I wanted to ask him—but he would not yield—why in the name of common sense this Committee on Appropriations have these headings in this bill relating to naval affairs if they are matters for the Naval Affairs Committee? Why have they a page and a half of this bill under the heading "Naval Establishment"? The amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. TINKHAM, is simply to meet an emergency which actually exists.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I regret that I can not yield. I have not the time. Now, Mr. Chairman, another point I want to bring to the attention of the committee is this: That this same Committee on Appropriations last September unanimously brought in a deficiency appropriation for this same amount and the appropriation was unanimously passed by the House, only to be defeated in the Senate. Since that time nothing has happened to alter the state of affairs except that the need for this emergency appropriation, which was pressing at that time, is now more acute than ever, as evidenced by the letters from the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy which have been read here to-day.

Now, what are the facts of the case? Anybody would suppose, to hear some of the Members opposed to this amendment talk, that no workmen employed in the navy yards had been discharged since the armistice. That is not so in many of the navy yards. In the Boston Navy Yard between 30 and 40 per cent of the workmen in some of the departments have already been discharged. Skilled mechanics who have been employed in the Boston Navy Yard for years have been discharged, and if this emergency appropriation is not made, so far as many of the navy yards are concerned, the destruction of an efficient organization is seriously threatened. Now, every man in this House knows that there is a point beyond which you can not go in the interest of economy.

If you want to give up the Navy, if you want to scrap all these vessels, be men enough to say so and not only refuse this $9,000,000 for absolutely necessary repairs on naval vessels but save hundreds of millions more, because you can save that amount if you are willing to abandon the idea of this country's having an efficient and up-to-date Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, one of the opponents of this amendment made the statement that because of the low wage scale in the Navy a very large number of skilled men of the naval personnel have resigned and that consequently it was impossible to properly man many of the vessels. That the false economy of not paying adequate compensation has seriously crippled the efficiency of the Navy there can not be the slightest doubt. To remedy this situation we have just passed a bill greatly increasing the compensation of the enlisted men and petty officers.

In not heeding the request of the Secretary of the Navy and adopting the amendment now before the House we are about to make another mistake and strike a still more serious blow at the efficiency of the Navy. With scores and hundreds of vessels, representing an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, tied up at the navy yards waiting for necessary repairs, we propose to summarily discharge the skilled mechanics who alone know how to make those repairs. Once you destroy or seriously impair your organization it will take years to build it up again.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Republican Party, which has always stood for an efficient Navy, I shall vote for the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TINKHAM] and trust that in the interest of true economy it will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Iowa use some of his time? I have used more than he has.

Mr. GOOD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, practically every phase of this question has been pretty completely covered, and I will occupy the time of the committee but a few moments. There is one phase of it that I am going to call attention to, because I think there is some confusion in the minds of many of the Members.

Let me say, however, as a preface, that coming, as I do, from a seacoast district, I feel that the Navy of the United States should be made efficient and kept efficient, but I believe also that the policy which this country should adopt should be made here in Congress and not made in the Navy districts of this country. [Applause.] Now, this confusion arises in this way, I think: Some of the gentlemen who are in favor of these amendments say we must spend this money to keep our ships in repair. I will admit that that is an economical thing to do and should be done, but a large part of the money asked by these amendments is for something besides ordinary housekeeping repairs, if I may use the word "housekeeping" in lieu of a better term.

What do I mean by that? It is this: One great lesson of this war, probably the most important, and one we should interpret in iron and steel at the proper time, is an efficient fire control established on every one of our ships. By fire control, of course, I do not mean the term used by a fire department in a city, but in the naval sense—the control of the gunfire, either by single gun, by turret, or by a salvo of a broadside. The old-fashioned method of firing guns by each gun captain pulling a lanyard at the command of the officer in charge has been displaced by a very complicated and a very delicate electrical device, which operates in conjunction with the gyroscopic compass, the range finder, the distance commutator, and so forth. One man in the fire station has complete command over the discharge of every gun, the guns being kept in constant range of the target by the mechanisms down in the citadel of the ship. These fire-control devices are very expensive but are very essential, and eventually should be placed on every one of our larger vessels.

Another lesson of the war has been the location of the bridge, and this, too, is receiving the attention of the bureaus, and changes are now being made on some of our capital ships. Both these repairs, or reconstruction activities, are important to the efficiency of the Navy. I do not deny that, but I do submit that these so-called repairs are not of that character for which these gentlemen who are behind the amendments are contending. That kind of a repair is not a repair in the true sense of the word. It is a permanent improvement for the better efficiency of the Navy and not for the better upkeep of the ship itself. Therefore I claim that a large part of the amount asked for in the amendment is not for that kind of repair to which the argument could be addressed—that unless we make a repair now we will lose money by delay. Change of fire control, change of bridges on the ships, is a matter that can be deferred six months or a year and with no loss except the loss of time.

Furthermore, in testimony before our Naval Committee it developed that work was now going forward making these improvements and that sufficient funds, outside of the amounts asked for, were in hand to take care of all of our capital ships and many of the smaller vessels.

Some say that we must keep the battleships in a state of 100 per cent efficiency. I grant that that is so whenever the times are such that we feel the danger of war, but now, with the people burdened with unheard-of taxes, with the world war weary, I say, we should adopt a policy here in the American Congress that some of the great dreadnoughts should be placed in reserve, and in reserve they do not need all these permanent improvements.

Further, let me add this, that as a firm believer in an efficient Navy I doubt the wisdom of making many costly improvements on ships 15 or more years old, most of which will soon be crossed off the Navy lists.

All these amendments are so related that one is dependent on the other. Let us see what the balances are to meet these so-called "anticipatory deficits." In Construction and Repair on January 1, 1920, the balance on hand unexpended and unobligated was $10,000,000; in Yards and Docks, on same conditions, $2,929,000; in Steam Engineering, on same conditions, $11,000,000; so that $24,929,000 is yet available for this repair work.

I think it was Admiral Griffin who stated that 85 per cent of the repair work of all descriptions could go on even without these additional appropriations.

That is all I have to say on that subject. I believe there is enough money in the balances of these three bureaus at the present time to take every one of them through until the 1st day of next July if they will confine that money to the ordinary housekeeping repairs on battleships.

I want to put this further fact in the RECORD, that the employees of the navy yards are entitled to their day in court. They are entitled to come to Congress and ask us to keep them employed; but they are patriotic Americans and, I know, can not expect the navy yards in peace times to operate on the same scale as in war times. I will regret their leaving the service, but good positions are awaiting them if the bureaus decide they must reduce their force.

Construction and Repair reports that the number of civilian employees in the yards in their bureau on January 1, 1920, was 57,007, and that on June 1, 1916, it was 22,842.

We hear much about the opinion of Navy experts. It is their duty to make recommendations and submit estimates that will keep their bureaus at the highest stage of efficiency; but it is our duty to outline a policy, for if every amount asked for was granted, unheard-of sums would be poured into the departments.

Our responsibility is twofold. The welfare of the taxpayers on one side and the proper management of the Government on the other. For the reasons outlined above, I oppose the amendments offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. VARE had leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it seems to me that there are three questions involved in this discussion. One is that of real economy, the second is efficiency in the Navy, and the third finding employment for American citizens.

Is it economy to have the ships of the Navy lying in a condition which makes them unfit for service?

Would the practical business man consider it efficient to have his rolling stock in a run-down condition?

Some one has said that there was a propaganda on the part of certain naval employees to find work. I do not know whether there is such propaganda, but I am proud, so far as I am concerned, as a Member of Congress, of the efficiency of the employees of the Philadelphia Navy Yard. I am proud of the part these men took in this great war, and I am especially proud of the part Philadelphia took in supplying this great fleet of ships during the world-wide war.

The recognition given these men and the attitude of persons who believe in the maintenance of the efficiency of the Navy are best illustrated in a telegram I just received from the chairman of the American Legion in Philadelphia, which I will read:

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the approximately 1,500 former service men in the Philadelphia Navy Yard who will lose their places if the naval item is not restored to the general deficiency bill, I bespeak your earnest support and that of the other Congressmen from Philadelphia of a motion to restore the item. Anything that you may be able to do in that direction will be appreciated by all the former service men in Philadelphia.

GEORGE WENTWORTH CARR,
Philadelphia County Chairman of the American Legion.

The Republican Party has been committed to a policy of preparedness. Why the change in that policy? Only a few months ago this identical item was passed in this Chamber and in the Appropriations Committee without the slightest argument on the part of any person on this side of the aisle. The Republican leadership now stands in this House reversing the policy which it followed so few months ago. The need of appropriations is apparent.

At the Philadelphia Navy Yard alone there are 13 battleships, 12 of which bear the names of great States in this Union. Do you men from the great State of Alabama want the ship bearing the name of your State placed in the discard as unfit for active service. The same could be asked in the case of the gentlemen from Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, and Wisconsin. The Kearsarge, another great battleship, is awaiting repairs at Philadelphia.

Other ships of the larger type awaiting repairs are the armored cruisers Frederick and Pueble; the cruiser St. Louis; the destroyers Allen, Ammen, Alywyn, Beale, Burrows, Cassin, Colhoun, Craven, Cummins, Davis, Drayton, Ericsson, Fanning, Harding, Hanley, Jarvis, Jenkins, Jouett, Little, McCall, Maury, Maygrant, Monaghan, Nicholson, Patterson, Paulding, Perkins, Porter, Ringgold, Roe, Rowan, Shaw, Sigourney, Sterett, Stevens, Stringham, Terry, Trippe, Tucker, Wadsworth, Wainwright, Walke, Warrington, Wilkes, and Winslow; the submarines N–7, O–11, O–12, O–13, O–14, O–15, O–16, and U–117; monitors Cheyenne, Ozark, and Tonopah; the transport Hancock; the surveying ship Hannibal; and the tender Isabel.

When I became a Member of this House in 1912 I found that the then Secretary of the Navy turned a deaf ear to proposed improvements and extension for the Philadelphia Navy Yard. By constant and persistent effort the many advantages of the Philadelphia Navy Yard were impressed upon the Naval Affairs Committee, so that previous to and during the war the yard was recognized as the most up-to-date and efficient naval station in the country.

A weakening of the force of men that did so much to create this record for the Philadelphia yard would be playing into the hands of the shipbuilding combination that tends toward making a monopoly. Surely Republican success does not mean the building up and creating monopolies. If these appropriations are denied it the efficiency of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, which is able to build battleships and build them cheaper than any private yard in the country, whether you intend to do so or not, will be destroyed. So will all the great yards, thereby making it possible for private shipbuilding combines to charge the Government an unreasonable price for construction of our ships.

Japan is spending $230,000,000 to increase the size and efficiency of her navy. This item represents a large part of the Japanese annual budget. Compared with this the United States, by the defeat of this provision, refuses $9,000,000 to put in repair ships that become disabled by reason of two years' active service in the war.

The Republican leadership in the House has done well with its economy program, but does not this false economy weaken the foundation of the general policy? Must we give up our interest in the Navy and preparedness? Must we weaken the efficiency of the Navy, now second among the great navies of the world, while Japan is sparing no expense to establish herself as a major power on the high seas? Gentlemen, actual economy dictates that the efficiency of any large governmental institution be maintained. It is for the maintenance of that vital arm of the Government service, the Navy, the first line of defense, for which we ask favorable action on the pending amendments.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Massachusetts took the floor in defense of his amendment providing for two and a half million dollars appropriation for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, he is requesting the House to give that bureau $1,600,000 more money than the chief of the bureau himself desires. I can readily understand why there might be confusion between the two gentlemen, because the chief of the bureau himself did not know just where that $2,500,000 was going. When he was questioned by the members of the committee as to how that appropriation would apply directly or indirectly on the repair of ships he could not answer, and neither could anyone else. The amendment that is before the House is for two and a half million dollars for the maintenance of yards and stations. The chief of the bureau says that he will positively require $846,000, and I am in favor of giving him $846,000 for the item of maintenance of yards and stations. The maintenance of yards and stations under this bureau means that the civil engineer in charge will care for the public utilities of the yards, the light, the heat, the fuel, the sewers, the water, and the roadways, and the sidewalks, and items of that character. It is very easy to see that these do not apply directly to the repair of ships. The yards must be maintained, and I am in favor of appropriating at this time $846,000—just exactly what yards and docks need. That amount is positively shown in this way: Four hundred thousand dollars of it goes to the classified employees, who are technical men, engineers, draftsmen, and so forth, who will have to be let out between now and the 1st of March unless this deficiency appropriation goes through. The limitation for these employees is raised in the bill to $400,000, but no appropriation is carried. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars is necessary at the rate of $75,000 a month for five months, as the yards are going in the hole to that extent, and we have to maintain them to this extent. Then there is another $71,000 that the Bureau of Yards and Docks owes to the Bureau of Construction and Repair. It owes that money just as you might owe for a suit of clothes or a hat, or anything that you buy. That was made necessary when the half of the Navy went to the Pacific coast last year.

"Construction and Repair" had to advance money to "Yards and Docks" in order to care for the mooring of ships, and do work that ordinarily comes under "Yards and Docks." That makes a total of $846,000. I maintain that that money should go in this bill, and I hope that we on the Committee on Naval Affairs who are practically unanimously agreed on that amount can convince other Members of the House to see the wisdom of placing in this deficiency bill that amount for "Maintenance," under the Bureau of Yards and Docks. I shall speak directly to the amendment, which I think should be given consideration, for no one has yet spoken about it. We are all driving at the same purpose. Every Member on the floor of the House, I care not what his opinion or politics may be, is driving at the same purpose as I am, namely, the efficiency of the Navy. We all love the Navy. We are proud of the Navy, and I say to you gentlemen, just as sincerely as it is possible for me to do so, that the Navy will not be hurt one iota if the $9,000,000 is not appropriated at this time. It is almost like giving soothing sirup to a baby. He does not like to take it, but it will do him good. Let us see what will happen if this appropriation does not go through.

Gentlemen who have spoken before me on the floor of the House have said that 13,600 skilled workmen will be discharged from the various yards of the country if this $9,300,000 deficiency appropriation is not made effective at this time, and I can only reply that my judgment and theirs is in complete discord.

The greater portion of these mechanics will probably be transferred from "repair" work to new ship-construction work, and those that are not transferred can probably rightfully be declared to be the least efficient men in the various yards.

I take exception to statements preceding mine, that a great percentage of this $9,300,000 is to be expended on repair work for 15 dreadnoughts, 13 predreadnoughts, a number of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. On the contrary, a very large portion of this amount is to be expended on new work on the various ships of our Navy. In other words, existing ships will be improved with launching platforms for aeroplanes, and these same ships will also be provided with new fire-control systems, and other expenditures will be made on improvements which should not be classified as "repairs."

It is quite remarkable that a propaganda was started last July, directly after the passage of the annual appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1920, by which navy-yard employees would reap not only increased salaries but would also be insured permanent employment through a deficiency appropriation by Congress, and that is one of the reasons why I am against favorable action on this item at this time.

The deficiency appropriation is not urgently required by the Navy, nor will the enlisted personnel of the Navy suffer at all if it is not approved by the House at this time.

If the pending amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is favorably acted upon it will force upon the Bureau of Yards and Docks more than a million dollars in excess of its desires, and I am sure that the House has no intention of doing this in this day of expenditure curtailment.

I hold in my hand a list showing 90 training stations and yards in various parts of the country, which shows that they are expending $75,000 per month in excess of their respective allotments from the Bureau of Yards and Docks for "maintenance."

If approximately $800,000 is not included in this deficiency bill for maintenance under Yards and Docks many of the yards and stations will suffer very serious losses in efficiency and value to the Navy.

I am pleased to call to the attention of the House the fact that the Great Lakes Training Station, with its capacity for accommodating no less than 50,000 recruits, shows a total expenditure for maintenance under Yards and Docks during the year 1919 of $1,047,000, or a monthly rate of $87,000 for the fiscal year of 1919.

This same station has now had its maintenance allotment under Yards and Docks cut to $17,666.67 and is operating quite successfully within the amount allotted, and will continue to do so to the end of the present fiscal year, if necessary.

If the commandants of all of the other stations and yards could be brought to understand that they must not exceed their allotments and that they were violating the law when creating obligations in excess of allotments it would be a good thing for the Treasury and a good thing for the Navy.

I am glad to compliment Rear Admiral Frederick Bassett and his very capable staff at the Great Lakes Training Station on the fine showing they have made, and I am sure that the House appreciates what they are attempting to do at Great Lakes.

While I am on this subject it is but fair to say that the chief clerk at that station, Hugh Wilson Fisher, might very properly be awarded a Navy cross for the magnificent work he gave to the Navy and to the Nation during the recent war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, yesterday evening when I offered a letter to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I made the statement that the time that would be allotted to my side in all probability would not permit of my participation in this debate. Simply as a matter of good faith I want to say that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has accorded to me three minutes in which to express my viewpoint of this matter. I hardly believe it is necessary to make this explanation, as I do not think any gentleman on the floor would believe that I am lacking in good faith, but probably out of an abundance of caution it is well to clearly express oneself and to show that there is no intention to do anything other than to live up to the best traditions of the House.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been said upon this subject. I know that is the time-honored way of approaching what is in one's mind, and in fact is almost bromidic, but I really know in all probability that anything that might be said from now on will be somewhat like carrying coals to Newcastle or snow to Lapland. It has occurred to me in view of the wide range of discussion and the fact that in all probability truth has been lost sight of in the mass of things that have been said pro and con that it is just as well to get back and find out what is in issue before this committee. The proponents of this amendment claim it is necessary to have approximately $10,000,000 to preserve the efficiency of the Navy. I imagine that if one were in court as a practitioner of law, endeavoring to express his own viewpoint and to carry his case felicitously as well as he could from the evidence that he had amassed, he would like to present it from the standpoint of the witnesses most competent to speak on the subject. Therefore I am going to see whether or not I can appeal to those who are competent to speak on this matter, men that the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs have relied upon in the past for information when they desire information. First of all, let us see what the Secretary of the Navy says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 21, 1920.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The serious situation with reference to the military efficiency of the Navy impels me to write earnestly inviting the attention of Congress to the necessity of the deficiency appropriation of $10,314,962.19, requested by me in my letter to you of the 18th day of December, 1919, and which passed the House last summer, but which failed of passage in the Senate. The conditions are much more serious now than they were when presented at that time and are set forth fully in the accompanying letters from the chiefs of the Bureaus of Operations, Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Yards and Docks. It will be seen from these letters that unless an appropriation is available, there will be a serious loss of the military efficiency of the Navy. These officers whose letters I am inclosing are charged with the responsibility of keeping the fleet in readiness for any emergency that may occur, and their letters show the necessity for this appropriation. I need not say to you that the necessity of discharging 13,900 skilled artisans, whose services to the Navy in the war was one of the important factors of its efficiency, would be a matter of grave concern and that without this appropriation it will be my painful duty to discharge these men because there will be no funds to pay them. I am sure that the Congress when they read these letters from the naval officers who have given this matter great study will agree with me that this is a matter of immediate importance and prompt action will be taken.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

And whom does he call to the witness stand to corroborate his testimony? R. E. Coontz, Chief of Naval Operations; Admirals Taylor and Griffin; and C. W. Parks, Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Against this array of experts and men thoroughly capacitated to testify on this subject we have hearsay testimony that should be deemed to be unreliable and unsafe, if not irrelevant and inadmissible. Of course that is a figure of speech, because I am fictitiously presenting this case as one at law or in equity, and am appraising the witnesses from their competency to testify and the value that should be attached to their testimony.

Gentlemen, you would do well to harken to those that appeal to you to evidence a spirit of liberality, if necessary, in behalf of our Navy. Wars are not over. The entire Christian church in all of its branches and denominations and with its splendidly organized ministry, probably as a whole the most highly educated, efficient, intellectual, and largest body of its kind in the history of the world, ancient or modern, could not prevent the last war among Christians almost exclusively, a war that threatened to engulf the church as well as all other evidences of civilization. Wars are not at an end, gentlemen. Just as long as human nature remains what it is will the sword be the final arbiter of the destinies of nations and races. Homer Lea, in his Valor of Ignorance, says that beginning with a period of 1,500 years before Christ until the present time there were but 227 years of peace, and that these years were evidently spent in preparing for the wars that followed them. He did not go further back than 1,500 years in his researches, for the reason that it is apparent that the centuries that rolled their way into eternity before his starting point must have been but one bloody record of slaughter in which tribe after tribe, nation after nation, sank beneath a sea of blood.

Wars are not over—only a bloody emotion and drama of the past. We are polished, but just as primeval and elemental when the interests of our country are in issue as the cave man was when his cave was attacked or endangered. Beware, my countrymen! The seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow. If ever our country is invaded, it must be from beyond the Atlantic or Pacific. Our first line of defense is our Navy. Our first engagement or engagements must be fought on sea. There, in a watery grave, will sink the hopes of our enemies or our own. My fellow Members, beware of that false economy which means the most ruinous extravagance. Do not, I appeal to you, imperil the country by impairing the efficiency of the great workshop of the Navy—the yards and docks. Do not let your skilled workman go. The day, the hour, when you may need him no man can tell, but it may be nearer than you dream.

"Semper paratus"—always ready—should be a motto of our Navy and navy yards and docks. Who can tell when the next storm will burst and where? Millions for defense but not a cent for tribute should ever be in the minds of the American people in its fullest and largest sense and meaning. Let the Stars and Stripes float over the decks of the greatest Navy in the world and over the best, the largest, and most efficient navy yards in the world, and then we can answer when fate summons us to justify ourselves on sea, "We are here." "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" should not be forgotten. "Preparedness" should be the watchword of America now and forever!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. O'CONNOR to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the officers in the Navy Department to make proper recommendations to the Secretary of the Navy for the expenditures of money which they think may profitably be expended. Under our system of government, without a responsible Cabinet, it is the natural course for the Secretary of the Navy to make his recommendation in accordance with the recommendations of the chiefs of the bureaus under him. They are not concerned at all with the balance sheet in the end. They do not have the responsibility of determining how much money shall be raised by the Government or how much money shall be expended by the Government. If they should refuse to make a recommendation for the expenditure of money which afterwards was not expended and damage resulted because of that fact, they would be blamed. Therefore they recommend money wherever they think it is possible to profitably expend it. But we have a different responsibility.

The war is over. Congress poured out its appropriations for and during the war without stint. The people met the expenditures without complaint. But that time has passed. [Applause.] We have got to economize. The only way to economize is to economize. The only way to stop large appropriations is to refuse to make them. The only way to reduce the expenditures of the Government is for Congress, with its plenary power, to refuse to give the money. [Applause.] We have got either to refuse to give the money or we have got to raise more money. Who will favor the additional taxation? Every dollar of additional taxation which we put upon the people will increase the cost of living. Every dollar of bonds, if we should dare to provide for an issuance of bonds to pay the current running expenses of the Government in time of peace, will add to the cost of living. You can not eat your cake and have it, too. We have either got to reduce the appropriations and expenditures of the Government or we have got to raise more money. It is not a partisan matter. I appeal to the Republican side of the House to be economical, and I likewise appeal to the patriotism of the Democratic side of the House. We can not keep up these great appropriations and have the Government succeed. [Applause.] I think that this is a case where we can at least afford to wait. The refusal of this appropriation now is only waiting. Nobody believes that the Navy will be destroyed if we do not make this appropriation, but I warn you that unless we reach a point where we propose to be economical we on both sides of the House will probably not only be destroyed but we will do our share to prevent successful government. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the naval appropriation bill for the current year carries for maintenance of yards and docks and for repairs to ships $84,000,000. That is considerably more than half the entire cost of the Navy the year we entered the war. I refuse to believe that the Navy is so inefficient, that it is so badly run, that the men in the yards are so inefficient, that with $84,000,000 for these purposes all needful and necessary repairs are not or will not be made upon the major ships of the Navy. [Applause.] I do not believe it. I will not subscribe to any such indictment either of the Navy Department or of the men who work in the yards. We did not expect when we appropriated $84,000,000 to keep all the men in the yards in war numbers employed for the year. We did not expect, and nobody expects, these men will be permanently employed in the numbers in which they were employed during the war, and if I had a navy yard constituency and I was working in their interests, as I know gentlemen want to do, I would not want to have the force maintained to the maximum until the last repair was made, then necessitating a clearing out of the yards, practically discharging every man in them, or else holding them, unnecessarily spending the public money. It is not in the interest of the employees in the yards that they shall be held there in maximum numbers until operations cease, when practically all of them must be discharged. It is in their interest, as it is to the interest of the people of the country, that the force shall be gradually reduced, keeping only the men who are necessary to keep up repairs that should be made as we move along toward normal conditions. Why, we are retrenching everywhere else. We are retrenching in every other line. But gentlemen who represent these constituencies apparently refuse to join in the practically unanimous determination of the House that we will get back to normal. Everybody who knows anything about the situation knows that no harm will come to the Navy if no additional dollar is appropriated. [Applause.] And we all know that the American people are demanding of us that we shall not spend the public money simply to keep men employed. [Applause.] The country is full of opportunities, and these men as patriotic citizens should seek those opportunities and not insist upon remaining on the public pay roll when elsewhere men are being discharged and we are getting back to normal conditions. Gentlemen, we must cut the estimates of appropriations a billion and a quarter this year, and if we are to do that we certainly can not afford then to go outside and above the estimates and appropriate millions of dollars for purposes that are not absolutely essential. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT.] [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if I can, I wish to make a plain and dispassionate statement to the committee. It was stated this morning that the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the consideration of this matter, had passed a resolution opposing these appropriations, and that there was a small minority who voted against that resolution. I was one of the number who voted against the resolution. Later, attention being called to it, it was modified in that the committee should favor $800,000 for Yards and Docks. Now, let us understand the condition. There are four amendments to be considered, but they are so intertwined and interlapped that to vote intelligently they should be considered with each other. The Bureau of Yards and Docks is asking for a deficiency appropriation of $2,500,000, Steam Engineering is asking for $2,500,000, Construction and Repair wants $3,250,000, and Supplies and Accounts $1,050,000, making a total of $9,300,000. If the appropriations for Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering are not made, Supplies and Accounts will not need any, because theirs is based upon the enlarged activities of those two bureaus by virtue of granting the $2,500,000 and the $3,250,000 for those two bureaus. If they are denied, Supplies and Accounts would not have to have the enlarged activities, but if they are granted, the enlarged activities in the purchase, handling, transportation, receiving, and issuing out at the various yards will necessitate this additional expenditure of $1,050,000. With reference to Yards and Docks, there is an estimate of $2,500,000; $1,500,000 of that depends upon these appropriations for Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering. If they are not granted, Yards and Docks will not need that $1,500,000, and it would reduce theirs to $1,000,000.

The committee based its recommendation of $800,000 upon a statement that was made by Admiral Parks that he thought that to his current appropriation certain expenditures had been charged which should be charged to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and that he thought he could recover that, and if he could do so he could get on with $846,000. But there is no assurance that he is correct in his opinion. The expenditures have been made and charged to the other appropriations, and I think that is a contingency that it is not safe for us to figure upon. And therefore he asked for the $1,000,000 independent of whether the appropriations were made to the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and of Steam Engineering.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not time.

Mr. BEE. I wanted to get some information right there.

Mr. PADGETT. I think perhaps I will be able to give it to you.

Now, with that explanation we can understand how these bureaus interlock and interlap one with the other. What is the general condition? The Navy was used very largely and very actively during the war, and after the signing of the armistice in the transportation of the troops home. They were subjected to very severe ordeals and very severe work, so that the result is that large numbers of our ships, of all the types, beginning with our largest dreadnaughts and coming down through the battleships and the cruisers to the submarines and the destroyers, are in a state of needing repairs.

Now, then, here is the plain proposition: The repairs can be postponed, the ships can be neglected, they can be let run, or, on the other side, they can be taken up promptly for repair. It is the decision between the two propositions.

Every man who was before us showed, and all the facts show, that there is a large number—and nobody will dispute, I dare say, that there is a large number—of the ships of all the types awaiting and needing necessary repairs. And every officer who testified—the Secretary of the Navy in his letter, the Assistant Secretary who appeared before the committee, and the chiefs of the bureaus—stated that these repairs were needed, and that if made now on the policy of keeping up as far as we can with current work and not lapping over into next year the work that should be done this year, it can be done more economically and more satisfactorily, but if it is not done this year it will have to be done next year.

Now, then, the statement has been made before the Members here that we can postpone this and that it can be done next year. Certainly it can. But I do not think that is a good policy. I think that as far as we can we should carry on and keep up the work current with the current demands.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not, as I have such a little amount of time.

Now, it has been stated here the Bureau of Construction and Repair and the Bureau of Steam Engineering have $21,000,000 unexpended. Yes; that is true. Now, just get back to the facts. In the estimates last year the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair submitted originally an estimate of $37,500,000 as needed for this current year in his bureau to care for the work. Later that was tentatively reduced to $35,000,000. Later on in the hearings Admiral Taylor stated that $33,000,000 would be the irreducible minimum; that he could not under any circumstances get along with less than $33,000,000.

The committee cut it to $31,000,000. Now, then, he is asking for $2,500,000 deficiency. That is a half million only above what he stated, when we were making the bill a year ago, was an irreducible minimum, and less by several millions than he had estimated for the work that it would be necessary for him to do to keep current with repairs.

The same thing occurred with reference to Steam Engineering. They submitted estimates. They stated what they would require. They were reduced to $26,000,000 instead of being given the $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 that they were asking.

At the beginning of the fiscal year apportionments of the several appropriations were made by the Assistant Secretary, as Acting Secretary, for the first six months of the fiscal year—for example, in Yards and Docks 55 per cent was apportioned, leaving 45 per cent for the last half of the year. As the appropriation made was much less than the estimates submitted as needed for the year, the allotments to the several yards and stations had to be greatly reduced. For illustration, at the operating base—Hampton Roads—during the fiscal year 1919 the monthly allotment was $101,000. This was reduced for the current fiscal year to $30,000. As a matter of fact, it has required $88,000 a month to meet the expenses of this great and varied activity of the Navy. Similar conditions existed in the other bureaus. Demobilization was going on. The times were abnormal. We were endeavoring to go from a state of war back to a state of peace, and to do so as rapidly as possible. Demands were being made from all quarters to demobilize and to do so rapidly. This required great activity at the navy yards and stations, and consequently required expenditure of money. The Acting Secretary of the Navy called attention to these conditions and demands at the time and that more money would be needed. Responding to those demands, this House at the last session provided a deficiency of $9,300,000, being the same amount now asked and for the same purposes and uses as now requested. This failed in the Senate.

I may add that the last naval bill contained a new provision under maintenance yards and docks, providing that naval stations might be supplied any deficiencies in their separate appropriations out of this appropriation for maintenance yards and docks.

This placed an added burden on this appropriation.

With reference to the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and of Steam Engineering, it is true they together have on hand $21,000,000 remaining out of a total appropriation of $57,000,000. So it will be seen that for the last half of the year they have remaining 37 per cent of the appropriation for the year, having used 63 per cent. If this deficiency is granted, these two bureaus can enlarge their activities and do the much needed work on the many ships of the Navy. If the deficiency is not granted, the work will be postponed and be done later at a greater cost. It is axiomatic that the more promptly repairs are made the cheaper they can be done, and such a practice is in keeping with sound business principles. It is no saving of money to delay the work. The money will have to be appropriated next year, and in the meantime the damage is increasing. It is said we are short on personnel at the present time and that steps are being taken to restore the personnel. This is true. It seems to me that is an argument to do the work now on the ships, while we are waiting for men, so that later when we get the men we will have the ships ready.

It will require months to do these extensive repairs, and while we are securing the men to restore the personnel the ships can be repaired and be ready for the men when the personnel is restored.

The other argument produces a condition that we will get the men and afterward repair the ships, so that while the ships are awaiting completion of repairs during several months the men will be awaiting the ships. I do not think such procedure is wise or businesslike.

These appropriations should be made now, so that the repair of the ships and the restoration of the personnel should go along together and be ready for each other as nearly the same time as possible. I do not believe in having an idle period for the ships while men are being secured to man them, and after the men are secured have another idle period of both men and ships while the ships are undergoing repairs. That is not my idea of good business or good legislation or good administration.

I am in receipt of a copy of preamble and resolution adopted by the American Legion of Honor at Philadelphia, which I think expresses a sound policy and principle, and I call it to the attention of the House. It is as follows:

FEBRUARY 4, 1920.

The county committee, Philadelphia County, of the American Legion, at a regular meeting held this date, passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas it has been brought to our attention that the items in the general deficiency bill now being considered by Congress covering expenditures necessary for the essential repairs to our battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats, mine sweepers, transports, and other naval vessels is in danger of defeat; and

"Whereas the items for the Navy in the general deficiency bill have the unqualified approval of such naval experts as Admiral Coontz, Chief of Naval Operations; Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair; and Admiral Griffin, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering; and Admiral Hughes, commandant of the Philadelphia navy yard, who are unquestionably in a position to judge whether or not these items are necessary to keep the vessels of the Navy in condition for service; and

"Whereas it is vitally necessary for the good of the country in general and the Navy to keep the vessels of the Navy which have been on long and constant service in the war zone ready for action and any emergency; otherwise the millions of dollars spent to build these vessels would have been spent in vain; and

"Whereas it would be false economy to delay these necessary repairs which are now already urgent, and we call upon our Representative in Congress to differentiate between the absolutely necessary and essential expenditures for the maintenance and upkeep of our naval vessels and others that can be eliminated; and

"Whereas we are not unmindful of the necessity for a reduction in the Government expenditures, but remembering the magnificent record made by the Navy in the World War and its efficiency in transporting our troops and bringing them home and the necessity of keeping our battleships ready to meet any unforeseen emergency, we again earnestly request our Representatives in Congress to give their strong support to the items in the deficiency bill and not to vote to cripple our Navy. It is recommended that similar action be taken by all other similar committees of the American Legion throughout the country: It is further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to all Representatives in Congress, furnished to the press of the country, and also sent to our representative in Washington in order that the position of the American Legion in reference to the upkeep and maintenance of our Navy may be known."

GEORGE WENTWORTH CARR,
Chairman.

I am also in receipt of a letter from the honorable Secretary of the Navy calling attention to the urgent need for these deficiency appropriations and expressing his strong desire for the early appropriation of these several sums, which letter I call to the attention of the House. It reads as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 3, 1920.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT, M. C.,
Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: Your continuous devotion to the Navy's interests induces me to request that you will give your most earnest attention to the need of an immediate deficiency appropriation as indicated in my recent letter to the Speaker of the House, with the accompanying correspondence covering technical facts, which appeared in the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 31.

There has been no effort to exaggerate the urgency of the present demand for funds, because an analysis of the situation will readily show that there is no reason to do so. The facts at issue speak for themselves. The postwar repairs necessary on 6 of our 15 dreadnoughts can not be completed during the present fiscal year with the money from appropriations now available. Thirteen of our predreadnoughts, the total number we expect to keep in effective condition for action, and seven of our eight armored cruisers are in a similar state of unreadiness. The destroyers and submarines, which are necessary complements of a modern fighting fleet, are also in need of the changes required to keep them to the present-day standard of military efficiency.

It is not considered possible, with safety, to put off the repairs on these vessels until the appropriations for the next fiscal year become available. It would amount, in the present unstable condition of international affairs, to postponing the date of readiness for effective action of our first-line ships to an indefinite time in the future. Another phase, too, is presented by the enforced discharge of about 13,900 skilled workmen from our industrial yards, which is the estimated loss that we shall be compelled to suffer, if no more funds are made available during the current fiscal year. This loss will entail not only the personal suffering of many of the workmen involved, but the difficult rebuilding of our industrial force, which is now performing satisfactorily with ample essential work in sight. May I therefore beg your most earnest cooperation in the procurement of the funds shown necessary in my estimate presented to the Speaker of the House?

I am sending a similar letter to Hon. T. S. BUTLER, the chairman of the committee.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

In view of these considerations and conditions I feel constrained to urge upon the House the importance of these several items and the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when the war broke out we had 85,000 men in the Navy and when it ended we had over 500,000 men. Between those two events every branch of the service had to be enormously expanded, including, of course, the navy yards. I presume the navy yards were expanded five or six times what they were before the war. I think we had something like 13,000 or 14,000 men doing a certain grade of work in all the navy yards of the country put together, and while many have been discharged we still have 58,000 men in these yards engaged on the same kind of work. Now, one of the hardest things in the world, of course, is to reduce the size of an establishment of this kind operated by the Government. But we are absolutely face to face with that proposition. It is utterly and totally impossible for this Government to try to keep up these tremendous naval establishments in times of peace. We have no use for them, and to attempt it would swamp the Treasury. Now, I do not think there is a man here who believes that I would vote against an appropriation which was necessary for the successful operation of the essential ships of the fleet. I stood here the other day asking the House for an increase of pay for the men because the ships were tied up in the navy yards for lack of skilled men. The ships, generally speaking, are not in the navy yards to-day because of lack of repairs. They are there because we have not the men to run them. The dreadnoughts, all but three, are in commission and at sea. They can not be run over 10 or 12 miles an hour because of the lack of skilled mechanics on them and not because they are out of repair. Admiral Taylor and Admiral Griffith told us last night that the 13 predreadnoughts would all be in commission to-day and at sea if we had the crews. These predreadnoughts that Brother VARE speaks about up in Philadelphia would be at sea if there were men to man them. Their regular overhaul can be made long before the men are available, out of funds now on hand or available July 1.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am sorry that I have not the time.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right, though.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman must excuse me, for I have not time.

Mr. VARE. They have them in reserve, however.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The ships that the gentleman speaks of are able to go to sea now if we had the men to put on them. They are not tied up for lack of repairs. Of course, there are destroyers there that need repairs, 40 or 50 of them, possibly; but we have built 300 new destroyers since the war began, and some of the old destroyers never should be repaired at all. There is no trouble about having all the destroyers necessary for the fleet ready for sea. The fact is we have so many destroyers we hardly know what to do with all of them. Three or four months ago the Navy Department was asking $18,000,000 for this purpose. They are now asking but $9,000,000. The fact is you could spend almost any sum you might name. You could spend $20,000,000 or even $50,000,000 in putting into perfect condition scores of the old ships of the Navy. We have some that were built as far back as 30 years ago, and if you undertook to equip them with all the modern improvements, modern fire control and all that kind of thing, you could exhaust the Treasury on them and then they would be old, obsolete ships. A thorough survey should be made of all the ships of the Navy with a view to scrapping some of them.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] spoke of fire control being put on the ships of the dreadnought class. It was testified that with $21,000,000 now available for repairs of ships all the dreadnoughts, all the predreadnoughts, 208 destroyers, and 70 or 80 submarines can be put in perfect condition, including the installation of the new system of fire control on the dreadnoughts. To do this it may be necessary to discontinue for the present work on some of the minor craft, but this will in no way affect the efficiency of the Navy.

With the money the Navy Department has on hand for this purpose the essential fighting ships will not suffer for repairs between now and July 1, when the next regular appropriation will be available. There is no doubt about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. GOOD. We will have only one more speech on this side.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think the gentleman who is the proponent of the amendment should have control of the closing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The man in charge of the bill has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by more experienced Members than himself that it is the universal rule to allow the gentleman in charge of the bill to close the debate.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman accepts the advice of "a more experienced Member," I will agree that it is the advice of a very able Member.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated to the House a number of times, the Committee on Appropriations in September last reported a bill to the House carrying this appropriation. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the chairman of that committee, then addressed the House. I always have great confidence in his judgment, and therefore I read from the RECORD of September 19, 1919, what he then said:

> The committee did not want to take the responsibility of having a great many battleships tied up because of a lack of funds for repairs. The committee would not act upon this question without going to the committee that is composed of experts on the subject, and so called in the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. This provision would not have been put in the bill at all if it had not been with the consent and even the advice of that committee, because we recognized what we reported out was in the nature of a supplemental appropriation rather than a deficiency appropriation, but when the members of that committee said they did not want to take the responsibility of denying this fund for fear the Navy might be needed for some reason or other and if needed many of the vessels tied up because we had not appropriated the money, it seemed to us we could not take that responsibility. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] and other members of the committee—the gentleman from Tennessee—were freely consulted, and I am frank to say we not only followed their advice, but all the information which the committee received will be gladly turned over to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations believed that appropriation to be absolutely essential in order to prevent tying up the Navy to the docks of America, and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs advised the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the money should be appropriated. Every member of the Committee on Appropriations voted for it. Every Member of this House voted for it. It passed the House and went to the Senate.

Now, what change has come over us? What testimony has been adduced to change the opinion of the membership of this House? The only testimony offered comes from the experts of the Navy Department, who come before the committees of the House and say, not what has been said here to-day, that they do not need it, but say that they do need it, and that without it the Navy Department will be seriously handicapped. Never have I heard so many different statements made about what has been said by witnesses appearing before committees. I submit that if gentlemen had brought in the hearings it would have been much better. But that was not done, and I wish to turn to the record, to what was said by Admiral Taylor, on page 360. Admiral Taylor has been quoted as saying he did not need this money. I read from the record, on page 360:

> Mr. BYRNES. Suppose it was not granted, what would be the result?
> Admiral TAYLOR. We would simply keep within the limits of the appropriation and largely stop the work.
> [Applause.]

Gentlemen applaud the words "stop the work." What does that mean? They say that stopping the work will do no injury. They can talk about it as they please. To-day I asked Admiral Taylor if he was correctly quoted that his present appropriation would permit him to repair all necessary ships. He said that of the 13 battleships, constituting what might be called the second line, he might be able to do a little work on 6 of them, but on the rest of them he would be unable to do anything at all.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] talks about $846,000 as being all the money needed. That statement is absolutely confusing. The Committee on Naval Affairs put into the naval bill a most remarkable provision, reading as follows:

The appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureaus of Yards and Docks and Repairs and Preservation shall be available for the maintenance of naval training stations where the regular appropriation for the maintenance thereof is not found to be sufficient.

That was a blank draft on the funds intended for yards and docks. As long as that is not repealed they can draw on the fund for yards and docks for the maintenance of the training stations. When they draw on it, they so reduce this fund that the work of the Bureau of Yards and Docks is crippled.

Admiral Parks says that if this appropriation is not granted, he does not know how he will run the yards of this country. Now, it is said you can not get men for these ships, even if they are repaired. You passed a bill increasing the pay in order to get men on the ships, and you will get them, but when you get them to the docks of America will you have them there without any ships to go on?

Some gentlemen call attention to the number of men employed in the yards as compared with 1916, but they fail to say the great increase is due not to repair work but to new construction ordered by Congress. We have but three or four thousand more men engaged in repair work and have three times as many ships.

Oh, some gentlemen seem to think we can abolish the Navy; that we will never need it. Well, I pray that war shall never again come to us, but God forbid that it should come and find our ships unable to go to sea. Should war come, you can by wire call in your naval reserve, but you can not by wire put in condition the ships to take these boys to sea. It is too late to repair ships in war time. Your Navy in war is only as good as it is in peace, and in peace it stands with battleships tied to the docks without any appropriation that will enable them to be repaired. I asked Admiral Taylor how he could get along if this was not granted, and the record will show it. He said that as the result of the conditions confronting him, instead of spending $3,000,000 a month on repairs of vessels, as he has been doing, he would reduce to $2,000,000 a month. They say he has got $10,000,000, and he has, but he has been spending every month a little more than $3,000,000.

For the balance of the year, for the five months, he will spend only $2,000,000, $1,000,000 a month less for the maintenance of the ships of the Navy.

Gentlemen talk about economy. I have always aided them to the best of my ability in carrying out a program of economy, but I do not want to economize on the national defense, making the Navy unable to defend this country if the need should arise. When members of the Naval Reserve are summoned to the defense of America I do not want to have to tell them, "You have got to go back home, because we have got no ships to take you to sea, because of the false economy of the American Congress." I am unwilling to take that responsibility. I stand with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] where he stood last September. I stand with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] where he stood last September, and with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and with all the other Members of this House. I do not know what has come over them. They then convinced me that they were right. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], in that very excellent speech, said that the reason they favored the appropriation was that the subcommittee had carefully investigated it and had decided that there was no justification for the charge that this appropriation was to employ men in the yards. Who were they? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS]. They investigated and found that this appropriation was necessary for the maintenance of the Navy. It is true to-day, as it was then, that it is necessary, and I favor it because I believe it is necessary for the national security and defense. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be not interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the situation is considerably different in many respects than when the first deficiency bill was before the House. Everyone who is familiar with the subject knows that the authorized strength of the Navy is 191,000 men and that about 102,000 men have enlisted. It was stated before the Committee on Appropriations that because of the low wages paid to the enlisted personnel they were not getting enlistments, and therefore the men who were ordinarily put to work at the minor repairs on the vessels when at sea were not doing that work because enlistments could not be secured. Then they asked to take from a former appropriation, "Pay of Navy," $18,000,000 and use it for the employment of men on the vessels in the yards. This House has already increased the pay of men in the Navy, and by that increase they propose to get additional men. They have already obligated most of the $18,000,000, all of which it was proposed before to pay for these expenditures, and they are now going to pay it to the enlisted men and to increase the pay of the enlisted man, and those men will make the minor repairs that the committee then had in mind that it was said would be made by them if we gave the authority. [Applause.]

When Admiral Benson was before the Committee on Appropriations he said that the condition of the Navy to-day is in just as good repair as it was when we went to war. Gentlemen, do you get that—that in the opinion of Admiral Benson the condition of the American Navy to-day is in as good repair as when we went to war? Some officers think it is in much better condition, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] recounted the wonderful achievements of the American Navy when we went to war. It must have been in good condition then. Oh, this amendment is not to repair the Navy. This amendment is to give employment to 14,000 men, some of them boys taken out of high schools, boys in knee breeches when they went to work in navy yards, and some of them are now doing work in navy yards, and gentlemen do not want them taken out of the navy yards where they will have to hustle for themselves.

What are the facts? In 1915 there was appropriated $21,499,000 for Yards and Docks, Supplies and Accounts, Construction and Repair, and Steam Engineering.

For this year Secretary Daniels has for the same purpose $84,000,000. You on that side, when this appropriation was pending before the House, tried to cut them down, you tried to minimize them, but now you are in a conspiracy with men on this side that would keep these men employed at the expense of the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

Where are they employed? In 1915 there were employed at the Boston Navy Yard 1,504 men. July, 1919, nine months after the signing of the armistice, there were over 9,000 men employed in the navy yard at Boston, 250 more than when we were at war.

Take the Norfolk (Va.) Navy Yard. In 1915 there were 2,697 men employed, and on July 1, 1919, there were 10,094, as compared with 8,029 when the armistice was signed. Oh, gentlemen, this is for men and not for ships; this is for extravagance and not economy; this is for votes and not for protecting the American Navy or the American taxpayers—and do not you forget it. [Applause.]

Gentlemen will recall that in 1912 the Secretary of the Navy brought to the Washington gun factory thirty 6-inch guns to be remodeled. He remodeled those guns at a cost of $1,000 per gun, so that each was modernized to correspond with the 1912 model. In 1913 the Secretary of the Navy sold those guns for $68 apiece—sold them for junk.

We have taken over during the war hundreds of ships, hundreds of yachts, and now the Secretary of the Navy wants this unlimited sum of a hundred million dollars in 1920, as compared with about $15,000,000 in 1914, to repair the vessels. The end will be that they will do what they are doing now—repair the vessels which we propose to sell as junk to some favored junk dealer. The history of the guns will be repeated.

I am opposed to it, and if you gentlemen on that side want to unite with Boston and Philadelphia and other navy yards you can do it, and the end will be that when we go before the Senate the Senate will add to our bill, as they did before, fifteen millions for Air Service, and then try to hold up the committee of conference to agree to that item, which in the end will make an increase of $25,000,000 in the appropriation. I submit that if we are in favor of economy, let us be fair and square, not only to the navy yards but to the taxpayers of the United States, who must pay the bills. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana, and Mr. OLIVER were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Pay of the Navy: The appropriation "Pay of the Navy, 1918," is made available to pay claims of officers of the United States Navy accruing prior to July 1, 1918, which have been or may be presented pursuant to the act of April 16, 1918, allowing the payment of commutation for quarters, heat, and light to officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on duty in the field or without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintain a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May we have the original amendment reported?

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, after line 20, insert the following:

"Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the figures "$2,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$800,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TINKHAM) there were 131 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken, and 18 Members rising, tellers were refused.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: For fuel; the removal and transportation of ashes and garbage from ships of war, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $1,050,000. The limitation on expenditures from the appropriation 'Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, fiscal year 1920,' for pay of classified employees is increased by the sum of $800,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill, it is not germane to the subject immediately preceding; that it is new legislation; that it is not a deficiency, and is not authorized by law.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the question of germaneness.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has heard gentlemen for about three hours on this question, and I submit there ought not to be any further time taken. Members present are desirous of passing this bill to-night, so that we may get rid of this particular part of our work. I hope no time will be taken by argument.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear briefly the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, on page 2313 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mr. BANKHEAD offered an amendment to this deficiency appropriation bill, under "War Department," as follows:

Page 15, after line 4, add the following: "For additional clerical assistance in the office of The Adjutant General, $674,000."

In this deficiency bill now before us there are items for the War Department but no items under a subheading for the bureau of The Adjutant General of the Army, nor was any amount recommended by the War Department as a deficiency for that bureau, nor was any such item as Mr. BANKHEAD offered as an amendment considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

On page 2314 the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, now presiding, ruled that such an amendment was not germane and quoted the ruling of Mr. Carlisle, found in Fifth Hinds' Precedents, 5825. This opinion of Mr. Carlisle's was rendered in relation to a deficiency bill, where an amendment was offered for the purpose of repealing a law making the Public Printer an officer appointed by the President; making the Public Printer an elective officer of the House of Representatives, and so forth. This amendment was not offered as an amendment in relation to an item of an appropriation for a deficiency but as legislation. Mr. Carlisle, in his opinion, says:

The bill relates to no other subjects than appropriations of money for the purpose stated, "To supply deficiencies in appropriations for the services of the Government." One of the deficiencies which the bill provides for is the Government Printing Office, but the bill carefully enumerates the items for which appropriation is to be made and the salary of the Public Printer is not among them. The proposed amendment has no relation to the appropriation of money for any purpose. It neither increases nor diminishes the amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill, nor does it in any manner affect the expenditure of the money proposed to be appropriated by the bill. The salary of the Public Printer for the current fiscal year has already been provided for in full, and it does not appear that there is any deficiency on that account. The amendment related solely to the method of choosing a Public Printer, to the nature of the duties to be performed by him, and to the amount of his salary. As already stated, the original bill embraces none of these matters, and consequently none of these subjects are now under consideration. It seems quite clear, therefore, that the proposed amendment if admitted would introduce for consideration one or more new subjects and is for that reason prohibited by the express language of the rule.

Now, in the amendment I am proposing no new legislation is sought but an appropriation of money for designated purposes under the head of Navy Department, which title is in the bill, and for which department deficiencies are provided, and there is also the subheading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts" in the bill, under which subheading I am seeking to amend. The bill before us is a deficiency bill, and my amendment is a deficiency recommended by the Navy Department and considered by the Committee on Appropriations. My amendment does increase the amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill.

Therefore there is a complete distinction in principle as well as in detail between the amendment which I have offered and that ruled upon by Mr. Carlisle and that also ruled upon by the chairman of this committee in relation to the amendment proposed by Mr. BANKHEAD.

In the opinion rendered by the present chairman of the committee, he placed great reliance upon the ruling made by Mr. Fitzgerald, and quotes Mr. Fitzgerald as follows:

The object of the rule requiring amendments to be germane, and such a rule has been adopted in practically every legislative body in the United States, is in the interest of orderly legislation. Its purpose is to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation, to prevent propositions being presented for the consideration of the body which might not reasonably be anticipated and for which the body might not be properly prepared.

This ruling by Mr. Fitzgerald in no way bears upon the amendment which I have offered, as the amendment is for a deficiency recommended by the Navy Department in a public communication on file in this House made to the Speaker through the Department of the Treasury five months ago and heard by the Subcommittee on Deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee, the hearing being printed and on file as a public document and recommended by the Appropriations Committee and passed by the House of Representatives September 19 last. Upon the failure of the appropriation in the Senate, again the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted from the Navy Department a request for the deficit which is on file as a public document.

It was again discussed by the subcommittee on deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee, and the evidence has been printed and is in a public document, and before the Committee on Appropriations could vote on the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Deficiencies the Secretary of the Navy, through the Secretary of the Treasury, sent to the Speaker of the House an urgent demand for these deficiencies recommended by special reports from admirals in charge of four bureaus in the Navy Department, which communication is printed as a public document, discussed in the Committee on Appropriations, and defeated by only one vote, which record is also a part of the records of the House of Representatives. The item, therefore, can not fall within the reason for any rule which is to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation or to prevent propositions being presented for consideration which might not reasonably be anticipated and for which the body might not be properly prepared.

In the favorable ruling by the present chairman upon the amendment offered by me on "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on Saturday last and whether said amendment was germane, the Chair said that he could not follow reasoning which "would force consideration of a new subject without its having been referred to a committee, without its having been considered by a committee, and without the House having any notice whatever in advance of the consideration of such item." The amendment which I have offered does not fall within that language of the Chair, as the item has been considered twice by the Committee on Appropriations and is in five public documents before the House.

In that opinion the present Chairman said:

One reason given by the Chair in the ruling which has been referred to several times to-day was that the House should not be taken by surprise, and that in all reasonable ways the House should be put on notice as to what business is to be transacted.

With the facts that I have enumerated in relation to this item there can be no possible surprise on the part of the House.

An adverse decision by the Chairman holding that my amendment is not germane would mean that in any general deficiency bill where deficiencies have been certified as existing by a department in a public document and discussed at length by the subcommittee on deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee, and these discussions printed as a public document and then discussed by the Committee on Appropriations and a vote taken, which is a matter of public record, there could not be added to the bill one of these certified deficiencies even if the department was mentioned in the bill and was allowed its other deficiency items and there were deficiency items allowed under the subtitle to which an amendment might be sought.

No such construction can be drawn from the decision of Mr. Carlisle, nor does the reasoning of Mr. Fitzgerald at all apply, as there is no interference with the orderly procedure of legislation and due notice, and there is no surprise. Nor can any such construction be inferred from the former ruling of the present Chairman, but quite the contrary. If the Chair holds that the amendment now pending is not germane, he not only creates an utterly new principle of procedure in relation to deficiency bills but subtracts most vitally and materially from the rights of the House and the Committee of the Whole House. Such a decision would give to the Committee on Appropriations arbitrary and exclusive powers which it never has had and never should possess under the present method of appropriations in relation to deficiencies and for which there is no sound reason or legislative policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Judging from the last vote taken, it would not be of the slightest consequence, so far as the disposition of this amendment is concerned, how the Chair may rule. Therefore the Chair can not be under any influence of preference for or against the proposed amendment. It may be, however, a matter of some moment to the future procedure of the House. Therefore the Chair will state very briefly the reason for the ruling to be made.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] correctly estimates the situation by devoting his time entirely to the consideration of the question of germaneness, because the Chair considers that to be the only question of consequence raised by the multitude of grounds offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as a basis for his point of order.

The naval appropriation bill, under the general heading of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, carries five distinct groups of subjects, which are appropriated for in that act. The first of these is for "Pay of the Navy." In a section carried in the bill—the section last read and which is now pending—a deficiency appropriation is made for that purpose. The next separate group of subjects for which appropriations are made by the Naval Committee is "Provisions for the Navy." The third is "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts." For the latter two groups there is no appropriation made in this bill.

It seems to the Chair that the action of the Naval Committee in thus grouping these corelated subjects should have a persuasive influence with the Chair. The further fact that upon the face of these appropriations it appears that the Navy Department itself keeps entirely separate accounts under each of these various groups of corelated subjects is also persuasive. This grouping would, of course, not be entirely conclusive, though it should properly have weight.

The language of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, when placed alongside of the language of the paragraph under consideration, which is "Pay of the Navy," appears to the Chair to be entirely dissimilar. There is surely no such relation between the two as would justify the Chair in holding that they both relate to the same subject.

The Chair believes that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts would introduce, under color of an amendment, a subject different from that under consideration, and is therefore in contravention of the rule. Upon this ground the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"Bureau of Construction and Repair: For preservation and completion of vessels on stocks and in ordinary, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $3,250,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have a fourth amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

"BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

"Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, as heretofore indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, we passed over an item, on page 40, with the agreement to return to the same.

The CHAIRMAN. Lines 23 and 24, on page 40.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment in that connection, which I submit to the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 24, after the figures "$25,665.15," add the following: "To pay a judgment recovered in the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia by Thomas Cruise, in the case of Thomas Cruise v. Shugard and Wood, internal-revenue officers, the sum of $537.50, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent from September 18, 1918, the date of the rendition of said judgment, and $129.60 costs."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the claim has not been audited, as required by law, and does not come within the provision; it has not been certified to by the auditor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would like to be heard on that for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is the section of the bill which provides for the payment of judgments recovered by plaintiffs against the internal-revenue officers of the United States, as the Chair will note by reference to the section. As a rule the Treasury Department sends to the Committee on Appropriations a document showing the judgments which have been recovered, and approved by the department. I wish to say in this connection that this particular judgment has been filed with the Treasury Department for a long time, and should have been included in its last document. The plaintiff has done everything that it was possible for him to do. I have in my hand letters from the Treasury Department stating in effect that this claim would be included in the next deficiency bill. A paragraph in a letter to me of date December 13, is as follows: "There is no appropriation now available out of which the judgment can be paid. The matter will be presented to the Congress in due course." Naturally I concluded that the item would be reported to the committee and included in this bill, and did not know until this bill was taken up for consideration that such was not the case. Mr. Chairman, this is probably the last amendment that I shall offer to any bill in the House of Representatives, and I am desirous of establishing its merit to the entire satisfaction of every Member present.

This judgment was recovered over 18 months ago in a district court of the United States by the plaintiff Cruise. The Government took an appeal, which was lost, the appellate court confirming the district court. In conformity with law the court certified the judgment as a proper liability against the Government. It has been approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as will appear from his letter now on the table of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. So far as the auditor is concerned, there is nothing for him to do in this connection save to discharge a purely formal function of ratifying the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue makes these definite statements in his letter to Mr. GOOD: That this judgment was recovered in the District Court for the Western District of Virginia; that it was for the amount of $537.50; and further that the court awarded the plaintiff his costs in the sum of $129.60, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent from September 18, 1918, that being the date of the rendition of the judgment.

These statements being under the hand of Commissioner Roper what is lacking to establish that this is a just and proper claim? The committee could have allowed this claim without calling upon the department if it had been satisfied that it was a proper judgment for which the United States was liable. But the Commissioner of Internal Revenue emphatically states that this particular claim ought to be paid. He has passed it—O. K'd it, so to say. It is hard lines——

Mr. JUUL. I would like to state to the gentleman from Virginia that if he states it is a valid claim that would be quite enough for me.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is very kind. I will state personally that it is an absolutely valid claim, but I do not rest its validity upon my personal statement. I ask the committee to listen to the letter which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue sent to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The heading on page 40 is, "Audited Claims," and then there is a subhead, "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Treasury Department." Now, the gentleman offers an amendment to pay a certain judgment which, I judge from his statement, has not been allowed by the Auditor for the Treasury Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As to that, I can make this statement: I called up the auditor's office yesterday, or the day before, and asked about this judgment. The reply was that it was not there, but had been sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue about January 24, 1920, to be approved. I then called up the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and later he wrote the letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to which I have several times referred.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the payment of the claim inserted as an item in the proper place in the bill. It does not seem to me desirable to insert as an audited claim a claim that has not been audited and allowed. There is a provision in the bill for the judgments of the United States courts. Of course, that provision of the bill relates only to judgments certified by the Attorney General and judgments of the Court of Claims. The gentleman could offer, so far as I am concerned, an amendment to pay a judgment, but not under this head if it has not been audited.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I stated a moment ago, when I called up the department, I was advised that under some new rule, as I understood the situation, the claim had been referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for approval. I did not understand that it would then be necessary for it to be sent back to the auditor's office for further action. I did not understand that anything further was required to establish the validity of the claim. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has ascertained the claim to be valid, and I will read his letter for the information of the committee:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 4, 1920.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
Chairman Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GOOD: I find that in the report made to the Appropriations Committee by this department of judgments outstanding against revenue officers, which must be met by special appropriations of Congress, that the judgment in the amount of $537.50 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent from September 18, 1918, and costs totaling $129.60, in favor of Thomas Cruise v. H. V. Shugart and J. N. Wood, was not included.

This claim is evidenced by the judgment rendered in the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia for the above amount, interest, and costs.

This amount should be included in the urgent deficiency bill now pending, in order that prompt satisfaction of the judgment may be rendered.

Very truly, yours,
DANIEL C. ROPER,
Commissioner.

The fact that this claim had not been heretofore sent to the Committee on Appropriations was not the fault of the claimant, and he should not suffer on that account.

Mr. BENSON. Could not the gentleman remedy the matter by asking unanimous consent to put this on page 39, under "Judgments, United States courts"?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am going to do that. I now make that request.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say to the gentleman that I would ordinarily be very glad to do it, as the gentleman is going to leave the House, but the gentleman is asking us here to do something that will rise to plague us a great many times, in asking that judgments in this kind of claims, that have not been audited, shall go on a bill so that they shall have a preference. The law provides that the Auditor of the Treasury Department must audit these claims and certify them to Congress. That has not been done, and I can not permit this action proposed now to be taken.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will agree to return to the proper heading, and I have asked that that be done, then nothing will ever rise up to plague the gentleman or the committee should this amendment be adopted. This is all red tape. There is no merit in the contention that the action suggested would be a vexatious precedent. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has to pass on the validity of this claim, certifies not only that this is a proper claim but that it should be in this bill. Is any higher or better evidence required that this is a just and proper claim, one that should be provided for in this bill as the commissioner recommends? If the gentleman had indicated to me that he intended to interpose this sort of an objection to the amendment, I would have secured a certificate from the auditor. I did not understand from what passed between the gentleman and me that he would oppose this amendment if the claim was a just and valid one proper to be paid by the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The paragraph in the bill refers to claims certified in a certain House document. This claim is not in that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand that. The department admits that this claim ought to have been included in that document. It is in no wise the fault of the plaintiff that this was not done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not in the document.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is not in the document. But the commissioner certifies that while this judgment was not included, it should now be included in this bill in order that prompt satisfaction of the debt may be rendered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If a claim is not in the document, the chances are, nine times out of ten, that it ought not to be paid.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because it is not in the document.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is not included in the document filed with the committee, but in due course it ought to have been included. How can the gentleman claim that there are nine chances to one that this claim ought not to be paid when it was duly recovered in a court of the United States, affirmed on appeal in another court of the United States, duly certified to the Treasury, and duly approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who certifies that it should be included in the pending bill? I have been chasing this claim down for two days, and when after many phone conversations I obtained a statement from the officer to whom it was referred that it was a valid claim and ought to be included in the present bill, I took it for granted that, fortified by this statement, both the chairman of the committee and the Members of the House would be satisfied that this was a just claim, and should be included in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the head of "Judgments," on page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to what point? Will the gentleman indicate?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To return to the head of "Judgments," as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, on page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. To return to page 39, "Judgments of the United States Courts."

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say——

Mr. GOOD. Is the Chairman going to put the question for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The point of order of the gentleman from Iowa is sustained.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I ask for a separate vote, Mr. Speaker, on the appropriation of a million dollars for the guarding of liquor and other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. There is no such amendment. That was in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman point out his amendment?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. On page 10, line 12.

Mr. GOOD. It went out on a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, after line 12, insert: Enforcement of the national prohibition act:

"For the necessary expenses in preventing violations of the national prohibition act, $1,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the engrossed copy of the bill. The engrossed copy is not present. The gentleman, of course, has the right to make the demand.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 795. An act to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3383. An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8028. An act to add to the Oregon, Siuslaw, and Crater National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 348. An act to add certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.;

H. R. 1812. An act making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States;

H. R. 1761. An act for the relief of the Farmers' National Bank of Wilkinson, Ind.; and

H. R. 2950. An act to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DUNBAR, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for one week, on account of illness.

APPOINTMENT OF A CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] desires to be relieved from acting on the conference on the farm loan bill. Without objection, he is relieved, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] in his place.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ESTOPINAL.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that February 29 be set aside for memorial services on the late Gen. ESTOPINAL, a Representative elect from Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that an order be made setting aside February 29 for memorial services on the late Representative ESTOPINAL. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That February 29, at 12 o'clock, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ALBERT ESTOPINAL, late a Representative elect from the State of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? If not, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 5, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the author of every good and perfect gift, Thou dost send the shadows as well as the sunshine, and in our individual life Thou dost permit us to pass through the struggles and dangers as well as Thou dost inspire within us the joys and hopes of life. We come to Thee, the author of every gift, and ask Thy blessing upon us, that we may be fitted and prepared for the solemn and high responsibilities of this place. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 212).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas about one amendment which the Senate put in the bill. The House had a provision that the purchasers of land on the Yakima Indian Reservation should pay $10 an acre for the water rights. The Senate reduced that to $2. The conference report makes it $5. Will the Senator state the reasons for making that large increase?

Mr. CURTIS. I will state that the House conferees advised the Senate conferees that the amount had been fixed at $10 after consultation with the Members of the House delegation from the State of Washington, and they thought the settlers would be able to pay that amount. After advising them as to the attitude of the Senators from Washington and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the House conferees agreed to $5 instead of $2. In view of the showing made, the Senate conferees felt that it was only proper to accept the recession on the part of the House conferees fixing the amount at $5 instead of $2.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that payment is a little heavy under the conditions; but, of course, if the House delegation from the State expressed their agreement to $10, I am very well satisfied with the compromise made by the Senate conferees.

Mr. CURTIS. I may state to the Senator that the showing made before the conferees was to the effect that a very large crop had been raised last year by those people and that they are able to pay that amount.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to an appropriation made under the South Dakota item in the bill for the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation. I understand the appropriation was cut from $40,000, as fixed by the House, to $25,000 for the purpose of building a bridge.

Mr. CURTIS. The item was stricken out by the Senate, and the conferees agreed to $25,000 instead of $40,000, for the reason I will state: In looking over the accounts of the Indian tribes a mistake was made and the wrong column was examined. It was supposed that the amount of money they had was only $70,000 and so the conferees agreed on $25,000. Since that time I have reinvestigated the question and I find that the Indians have $1,400,000 to their credit. The mistake was made by the dropping of the first line, which the Senator will see might very easily occur.

Mr. STERLING. I see that the total here is $1,419,800.

Mr. CURTIS. I gave the amount at $1,400,000, in round numbers. I will state to the Senator that this will not complete the bridge, but after I brought the matter to the attention of the House conferees it was thought better to let the conference report go through, and whatever additional sum is needed could be made immediately available in the next appropriation bill, and would therefore become subject to withdrawal early in March or April.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to state to the Senator that this is a project for which the State highway commission agreed to appropriate two-thirds of the cost.

Mr. CURTIS. The conferees realized that, and the amount asked for from the Indians was $20,000. It was reduced, as I stated, but the conferees did not feel that they would be justified in calling another conference over a sum of $15,000, because the chairman of the conferees on the part of the House expected to leave the city to-day and will be gone for a month, and it would have delayed the final disposition of the bill over a month. As I stated, the matter can very easily be taken care of in the next appropriation bill by making the sum immediately available.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of the amendment of the Senate No. 94 to said bill in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement thereto and had agreed to the same.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. The House conferees did recede, but in making up their report they left out amendment No. 94. I put it in the report in the Senate, but when my attention was called to the fact that they had neglected to put it in their report I took it out of this report. So it is necessary to pass this resolution, which reduces the appropriation from $30,000, I think, to $26,000.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit a resolution of the Kansas State Legislature, which I ask may be referred to the proper committee and printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
Topeka, January 27, 1920.

A concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States, now in session, to pass the bill, already introduced, appropriating funds to aid the several States in the construction of roads.

Whereas there is now before the Congress of the United States a bill making appropriations for the further cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States in the construction of roads: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Kansas (the Senate concurring therein), That we most respectfully urge passage of this bill in order that the States may continue their present road-building program and give assistance to many petitions now on file for which there are no Government funds.

H. J. ALLEN, Governor.

Mr. PHIPPS. I send to the desk a telegram from the Rotary Club of Greeley, Colo., which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

GREELEY, COLO., February 4, 1920.

Senator LAWRENCE PHIPPS,
Washington, D. C.:

Greeley Rotarys, in session to-day, voted unanimously officers wire you asking immediate ratification of peace treaty with League of Nations, with or without reservations.

THE GREELEY ROTARY CLUB,
CHARLES HANSEN, President.
M. J. NEILL, Secretary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of Fredonia Post, No. 98, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Fredonia, Kans., and a petition of Morton Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Wamego, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Board of Commerce of Bay City, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to relieve economic conditions in certain European countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Commerce of Bay City, Mich., praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of William Sanborn Post, No. 98, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Port Huron, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Richmond, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF GRAIN.

Mr. GRONNA. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3844) to provide for discontinuing the purchase and sale of grain by the Government, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 414) thereon.

I wish to state that I would have asked for the immediate consideration of the bill, but as there are one or two amendments proposed by the committee I ask that it may be printed and go over. I give notice that I shall call it up at a very early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

SOLDIERS' PREFERRED HOMESTEAD RIGHT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 20) giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry, and I submit a report (No. 415) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That hereafter, for the period of two years following the passage of this act, on the opening of public or Indian lands to entry, or the restoration to entry of public lands theretofore withdrawn from entry, such opening or restoration shall, in the order therefor, provide for a period of not less than 60 days before the general opening of such lands to disposal in which officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Germany and been honorably separated or discharged therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve shall have a preferred right of entry under the homestead or desert land laws, if qualified thereunder, except as against prior existing valid settlement rights and as against preference rights conferred by existing laws or equitable claims subject to allowance and confirmation: Provided, That the rights and benefits conferred by this act shall not extend to any person who, having been drafted for service under the provisions of the selective service act, shall have refused to render such service or to wear the uniform of such service of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations necessary to carry into full force and effect the provisions hereof.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC ISLANDS, PORTO RICO, AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Mr. KNOX. From the Committee on Rules I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 273, submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] on the 9th ultimo, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV, Standing Rules of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, amended by changing the paragraph therein now reading as follows: "A Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to consist of 12 Senators," so as hereafter to read: "A Committee on Pacific Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, to consist of 12 Senators."

QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

Mr. HARRISON. I report favorably from the Committee on Rules Senate resolution 104, submitted by me on June 30, 1919, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XX of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"RULE XX. That all questions of order shall be decided by the presiding officer without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate, without debate; and no question of order shall be entertained after debate on the merits of the proposition has begun. When an appeal is taken, any subsequent question of order which may arise before the decision of such appeal shall be decided by the presiding officer, without debate, and every appeal therefrom shall be decided at once and without debate; and any appeal may be laid on the table without prejudice to the pending proposition, and thereupon shall be held as affirming the decision of the presiding officer.

"The presiding officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is a very important resolution, and it ought to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution goes to the calendar.

OLYMPIC NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On the legislative day of February 2, the calendar day of February 3, I introduced a bill that is known as Senate bill 3846. It authorizes the adjustment of certain boundaries of the Olympic National Forest, in the State of Washington. I think I myself marked the bill for reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I find, however, that bills of a similar character have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. In studying the bill more carefully I have concluded that it should go to that committee. I therefore ask that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

EMPLOYEES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago I introduced a bill (S. 3612) to authorize the United States Bureau of Efficiency to provide for the promotion, transfer, and discharge of certain employees in the executive departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, and agencies, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. The special committee that is now considering the question of the budget is also giving some attention to the matters to which the bill refers. I therefore ask that the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Special Committee to Devise a Plan for a National Budget System.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with the use of paper I desire to submit some figures this morning, and I hope Senators will give attention.

Day before yesterday we opened the bids for the purpose of furnishing the paper that the Government of the United States will want for the coming year. All the bids that we could receive from all agents or manufacturers amounted to 20. The prices bid are generally out of all reason.

I want the Senate to understand the serious situation the Government finds itself in to-day in relation to print paper and all other classes of paper. In order to impress upon the Senate of the United States the wicked waste that has been going on in the past I have prepared a statement showing the addresses or speeches printed at the Government Printing Office since July 1, 1916, charged by the Public Printer to departmental appropriations or other funds available therefor, not including those ordered by Congress or Members of Congress.

This statement is but an indication of what has been going on. I expect in a couple of weeks to show the full picture to the Senate of the United States. I think the time has arrived when every Member of this body ought to insist upon a halt being called upon the waste of paper by the Government of the United States.

For the executive office during the period from July 1, 1916, to September 15, 1919, there have been copies of speeches printed to the number of 1,163,862. The estimated weight of those speeches is 79,497 pounds.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator means avoirdupois weight?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. The total cost of merely printing those speeches was $13,705.72. In the Department of State the total number of copies of speeches printed was 29,100, their estimated weight was 1,513 pounds, and the cost $527.02. In the Treasury Department the total number of speeches printed was 25,066,000.

Mr. NELSON. Of speeches?

Mr. SMOOT. Of speeches.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why is the Treasury Department printing speeches?

Mr. SMOOT. I will call attention to that a little later, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina.

The estimated weight of those speeches was 758,896 pounds, and the total cost of the printing was $86,813.09. Remember, the cost of printing of these speeches comes out of an appropriation made to the department for Government printing. In the War Department there were a total number of 500 speeches printed; in the Post Office Department there were 165,000 printed. The total number printed in the Agricultural Department was 144,000; in the Department of Labor it was 123,000; in the Pan American Union it was 5,000; in the United States Food Administration it was 307,000. In the Railroad Administration the total was 3,055,500——

Mr. POMERENE. The total number of what?

Mr. SMOOT. The total number of speeches that have been printed as public documents for distribution throughout the United States. I have the number of the jacket of each speech and the number of copies of each speech that was printed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that the departments, after speeches have been delivered, themselves send out the speeches?

Mr. SMOOT. They send out the speeches through the departments. In the United States Railroad Administration there were 3,055,500 speeches printed. They were copies of speeches delivered at Altoona, Pa., and before different associations throughout the United States. The money which was appropriated for Government printing in the departments was used for the printing and distribution of these speeches throughout the United States.

When I give the summary of the whole number I am going to call attention to the weight of the speeches, and I desire the Senate to know what it costs merely to send them through the mails.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will pardon me, I desire to say that his discussion is very interesting. I should like to know how the departments justify the sending out of speeches at Government expense? Are those speeches delivered by Senators or Representatives or by officials of the departments eulogizing the departments and praising themselves for their wonderful economies and great achievements?

Mr. SMOOT. I will take up the speeches sent out by the Railroad Administration. The address at Altoona, Pa., was delivered by Hon. W. G. McAdoo on September 12, 1918. There were 1,000,000 copies of that address printed by the Railroad Administration and sent through the mails. An address entitled "A Life Sentence" was delivered by Rev. J. F. Weinmann, and there were 2,000,000 of them printed and sent by the Railroad Administration through the mails. There was an address before the Railroad Fire Protective Association by Charles N. Rambo, of which 15,000 copies were printed. There was an address delivered before the New York Railroad Club by Frank McManamy, of which 15,000 copies were printed. There was an address before the National Safety Council at the Seventh Annual Congress at St. Louis, Mo., by Hiram W. Belnap, but there were only 5,000 printed. These are the character of the speeches.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who paid for the printing of these speeches?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government of the United States paid for them; and the Government not only paid for the printing but paid for all the paper and paid for the carrying of these speeches through the mails.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Senators themselves pay for the printing of extra copies of any speeches delivered by them on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I am going to call attention to that fact in my next statement. When I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in this report alone——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire this to go into the RECORD, because the public generally is not aware of the fact. When I say that we ourselves pay for the printing of speeches delivered by us, I mean each Senator bears the entire expense of paying for all extra copies of his speeches printed for distribution.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with this subject I desire to ask unanimous consent that the statement from which I have just quoted may go into the RECORD at this point, showing the total of the addresses delivered, by whom delivered, the date when they were delivered, the number of copies printed, the estimated weight of the aggregate number of each address printed, the total cost of their printing, the appropriation or fund to which such expenditure was charged, and to whom they were delivered. If there is no objection, I should like to have that go into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement showing addresses or speeches printed at the Government Printing Office from July 1, 1916, to September 15, 1919, and charged by the Public Printer to departmental appropriations or funds available therefor (not including those ordered by Congress or Members of Congress).

Mr. SMOOT. I now wish to present a summary of the cost to the Government of printing and mailing addresses and speeches printed at the Government Printing Office by order of the executive departments and other independent establishments of the Government and charged to Government appropriations from July 1, 1916, to September 15, 1919. These figures are based on statements from the Public Printer, the superintendent of documents, and the report of the commission on second-class mail matter. The total number of speeches printed during the period stated was 30,144,362.

The expense involved in printing and mailing these speeches was as follows: The total cost of printing was $109,066.35; cost of penalty envelopes, $80,052.96; estimated expense of addressing envelopes, $67,824; estimated mailing-room expense, $30,144; estimated Postal Service expense for handling and transportation of 849,101 pounds of speeches, $93,433.55; estimated Postal Service expense for handling and transportation of 557,683 pounds of envelopes, $58,277.87; or a total of $442,798.73.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the next time we make appropriations for printing for the departments of the Government we ought to know where the money is going and we ought to stop all such expenditures of money as this.

I was going to call attention to a particular matter that was in violation of law, but perhaps that would not be a proper thing to do. I wish to say, however, that I have a copy of a speech, delivered by a certain reverend gentleman and sent broadcast throughout the country, on the face of which there is printed a statement that it was for distribution "among the United States army of railroad men, with the compliments" of a certain official of the Government of the United States. There is no law which allows a thing like that to go through the mail free; but I wish to say to you, Mr. President, that the departments of this Government now do not care very much about what the laws are; they are guided by their wishes and what they desire to do.

Mr. President, how many of these very same speeches to which I have called attention have been printed by order of Senators or Representatives for political purposes or for distribution for any other purpose I am going to find out within the next three weeks, and I am going to put the figures into the RECORD. When this information is placed before Congress, I think that every Senator will agree that the expenditure is not only an abuse of the expenditure of the people's taxes but is, I was going to say, a wicked practice, which ought to cease, not only on the part of Senators and Representatives, but which must cease on the part of the departments.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I did not quite understand to what speeches the Senator referred as having been printed. Does he mean the speeches of Senators and Representatives?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not the speeches of Senators at all. I am referring merely to speeches that have been ordered printed by the departments of our Government for distribution throughout the United States. So far as concerns speeches that have been delivered outside of Congress on the order of Senators and Representatives and printed as public documents for the purpose of distribution throughout the country, I am going to let the Senate know how many such speeches have been printed and distributed.

Mr. STERLING. They are generally paid for, are they not?

Mr. SMOOT. They are paid for, but I am only going to do this in connection with a statement showing the amount of paper that is being used for these purposes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Are all these speeches sent out by the departments the speeches of Senators and Representatives, or are they speeches of other parties?

Mr. SMOOT. They are speeches of other parties. For instance, take the executive department; I find an address that was delivered before the Press Club of New York by the President on June 30, 1916, an address to the Associated Advertising Clubs, an address at Detroit, Mich. These figures also include addresses to Congress; but I have been stating the number printed for distribution and paid for out of the funds appropriated by Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, were any of these addresses in connection with the Liberty loans?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; a great many of them were in connection with the Liberty loans.

Mr. OVERMAN. And the sale of war savings and thrift stamps?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

I will say that the paper used in printing and mailing speeches is as follows:

The total weight of speeches was 894,101 pounds, or 447 tons of white print paper.

The total weight of envelopes was 557,683 pounds, or 278 tons of manila paper.

The total weight of paper and envelopes was 1,451,784 pounds.

That is only a small part of what is going to be shown later in the distribution of many of these speeches that have been made public documents both in the House or in the Senate, and then printed and sent broadcast by those who are interested in them; and it is a practice that I think ought to cease.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. What has become of the bill reforming the whole printing situation which the Senator introduced some few years ago and which was pending before Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. The history of the bill amending the printing laws I suppose the Senator well knows up to this session of Congress. The bill has always been held up in the Senate of the United States with the exception of once, when we passed the bill, and it then failed in the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has it been reintroduced in this Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. A bill was introduced in the House at this session of Congress and has passed the House, but it does not go nearly as far as the original bill went, because of the opposition that was manifested to it, and I might just as well be plain and say by the Public Printer and those associated with him in the Government Printing Office. That bill is now before the Printing Committee of the Senate, and I hope that when conditions allow the bill can be reported to the Senate and some favorable action be taken upon it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I trust that will be done, and that the bill will be so amended that it will reach the abuses presented by the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has been discussing to some extent the question of the supply of newsprint paper—only incidentally, however.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say that in the last two or three weeks I have had a great many communications from the publishers of the smaller papers in Ohio and elsewhere. They complain very bitterly because they are not able to get the necessary print paper to issue their publications. It seems that the supply is being largely absorbed by the metropolitan journals and magazines. I have been seeking a method of getting some relief, if possible. I know that the Senator from Utah has given a great deal of attention to this subject, and I desire to ask him whether he has any suggestions to make as to a method whereby these smaller publications can get their necessary supply of paper?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that to-day many of the small papers in this country are compelled to pay 9 cents a pound for ordinary white print paper—9 cents a pound—and that is not all; they can scarcely get enough of the paper to issue their publications. I have had from different parts of the country letters and complaints just the same as the Senator has. There is no doubt that the situation is universal throughout the country; but the paper situation is such that not enough paper is manufactured to meet the demand. Not a day passes but that I sign two or three orders for purchasing paper in the open market in quantities of a few hundred pounds, or any quantity, just so that we can get it; and if some morning Congress wakes up and finds that there is no CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it will be because of the fact that it is impossible to find the paper in the United States on which to print it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I received the other day a communication indicating that the per capita consumption of paper in the United States had very materially increased. It is now 39 pounds.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the consumption of all kinds of paper in the United States has increased one-third.

Mr. POMERENE. What suggestion has the Senator to make for relief?

Mr. SMOOT. If we could only make the people of the United States believe that propaganda is not necessary to be carried on on pending legislation that would save thousands of tons of paper. There is not a question now before Congress but that a propaganda upon it is started in some part of the country, and Congress and the country are flooded with literature, and this practice requires hundreds of thousands of tons of paper. I will say to the Senate that there has been a propaganda on the leasing bill. That is a bill that is in conference, and since it has been before Congress I think I have received 946 telegrams in regard to it. Those 946 telegrams are similar and most of them are word for word alike, and therefore it took 946 telegrams to parties sending the telegrams not only containing the words that were in the telegrams sent to me but asking them to send the telegrams. If we could only impress upon the American people that it is perfectly useless, a perfect waste of money, we would do a good service for the people.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me be a little more specific, if I can. I am seeking information. What can we do to relieve these small publishers?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think it is only fair to say that an embargo was placed upon paper by the Canadian authorities. That matter was taken up with the Department of State, and, as I understand, the department has adjusted the matter so that we are getting our share of the Canadian paper.

Mr. POMERENE. Then is it the Senator's view that the supply will improve from this time on?

Mr. GRONNA. It will.

Mr. POMERENE. And at a better rate?

Mr. GRONNA. I am not advised as to that. I know that the Department of State has taken up the matter and adjusted it.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew that the State Department had taken the question up, but I had not heard whether it had been finally adjusted or not; but I do know that an embargo was placed on the exportation of pulp from Canada, and therefore we were compelled to make paper from whatever pulp we could produce in this country; and, of course, the supply of paper that was on hand was drawn upon every day, and it diminished every day until it got to a very dangerous point.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has not Canada prevented the shipment of wood from the Crown lands, where our paper makers have gone and leased the Crown lands for the purpose of getting wood, and has not the shipment of the wood been stopped?

Mr. SMOOT. That was done four or five years ago, and I do not think the restrictions have been removed. If they have, I have not heard of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator know that there is just as much need of a reform in the Government as there is in these private agencies?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it, and that is what I have said.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not also a fact, if the truth were known, that nearly every Government department is engaged in a crusade for the purpose of magnifying its own importance, and demanding additional powers and more appropriations? Some of them are coming to me and denouncing Congress for its parsimony in dealing with the particular department in question.

Mr. SMOOT. We get letters—most of them anonymous, however—from nearly every one of the departments, criticizing bitterly any Senator who dares stand upon the floor of the Senate and question any appropriation that is asked for by the departments of our Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Connected with this subject of print-paper supply, the best place for the reform to begin is in the deficiency appropriation bills, as well as other appropriation bills, and not furnish to the departments the necessary money or the credit which is always implied in a deficiency bill. These deficiency bills are growing to an alarming extent, and it is time for the Senate to apply the hatchet.

I know that the most unpopular thing in Washington is to curtail appropriations. They call me up at night, out of my slumbers, to tell me the error of my ways in opposing appropriations; and the more I am called up the more I am convinced that there is need for a countercrusade by Congress against these extravagant appropriations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. I think if the Senator is merely called up from his slumbers he escapes very well. Many Senators who have been opposing these appropriations are denounced by propagandists in their own communities and threatened with political annihilation; but I want to state to the Senator that in my opinion a bill ought to be passed creating a censorship over publications by the executive departments. I do not mean by that that they ought to determine just exactly what should be said, but there ought to be some restriction as to the character and quantity of the publications. Nine-tenths of the publications of the departments are not worth the paper they are written upon. They are a disgrace to the departments and a disgrace to the country. Another thing that ought to be done by statute is to impose a penalty upon executive officers who carry on a propaganda. For instance, Mr. Claxton has written letters to educators throughout the United States pleading for a certain Americanization bill and urging that they support the bill to create a department of education. That would magnify Mr. Claxton; that would increase the powers of the bureau with which he is connected and transform it, indeed, into a department; and so Mr. Claxton—and he is merely a type of hundreds of others in the departments—spends hundreds and thousands of dollars of the people's money in carrying on an extensive propaganda throughout the United States in order to secure legislation to build up his department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion that the Joint Committee on Printing now have power; under the law that was passed in the deficiency bill last year, to regulate the printing of certain publications issued by the departments. When we began to consider what publications should be discontinued, first we collected samples of all that were being issued. We could not show them in one room. Just the sample copies of what was issued we could not show in one room, and we had to get another room to put the samples in; and then we spent weeks and weeks in trying to eliminate what we thought could be eliminated without interfering at all with the departments, and we did eliminate hundreds of them.

I had passed over my desk a morning or two ago, sent out by a department, copies of letters to be sent throughout the country congratulating the present Secretary of the Treasury on his appointment. I do not think that is necessary, Mr. President. The American people know that he has been appointed, and I do not see why any of the departments of the Government ought to reprint a letter of another person extending congratulations to the Secretary upon his appointment. What good does it do?

Mr. KING. It gives money to the printers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. To my mind that is not nearly so offensive as the use by the Director of the Railway Administration, before he retired, of railway stationery by the ton, scattered all over the United States and our territorial possessions, promoting his publicity, when it was known at the time, or at least he thought, that he was a candidate for President. Mr. McAdoo used a great many tons promoting that publicity. I never knew of a reputable railroad president who printed his name as president of a railroad on a folder which I would lug around in my pocket when I was paying much lower rates for travel than I pay now under Government ownership.

In addition to that, Mr. NEWBERRY's campaign committee in Michigan has been damned from Dan to Beersheba because he paid his own bills to advertise his campaign, and he is now indicted by the United States Government and is on trial. Though he paid his own bills, he is severely criticized for it. Mr. McAdoo paid his campaign bills at the expense of the Government, and he passes as a great public example of virtue.

I would like to see that carried into the campaign. Mr. President, along with the League of Nations and with a statement of an English writer in a recent book that it was "harder to debamboozle" the old Presbyterian who represented us than it was originally for Lloyd-George "to bamboozle him."

I will read that book for the edification of the Senate some day. I want it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It sells at $2.50 a volume, which is beyond the reach of the average Senator now after paying his legitimate expenses. I shall put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mr. President—the genesis, the evolution, and the whole Pentateuch of the peace treaty. I would like to know how the Senator from Utah would justify promoting one man and damning another, the latter of whom paid his own bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I am not justifying it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. President, just one word more. I do not believe that it would be necessary to take 273,000 pounds of print paper to print any speech ever delivered for distribution. I called attention to the fact that there was one speech that I know of which took 48 tons of paper, and the newspapers throughout the country reported that all the speeches I referred to took 48 tons. There is one speech that will be found in the report submitted by me to-day that took 136½ tons of paper to print 6,500,000 copies for distribution throughout the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield before he closes the subject? I would like to read an extract from this book, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I am through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to read a paragraph from page 54 of The Economic Consequences of the Peace, because it will save print paper. It ought to get to the public. The title page gives the publishers as Harcourt, Brace & Howe, of New York. It says:

"Thus it was that Clemenceau brought to success what had seemed to be, a few months before, the extraordinary and impossible proposal that the Germans should not be heard. If only the President had not been so conscientious, if only he had not concealed from himself what he had been doing, even at the last moment he was in a position to have recovered lost ground and to have achieved some very considerable successes. But the President was set. His arms and legs had been spliced by the surgeons to a certain posture and they must be broken again before they could be altered. To his horror, Mr. Lloyd-George, desiring at the last moment all the moderation he dared, discovered that he could not in five days persuade the President of error in what it had taken five months to prove to him to be just and right. After all, it was harder to debamboozle this old Presbyterian than it had been to bamboozle him, for the former involved his belief in and respect for himself.

"Thus in the last act the President stood for stubbornness and a refusal of conciliations."

That is written by one of our British cousins living in London.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, some weeks ago I introduced a bill looking toward the conservation of the print-paper supply. It was referred to a Senate committee, and I have not heard anything from it, nor have I heard any suggestion from anyone as to any measure being offered for that purpose.

We all recognize the importance of conserving the print-paper supply. Some time ago I received a telegram, among many others, which I have not called to the attention of the Senate because I had hoped that the proper committee was considering the measure; but in this connection I think it is desirable to call attention to the telegram. It reads:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 16, 1919.

Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Representing 1,200 home newspapers published in the rural towns and cities of the United States, all of which are now threatened with serious financial loss—even with destruction of their business—by reason of the hoggishness of big city daily newspapers which by reason of their huge demands for print paper, and their great financal resources are enabled and do rob smaller newspapers of their print-paper supplies, I urge the immediate passage of legislation limiting the number of pages newspapers may print to not more than 24 pages. Only by such Federal legislation can the thousands of weekly newspapers be saved from heavy loss and possible extinction, a fate as injurious to the millions of Americans who live in rural towns and on farms as can well happen. We feel that the population affected is the backbone of this Nation, and that the publishers who give them their news and information should be protected to the last ditch.

S. T. HUGHES,
Editor Publishers' Autocaster Service.

Mr. President, that is a serious situation, and I submit that Congress, through some committee, can very well give careful consideration to the situation. It ought to be remedied. It is evident that there is an actual shortage of print paper in the country, yet the big daily newspapers of the country are expanding their advertisements to a degree which to my mind is wholly unjustified. It is brought about through conditions which, I submit, ought not to prevail. The big concerns of the country are using their money now to build up a good will at the expense of the Treasury of the United States. A great many of them, through using corporate funds for the purpose of advertising or other expenses and failing to declare dividends, are depriving the Government of the United States of vast sums of revenue to which it is justly entitled.

It operates in this wise: Take a close corporation where the stockholders have large incomes otherwise. It means that if they do not declare their profits in dividends they will save a surtax equal in many instances to at least 50 per cent, and instead of declaring that in dividends they are now using their surplus earnings in advertising, so as to build up a good will for the future, at the expense at the present time of the Treasury of the United States. It is brought about largely through the defect in the present revenue law which permits these corporations to retain in their treasuries their surplus earnings, paying 2 per cent only beyond the normal tax. I submit that this situation calls for drastic action, and something should be done to conserve the paper for legitimate uses.

Attention has been called here this morning to the fact that many millions of certain speeches have been published. There are over a hundred million people in the United States, and if a speech contains information which ought to be generally disseminated, I have an idea that the number published was not excessive. Take the remarks of Senators made here this morning. They think the remarks are valuable; and if they are the people ought to have them. You can not get them out to over a hundred million people by the publication of just a few copies.

The speeches to which reference has been made, doubtless, in nearly every case, have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and made public documents by the consent of the Senate. They were thus made public documents for the supposed reason, at least, that they contained valuable information, and I submit that a careful examination of what has been done will not prove it to be an unmixed evil. Doubtless these papers have merit, and if they have gone to the country have given information to the people of the country which they at least are supposed to want and which they at least are supposed to need.

But there are many other reasons. Speeches that are made here are prolonged unduly. There is not any question about that. We talk here day after day about things with which we are all familiar largely for the purpose of consuming time, and it takes money to print that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We ought to use a little judgment ourselves in the speeches which we make here. While the Senator from Utah has undoubtedly called attention to a matter which could be remedied to some extent, yet any just remedy along the lines suggested by him will not reach the condition by any means in a satisfactory way.

This question of print paper ought to be taken up in earnest, and something should be done to conserve the supply and so distribute it that the newspapers of the country which to-day need it can get it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gladly yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would like to ask the Senator what specific remedy he recommends? It has been my observation that most of the remedies suggested on the floor begin and end with a speech. What particular remedy does the Senator suggest?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state to the Senator that a few weeks ago I introduced a bill limiting the size of the large daily newspapers. That would remedy it to some extent.

Mr. KELLOGG. I submitted a resolution to cut short speeches. I think that would remedy it to some extent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator and I may be able to work together.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Would not a measure withdrawing the second-class privilege from magazines that are devoted largely to advertising and carry only a few pages of reading matter do something toward curing the evil which exists? The Senator knows that some of these magazines now have perhaps 25 pages of reading matter, and there will be 100 or more pages of advertising matter. They get the advantage of reduced rates in the transportation of that advertising matter, and the Government really is paying them a subsidy. It costs the Government, as the Senator knows, millions of dollars a year to carry through the mails the publications of the character referred to.

Then, if I may make another suggestion, does not the Senator think that something ought to be done by the Government dealing with foreign-language newspapers? There are hundreds of them printed in the United States, many of them hostile to our Government, preaching sedition and anarchy, and yet we are subsidizing those newspapers and the Government is paying millions of dollars to transport that class of literature through the mails of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Answering the Senator's last inquiry first, with the idea that ultimately it will not be necessary to have newspapers printed in foreign languages, the Senate passed a bill a few days ago, which, however, was opposed by the Senator from Utah, to educate the people of the United States to read English. I submit that that is one of the best possible ways for conserving the paper that goes into the foreign-language papers.

I wish to say in this connection, that while that bill was pending appeals were made in favor of the bill for the reason that it was impossible for people who could not understand or read the English language to know what is going on in the country. I had appeals from my own State to have some speeches in regard to the League of Nations, which is one of the paramount questions of the day, translated into a foreign tongue. But even that would not meet the situation. You may translate one speech, but you will convey only the one idea. In order to get in touch with the various problems that confront the American people they have got to be able to read the English language, and that is the only way you will ever curtail the expense of publishing newspapers in a foreign tongue. They want information somehow, but if they can not read English I say there should be papers published in a foreign tongue so that they may have at least some information as to what is going on in the country.

Referring to the other question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] there is no doubt that there is a vast waste of paper in the advertisements which appear in the magazines. That has been considered in various ways in connection with the postal rates, but it has not, so far as I have observed, succeeded in reducing the amount of advertising. Something ought to be done to solve the print-paper question, and I am glad the subject has come up this morning, so that Senators may be impressed by the acuteness of the situation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I feel constrained to ask for the regular order.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3865) providing for the men and officers in the Russian Railway Service Corps the status of enlisted men and officers of the United States Army when discharged; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 3866) to provide for the control of the floods of the Atchafalaya, Red, and Black Rivers, La., and to protect their basins from the flood waters of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3867) authorizing the State of New Mexico to apply the proceeds of the grant to said State of 1,000,000 acres of land made by section 7 of the enabling act, June 20, 1910, for the reimbursement of Grant County, Luna County, Santa Fe County, and the town of Silver City, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3868) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3869) to incorporate the International Association of Rotary Clubs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3870) for the relief of the estate of Matthew C. Butler, jr., deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3871) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1918; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 3872) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Wilson; and

A bill (S. 3873) granting a pension to A. J. Henderson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3874) granting an increase of pension to Martha Griggs (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Tualatin River; to the Committee on Commerce.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KIRBY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REGULATION OF COLD STORAGE.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PRESERVATION OF NATIONAL ARCHIVES.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 296), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That, pending action by Congress looking to the erection of a hall of records and the preservation of the national archives, the various departments of the Government be, and they hereby are, instructed to postpone all recommendations for destruction and to make every effort to safeguard against disintegration, deterioration, or destruction of such documents as are now intrusted to their care.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 297), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That, pending action by Congress looking to the preservation of such correspondence, records, papers, and other documents as are valuable for historical, statistical, or other purposes, the various departments of the Government be, and they hereby are, instructed to postpone all recommendations for destruction and to make every effort to safeguard such of the national archives as are now intrusted to their care.

RANK OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to call up Senate resolution 294, directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information with respect to the demotion of officers, and so forth. I submitted the resolution yesterday and asked that it might lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it had better be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there can be no doubt that in many cases the plan of the War Department providing for the demotion of officers has been illogical and grossly unfair. There are cases where, at the outbreak of the war, an officer was, say, No. 800 on the list of officers, meaning that there were 799 ahead of him as officers. Under the demotion plan he is now, say, No. 1,700 on the list of officers, and that means that there are 1,699 ahead of him. That appears to me to be grossly unfair. It is a plan that has caused demoralization among the officers in the Regular Army, and it seems to me that the department's policy should be given to the Senate by the War Department in order that if the plan is inequitable and unfair, that may be known. If it is backed up by good reason and justice, then the information will clarify the situation.

That is the object of the resolution. I have offered it, not as a critic of the War Department, but as a friend of it. I hope the resolution will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. One of the points he has mentioned calls for a vast amount of information. Does the Senator think that that is really necessary? For instance, as I recall, it requires the names of all officers, and there would be thousands of names, the positions which they had and the duties which they performed before demotion, the positions which they now hold, and the duties which those positions involve.

It would seem to me that that would require so much detailed information that it would require weeks on the part of the War Department to supply the information. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the resolution. I think that something ought to be done to correct what seems to be an evil now existing and an injustice from which Army officers are suffering.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Utah that if he should modify what is requested in the resolution he would not be able to secure the data that is necessary in order to form a just opinion. I have tried to make it just as simple as possible in order to enable us to form an accurate opinion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I also am in sympathy with the purpose of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Mississippi, but, referring to the same aspect to which the Senator from Utah referred, which is covered by paragraph 3, let me suggest an amendment, which would reduce somewhat the labor involved and which, I think, would not hurt the resolution. Subdivision 3 reads:

(3) The names of all officers of the Regular Army who have been demoted, with a statement of their grade at the time of their demotion, the grade to which they have been demoted, the duties performed by them at the time they held their higher temporary grade, and the duties they are now performing.

I may suggest to the Senator that it is not particularly important for the purposes of the inquiry to know the duties that demoted officers are now performing. The important thing is to find out what they were doing before they were demoted and also to find out what the officers who have not been demoted are now doing.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the only object of that subdivision was to compare the duties in their higher rank with the duties they are now performing. If the Senator from New York, who is well versed in this matter, thinks the necessary data could be procured by modifying the resolution in that respect, I have no objection to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it would very greatly decrease the burden of preparing the report. The resolution asks for the names and assignments of nearly 9,000 officers, and it seems to me what the Senator really wants to find out most of all, and what the Senate would like to find out most of all, is what the officers still holding the higher ranks are assigned to as a matter of duty and not what the officers who have been demoted are doing, because, so far, they are not doing anything of any importance.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the amendment which the Senator from New York suggests?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest striking out, in lines 15 and 16 on page 1, the words "and the duties they are now performing," putting a period in place of a comma after the word "grade."

Mr. HARRISON. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would also require, in the interest of proper construction, the insertion of the word "and" after the word "demoted" in line 14 on the same page.

Mr. HARRISON. I accept the modifications suggested.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a statement giving specifically—

(1) The policy of the General Staff of the War Department with respect to the demotion of officers of the Regular Army.

(2) The date of the adoption of such policy and what steps, if any, are provided thereunder, so that the officers of the Regular Army may be restored to their permanent grade in an orderly and equitable way.

(3) The names of all officers of the Regular Army who have been demoted, with a statement of their grade at the time of their demotion, the grade to which they have been demoted, and the duties performed by them at the time they held their higher temporary grade.

(4) The names of all officers of the Regular Army still holding advanced rank, the duties now being performed by them, and the reasons why the advanced rank is necessary or appropriate to such duty.

(5) The policy of the War Department in regard to section 8 of the selective-draft act approved May 18, 1917.

(6) If any specific ruling as to the effect of section 8 of the selective-draft act has been made to the War Department by the Judge Advocate General whether said section was intended to preserve a lineal or relative standing of officers of the Regular Army and if any such opinion has been given to the Secretary of War by the Judge Advocate General to furnish it to the Senate.

DRILL BOAT NO. 3 AND DREDGE NO. 9.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3472) for the relief of the owner of a drill boat known as drill boat No. 3 and a dredge known as dredge No. 9. This bill provides for the payment of a very meritorious claim on account of damage done by a naval vessel to several boats that were engaged in dredging at Hell Gate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill first read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., owner of a drill boat known as drill boat No. 3 and a dredge known as dredge No. 9, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $118,309.16 to reimburse said owner of drill boat No. 3 and dredge No. 9 for loss sustained as a result of damages suffered by said drill boat No. 3 and said dredge No. 9 through collision with the United States Navy barge Nahanta in tow of the U. S. S. Woodcock, off Hallets Point, New York Harbor, on April 19, 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the claimant in this case ought to be remitted to the Court of Claims, where he may prosecute his claim against the Government. To appropriate the large sum here proposed without having the claim adjudicated seems to me improper.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this claim is strongly recommended by the Navy Department. These boats were engaged in dredging at Hell Gate, and while so engaged a Navy boat came down the river and, without notice, ran into the drill boat and the dredge. I think the whole matter is covered in the last two paragraphs, on page 6, of the report of the committee on the bill, where it is made plain that the Navy is entirely to blame. These two boats, I will say to the Senator from Utah, are at this very hour needed to prosecute the work at Hell Gate. Their owner can not have them repaired, and consequently can not do the work required by the Government.

Mr. KING. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. There are many claims which have arisen during the war by reason of collisions between ships controlled by the Emergency Fleet Corporation and vessels operated by the Navy. Does not the Senator think that there ought to be some investigation by a court in order to determine the liability of the Government in regard to these matters?

Mr. CALDER. I do, Mr. President; but this is an unusual case. These vessels were engaged in doing Government work under a Government contract, but they have been entirely put out of commission. The man who owns them desires to continue on the Government work, but can not do so because he can not repair the damages caused by the Government.

The claim is not a war claim. It is just as if some one broke up another's business or destroyed his house. In such a case the injured party would sue the one responsible and would get damages or would have his claim taken care of otherwise.

Mr. KING. In the case which has just been instanced by the Senator from New York if, through some fault of the Government, my business were broken up—to use his language—would I not be compelled to go to the Court of Claims or some judicial tribunal for the purpose of establishing the liability of the Government for the damages which I had sustained?

Mr. CALDER. I might say to the Senator——

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from New York yield for a moment?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. Perhaps I ought to say in regard to this claim—for it was considered by a committee with which I am connected—that the facts in reference to it are somewhat unusual. The Government admits its liability and admits the amount for which this bill calls. The fact of the matter was that the claimant was engaged in Government work, and while doing that work a Government naval tug, with a barge attached, came down the river and struck these boats without any fault on the part of the claimant. The Navy Department took the matter up, investigated it carefully, and found that the liability was entirely with the Government and that the amount of the damages was the amount provided for by the bill.

This case is differentiated, I may say to the Senator from Utah, from other cases in this respect, to which the Navy Department called the attention of the committee: The owner of the drill boat and dredge is now working for the Government at Hell Gate, removing rock; the Government has a contract with him; it is essential that the work be done; and yet he is on the verge of bankruptcy. The damage that has been done, unless it is paid for, will absolutely prevent him from going on.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of the Senator if, under existing law, the claimant who has been injured and damaged, as the Senator contends, would have the right to prosecute his demands before the Court of Claims?

Mr. SPENCER. I am inclined to think he would have that right, as the Senator indicates; but here is the situation: The man who was damaged and the one who damaged him have both agreed upon the liability and upon its amount. If it were in civil life, that would create a case which never would go before a court, for the claim would be paid outside of court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the person who agrees for the Government as to the liability in this case does not have to pay the damage. There is a wide difference between a controversy between two individuals in civil life and a controversy between an individual and the Government. Here some person has agreed that the Government is liable and that it should pay a large sum to the claimant. The person so admitting liability against the Government may have contributed to the damages which are the basis of the claim. Now, he is perfectly willing to fasten the liability upon the Government. He escapes the payment of compensation, so can more readily perceive the propriety of fastening liability upon the United States. It would seem to me that where the Government provides a forum in which all legitimate and honest claims, or, for that matter, illegitimate ones, may be presented and passed upon, the Government has done all it ought to do.

Mr. SPENCER. The only answer that can be made to what the Senator has stated is that in a case where liability is unquestioned and the amount is agreed upon, if the claimant is relegated to a court for adjudication, in a case like this, the very delay is a denial of the whole claim, for before the claim can ever be presented to the court or adjudicated the claimant may die. If that department of the Government which caused the damage agrees that they were at fault, and a board of officers, after examination and investigation, agree upon the amount, it would seem as if there was some reason, in fair dealing, why the claimant should not be sent to some other tribunal to determine what has already been agreed upon.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I simply wish to say in connection with the discussion that this is a matter sounding in tort, and the parties could not go into the Court of Claims without special authority for that purpose; they can not go into that court under the general law. There is a bill relating to a collision now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary which authorizes the party to go to the Court of Claims. So, if the parties in this case are required to go to the Court of Claims, we will have to pass a special act to give them that authority.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, with the permission of the Senator from New York——

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does existing law deny access to the Court of Claims where the action sounds in tort?

Mr. NELSON. It does in actions growing out of tort. There is a class of cases that can be referred to the Court of Claims without special authority; but this is an action sounding in tort; it is a marine tort.

Mr. KING. Where there is an implied contract, as I understand——

Mr. NELSON. This can hardly be made a case of implied contract.

Mr. KING. The Court of Claims has jurisdiction.

Mr. NELSON. In cases of implied contracts that court may have jurisdiction; but this is an action sounding essentially in tort, and the parties can not go into the Court of Claims without a special act of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall vote against this measure. I think it establishes a bad precedent; I think that it opens the way for the perpetration of wrongs upon the Government of the United States. We had a similar question under discussion yesterday. We are providing now for payment to be made by the Government upon the recommendation of a board which is constituted for administrative and executive purposes. There are numerous boards in the executive departments, organized for executive and administrative work, and whose labors relate to most of the activities of the Government, and we are conferring upon them judicial powers; we are authorizing them to make investigations and awards against the Government and pronounce judgments that become legal and binding claims which Congress is under obligation to discharge. I think that it is unwise; I think that it is dangerous legislation.

It seems to me where a sovereign State is willing that it shall be sued, and provides a tribunal before which individuals may go to present their claims against it, that is all that should be exacted of it. There ought to be an impartial, dispassionate, judicial investigation of claims made against the Government as there is a judicial investigation of controversies between private individuals; the Government ought to have its day in court, a chance to present before a judicial tribunal evidence in its own defense before liability is laid at its door and a judgment pronounced against it.

Mr. President, the statements upon the floor of the Senate yesterday indicated, as I said a moment ago, that there are numerous boards and tribunals, not only in the War and Navy Departments and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, but in a score or more of the administrative and executive bureaus and departments and instrumentalities of the Government, that are empowered to go out and make investigation of their own derelictions and delinquencies and to pronounce judgments, which the Government will be compelled to pay. If the Court of Claims has not jurisdiction to take care of cases growing out of torts, and if this is a case sounding in tort, a general statute ought to be enacted that will afford full and ample opportunity for claimants against the Government to litigate their claims. It seems to me this is a most dangerous method of dealing with claims against the Government of the United States. I hope the bill will be defeated and that the entire question of providing a proper procedure to determine valid claims against the Government may be fully considered and legislation enacted, if necessary, in order that the rights of citizens and the rights of the United States may be fully protected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question. In arriving at the conclusion how did the representatives of the Government and the claimant reach a conclusion on the amount? I was not in the Chamber a little while ago when this matter came up.

Mr. CALDER. The claimant put in a bill to the Government for $122,000. This was referred to a naval board of inquiry, which sat for several days, and finally agreed that the claimant was entitled to the sum mentioned in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. They heard the proof?

Mr. CALDER. They heard the proof.

Mr. McKELLAR. And then decided what?

Mr. CALDER. They decided that the claimant was entitled to $118,300, the amount stated in the bill. The conclusion of the recommendation of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy is as follows:

> In view of the fact that the record indicated that the Navy is clearly responsible for the damages suffered by the claimant as a result of the said collision, and further that the claimant is engaged in important Government work in deepening and widening the Hell Gate Channel, I have the honor to recommend that the bill receive favorable consideration by the Committee on Claims.

That is signed by Mr. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J."

GERTRUDE LUSTIG.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, for about 10 days now the Senate has been unable to function because of a lack of attendance. I am wondering if we have the proper attendance now, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to bring a matter before the Senate which I think will not demand the presence of a quorum, and will take but just a moment, as it is a bill but eight lines in length.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold the suggestion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3381, Order of Business 355, which will be found upon page 11 of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3381) for the relief of Gertrude Lustig. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Gertrude Lustig, the sum of $1,286.53, being the amount she would have received as pay and allowances as chief nurse, Army Nurse Corps, from September 28, 1918, the date of her unjustifiable dismissal from that position, to May 22, 1919, the date of her restoration to the service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether or not, during the period mentioned in the bill, this nurse had other employment which compensated her for the loss which she sustained by not being in the employ of the Army, and if she did not get employment, the reason therefor?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The unfortunate thing was that the nurse in question was in jail during that entire time. This case constitutes one of the most distressing and horrible things that I have ever encountered in connection with the treatment of a good woman by the Government. It arose from a frame-up, which the Government finally understood was a frame-up, and when they did understand it she was released and restored to service.

Mr. KING. A frame-up by officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is difficult to say just how it commenced. The story is a rather distressing one, and I hesitate very much to tell it.

Mr. KING. I shall not ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Military Intelligence Department of the War Department realized the error that had been made, and the Department of Justice also realized it; and both departments, together with the Surgeon General, the head of the whole Medical Service, joined in an urgent request that this relief be granted to Miss Lustig. She has been restored to service, and she is now a member of the Army Nurse Corps.

Mr. KING. I want to give notice to the distinguished Senator from New York, in view of his statement, that if the War Department does not make an investigation to determine who was at fault, and compel the individuals, if they are Army officers or if they are in the employ of the Government, to make restitution to the Treasury of this amount, I shall introduce a resolution of investigation to ascertain why such course has not been pursued.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say to the Senator from Utah that the Government has done its best to locate the blame for this thing. The persons involved in it have utterly disappeared. I have followed this case for many months, and I must say that the officers, when they discovered their error, have done their very best to remedy it; but the only thing that could be done to give relief in part to the unfortunate person involved was to have Congress pass an act authorizing the payment to this nurse of the money which she would have earned as an Army nurse during the period of her confinement.

Mr. KING. In view of the Senator's statement, I believe the appropriation should be made; but I feel that the War Department, with the vast resources at its command, should determine who committed this crime against the nurse and prosecute them criminally, and compel them to refund the amount the United States will pay to the injured party. After waiting a reasonable time I shall call the chairman's attention to this matter, and if there is no satisfactory reply from the proper department I shall ask an investigation of the entire matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McCormick	Sheppard
Ball	Harris	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Harrison	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Spencer
Capper	Hitchcock	Nelson	Stanley
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	New	Sterling
Cummins	Johnson, S.Dak.	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Underwood
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Fernald	Kellogg	Page	Warren
France	King	Phelan	Watson
Glass	Kirby	Phipps	Williams
Gronna	Knox	Pomerene
Hale	Lodge	Ransdell

Mr. MOSES. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this motion, and the roll will be called.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I agreed to pair with him during his absence, and therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] and withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but having a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily detained from the Senate, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I afterwards learned that my pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] is not in the Chamber. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]. May I ask if he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. May I inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Having a general pair with that Senator, I will withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ball	Hale	Nelson	Sterling
Beckham	Harding	New	Sutherland
Borah	Harris	Nugent	Townsend
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Wadsworth

Gay	La Follette	Sherman
Gerry	Lenroot	Shields
Glass	Lodge	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are three Senators present and not voting. A quorum has not voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Henderson	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Curtis	Knox	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	Lodge	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCormick	Pomerene	Warren
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Hale	Moses	Smoot
Harding	Nelson	Spencer
Harris	New	Stanley

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absentees, and Mr. GRONNA, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained at home. He has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. GORE, Mr. KING, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair that I made a moment ago, I withhold my vote. I ask that this announcement may stand for the rest of the day. If at liberty to vote on this question, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair as on the previous roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, and in the absence of the Senator from Delaware I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON. Although not voting, I desire to be counted as present for the purpose of making a quorum.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. He has not voted, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] with whom the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired having entered the Chamber, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL, after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is not present and has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained by illness in their families.

I have also been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] are detained on account of illness.

The roll call resulted—yeas 36, nays 6, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from South Dakota the yeas are 36 and the nays are 6. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] being present, there is a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with amendments.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning at the expiration of 90 days next following the passage and approval of this act, all employees in the classified civil service of the United States who have on that date, or shall have on any date thereafter, reached the age of 65 years and rendered at least 15 years of service, computed as prescribed in section 3 of this act, shall be eligible for retirement on an annuity as provided in section 2 hereof: Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 62 years of age, and railway postal clerks at 60 years of age.

The provisions of this act shall include employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens, excepting persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and may be extended by Executive order, upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, to include any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States not classified at the time of the passage of this act. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any employee or group of employees in the classified civil service whose tenure of office or employment is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

All regular annual employees of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, appointed directly by the commissioners, including those receiving per diem compensation paid out of general appropriations, but whose services are continuous, and including public-school employees, excepting school officers and teachers, shall be included in the provisions of this act, but members of the police and fire departments shall be excluded therefrom.

Postmasters, and such employees of the Lighthouse Service as come within the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 20, 1918, entitled "An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes," shall not be included in the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of determining the amount of annuity which retired employees shall receive, the following classifications and rates shall be established:

Class A shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 30 years or more. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 60 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $720 per annum or be less than $360 per annum.

Class B shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 27 years or more, but less than 30 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 54 per cent of such employee's annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $648 per annum, or be less than $324 per annum.

Class C shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 24 years or more, but less than 27 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 48 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $576 per annum, or be less than $288 per annum.

Class D shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 21 years or more, but less than 24 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 42 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall the annuity in this class exceed $504 per annum, or be less than $252 per annum.

Class E shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total of 18 years or more, but less than 21 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 36 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $432 per annum, or be less than $216 per annum.

Class F shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 15 years or more, but less than 18 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 50 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $360 per annum, or be less than $180 per annum.

The term "basic salary, pay, or compensation" wherever used in this act shall be so construed as to exclude from the operation of the act all bonuses, allowances, overtime pay, or salary, pay, or compensation given in addition to the base pay of the positions as fixed by law or regulation.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act and subject to the provisions of section 10 hereof, the period of service shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or unclassified employee in the civil service of the United States, and shall include periods of service at different times and services in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices of the Government, and shall also include service performed under authority of the United States beyond seas, and honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States: Provided, That in the case of an employee who is eligible for and elects to receive a pension under any law, or compensation under the war-risk insurance act, the period of his or her military or naval service shall not be included for the purpose of assignment to classes defined in section 2 hereof, but nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner his or her right to a pension, or to compensation under the war-risk insurance act, in addition to the annuity herein provided.

It is further provided that in computing length of service for the purposes of this act all periods of separation from the service shall be excluded, and that in the case of substitutes in the Postal Service only periods of active employment shall be included.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of administration, except as otherwise provided herein, the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to perform, or cause to be performed, any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect. An appeal to the Secretary of the Interior shall lie from the final action or order of the Commissioner of Pensions affecting the rights or interests of any person or of the United States under this act, the procedure on appeal to be as prescribed by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That any employee to whom this act applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 15 years, and who, before reaching the retirement age as fixed in section 1 hereof, becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the employee, shall, upon his or her own application or upon the request or order of the head of the department, branch, or independent office concerned, be retired on an annuity under the provisions of section 2 hereof: Provided, however, That no employee shall be retired under the provisions of this section until examined by a medical officer of the United States or a duly qualified physician or surgeon or board of physicians or surgeons designated by the Commissioner of Pensions for that purpose and found to be disabled in the degree and in the manner specified herein.

Every annuitant retired under the provisions of this section, unless the disability for which retired is permanent in character, shall, at the expiration of one year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter until reaching the retirement age as defined in section 1 hereof, be examined under direction of the Commissioner of Pensions by a medical officer of the United States, or a duly qualified physician or surgeon or board of physicians or surgeons designated by the Commissioner of Pensions for that purpose, in order to ascertain the nature and degree of the annuitant's disability, if any; if the annuitant recovers and is restored to his or her former earning capacity before reaching the retirement age, payment of the annuity shall be discontinued from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery; if the annuitant fails to appear for examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability has been satisfactorily established. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized to order or direct at any time such medical or other examination as he shall deem necessary to determine the facts relative to the nature and degree of disability of any employee retired on an annuity under this section.

Fees for examinations made under the provisions of this section by physicians or surgeons who are not medical officers of the United States shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, and such fees, together with the employee's reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to such examinations, shall be paid out of the appropriations for the cost of administering this act.

In all cases where the annuity is discontinued under the provisions of this section before the annuitant has received a sum equal to the total amount of his or her contributions with accrued interest, the difference shall be paid to the retired employee, or to his or her estate, upon application therefor in such form and manner as the Commissioner of Pensions may direct.

No person shall be entitled to receive an annuity under the provisions of this act, and compensation under the provisions of the act of September 7, 1916, entitled, "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," covering the same period of time; but this provision shall not be so construed as to bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either act for any part of the same period of time.

SEC. 6. That all employees to whom this act applies shall, upon the expiration of 90 days next succeeding its passage, if of retirement age, or thereafter on arriving at retirement age as defined in section 1 hereof, be automatically separated from the service, and all salary, pay, or compensation shall cease from that date, and it shall be the duty of the head of each department, branch, or independent office of the Government to notify such employees under his direction of the date of such separation from the service at least 60 days in advance thereof: Provided, That if within 60 days after the passage of this act or not less than 30 days before the arrival of an employee at the age of retirement, the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government in which he or she is employed certifies to the Civil Service Commission that by reason of his or her efficiency and willingness to remain in the civil service of the United States the continuance of such employee therein would be advantageous to the public service, such employee may be retained for a term of not exceeding two years upon certification by the Civil Service Commission, and at the end of the two years he or she may, by similar certification, be continued for an additional term not exceeding two years, and so on: Provided, however, That at the end of 10 years after this act becomes effective no employee shall be continued in the civil service of the United States beyond the age of retirement defined in section 1 hereof for more than four years.

SEC. 7. That every employee who is or hereafter becomes eligible for retirement because of age as provided in this act, shall, within 60 days after its passage or 30 days before reaching the retirement age, or at any time thereafter, file with the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, an application for an annuity, supported by a certificate from the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government in which the applicant has been employed, stating the age and period or periods of service of the applicant and salary, pay, or compensation received during such periods, as shown by the official records: Provided, however, That in the case of an employee who is to be continued in the civil service of the United States beyond the retirement age as provided in section 6 hereof, he or she may make application for retirement at any time within such period of continuance in the service; but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent the compulsory retirement of such employee when in the judgment of the head of the department, branch, or independent office in which he or she is employed such retirement would promote the best interests of the service.

Upon receipt of satisfactory evidence the Commissioner of Pensions shall forthwith adjudicate the claim of the applicant, and if title to annuity be established, a proper certificate shall be issued to the annuitant under the seal of the Department of the Interior.

Annuities granted under this act for retirement on account of age shall commence from the date of termination of pay for active service on or after the date this act shall take effect, and shall continue during the life of the annuitant. Annuities granted for disability under the provisions of section 5 hereof shall be subject to the limitations specified in said section.

SEC. 8. That beginning on the first day of the third month next following the passage of this act and monthly thereafter there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of each employee to whom this act applies a sum equal to 2½ per cent of such employee's basic salary, pay, or compensation. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said deductions to be withheld from all specific appropriations for the particular salaries or compensation from which the deductions are made and from all allotments out of lump-sum appropriations for payments of such salaries or compensation for each fiscal year, and said sums shall be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of a special fund to be known as "the civil-service retirement and disability fund," and said fund is hereby appropriated for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as provided in this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to invest from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States, such portions of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" hereby created as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as herein provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 11 of this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered in carrying out the provisions of this act to supplement the individual contributions of employees with moneys received in the form of donations, gifts, legacies, bequests, or otherwise, and to receive, invest, and disburse for the purposes of this act all moneys which may be contributed by private individuals or corporations or organizations for the benefit of civil-service employees generally or any special class of employees.

SEC. 9. That every employee coming within the provisions of this act shall be deemed to consent and agree to the deductions from salary, pay, or compensation as provided in section 8 hereof, and payment less such deductions shall be a full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all regular services rendered by such employee during the period covered by such payment, except the right to the benefits to which he or she shall be entitled under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 167, 168, and 169 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and of any other law, rule, or regulation affecting the salary, pay, or compensation of any person or persons employed in the civil service to whom this act applies.

SEC. 10. That upon the transfer of any employee from an unclassified to a classified status, or upon the reinstatement of a former employee, credit for past service rendered subsequent to the date of this act shall take effect, or for any part thereof, shall be granted only upon deposit with the Treasurer of the United States of the amount of such deductions with interest as provided in this act as would have been made for the periods of actual service, or part thereof, for which credit is to be given, but such interest shall not be computed for periods of separation from the service: Provided, That failure to make such deposit shall not deprive the employee of credit for any past service rendered prior to the date this act shall become operative, and to which he or she would otherwise be entitled.

SEC. 11. That in the case of an employee in the classified civil service of the United States who shall be transferred to an unclassified position, and in the case of any employee to whom this act applies who shall become absolutely separated from the service before reaching the retiring age, the total amount of deductions of salary, pay, or compensation with accrued interest computed at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, compounded on June 30 of each fiscal year, shall, upon application, be returned to such employee; and in case an annuitant shall die without having received in annuities an amount equal to the total amount of the deductions from his or her salary, pay, or compensation, together with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum compounded as herein provided up to the time of his or her death, the excess of the said accumulated deductions over the said annuity payments shall be paid in one sum to his or her legal representatives upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor; and in case an employee shall die without having reached the retirement age, or without having established a valid claim for annuity, the total amount of deductions with accrued interest as herein provided shall be paid to the legal representatives of such employee.

SEC. 12. That annuities granted under the terms of this act shall be due and payable monthly on the first business day of the month following the month or other period for which the annuity shall have accrued, and payment of all annuities, refunds, and allowances granted hereunder shall be made by checks drawn and issued by the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions in such form and manner and with such safeguards as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing accounting that may be found applicable to such payments.

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the head of each executive department and the head of each independent establishment of the Government not within the jurisdiction of any executive department to report to the Civil Service Commission in such manner as said commission may prescribe the name and grade of each employee to whom this act applies in or under said department or establishment who shall be at any time in a nonpay status, showing the dates such employee was in a nonpay status, and the amount of salary, pay, or compensation lost by the employee by reason of such absence. The Civil Service Commission shall keep a record of appointments, transfers, changes in grade, separations from the service, reinstatements, loss of pay, and such other information concerning individual service as may be deemed essential to a proper determination of rights under this act, and shall furnish the Commissioner of Pensions such reports therefrom as he shall from time to time request as necessary to the proper adjustment of any claim hereunder, and shall prepare and keep all needful tables and records required for carrying out the provisions of this act, including data showing the mortality experience of the employees in the service, and the percentage of withdrawal from such service, and any other information that may serve as a guide for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for the retirement of employees under this act.

The Commissioner of Pensions shall make a detailed comparative report annually showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them.

SEC. 14. That none of the moneys mentioned in this act shall be assignable, either in law or equity, or be subject to execution, levy or attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

SEC. 15. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for salaries and for clerical and other services, the purchase of books, office equipment, stationery, and other supplies, and all other expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act, including traveling expenses and expenses of medical and other examinations as provided in section 5 hereof.

The Secretary of the Interior shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary to continue this act in full force and effect.

SEC. 16. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in the consideration of this bill I admit at the beginning a full sense of responsibility. It is an important measure, and if it is passed it means the establishment by our Government for the first time of a civil-service retirement system, under which the employee in the classified civil service, if he has served the requisite time provided by the bill—namely, a minimum of 15 years—and has reached the age of retirement provided for in the bill—namely, in most cases 65 years and in other special cases 62 years and 60 years, respectively—will have upon retirement a maximum annuity, dependent upon length of service and amount of salary, of $720, and a minimum annuity, dependent likewise, of course, upon a smaller salary and a less period of service, of $180.

Mr. President, I think we all have observed the need of a civil-service retirement system. We can not have visited the several great departments of this Government from time to time in the performance of our duties as Senators without seeing here and there in every department at the various desks at which clerks are employed the inefficient who were unable to perform full service, their inefficiency ranging all the way from no efficiency at all to, perhaps, 75 or 80 per cent of efficiency in the service.

The first question, Mr. President, is, Who now are interested in the passage of a civil-service retirement bill and in the establishment of such a system for our Government?

There are three parties who are interested: First, the employees themselves. We may divide those into two classes, first, the aged, who after long years of service on very moderate salaries, on which they have been unable to accumulate anything, feel that they are entitled because of that long service to some recognition from the Government and to have some provision made for their declining years, the few remaining years after they have reached the age of retirement. But the aged are not the only ones who are interested in a provision of this kind. The younger men and women are interested, too. And why? Because the retention in the service of the aged and inefficient denies them their right to advancement and promotion in the service; and so we may say in a broad way that all classes of employees are interested in and, I think, have a right to demand the enactment of an adequate civil-service retirement law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I think that I——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have listened——

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to ask me a question? I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, is that all?

Mr. STERLING. I think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I ask for a quorum.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator will forego that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did not yield for that purpose. He yielded only for a question.

Mr. STERLING. I think, Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's wish to call for a quorum; but we might have a quorum here——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I intended to be absolutely courteous and nice, and asked the Senator to yield. The Senator declined to yield except for a question.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I asked for a quorum.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I did not decline to yield for a question. I do not think the Senator can take me off the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator will perhaps yield?

Mr. STERLING. Not for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the Senator yielded merely for a question?

Mr. STERLING. I decline to yield, Mr. President, except for a question, and I do that with all deference and respect for the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no question to ask, Mr. President. I wanted to interject an observation that I wanted the Senate to consider. If the Senator will not yield for that purpose, then I ask for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, aside from the employees who are interested, there are the other parties. The first is the Government itself, which is interested in securing efficiency, interested in economy——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota declined to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator had already yielded; and, having yielded, of course it is always in order to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator did not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is unparliamentary to take a Senator from the floor while he is proceeding with a speech, and the Senator from South Dakota declined to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have never known a time when the suggestion of the absence of a quorum was not recognized by the Chair.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Mississippi will reflect, I know he will recall to mind many times when Senators have declined to be taken from the floor on the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator did not decline to yield.

Mr. STERLING. I do decline now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declined to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. So, as I say, Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I ask the Senator if he will yield to an interruption for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. No; not for an interruption. I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not make the point of no quorum, but I want to make an interruption.

Mr. STERLING. I will not yield, Mr. President, just on the suggestion that the Senator wants to interrupt me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. STERLING. The Government, by reason of a lack of efficiency on the part of aged employees, of course, is expending, I will say now, millions of dollars annually that it should not expend, and would not be required to expend under a proper civil-service retirement system.

Mr. President, there is the great public besides. It all ultimately comes back to the public, and the interest the public has in such a system, of course interested primarily in efficient government, in the doing of the work of the several departments of Government well. It is interested, of course, in the second place, in the doing of the work economically, interested in the saving of the millions that may be saved annually under a retirement system.

So we have those three factors: The employees themselves, by whom I know we wish to do justice and can not without some retirement system; the Government itself, whose business should be efficiently and economically managed; and the public itself, the taxpayers, who are affected, of course, by inefficiency and lack of economy in the dispatch and management of the Government business.

This much, Mr. President, is preliminary.

I shall let authority better than myself speak as to the needs, and I will quote briefly from those who officially come in contact daily with the situation. The Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment of the Senate had quite extensive hearings on this bill, and I want to quote briefly from some of the statements made in those hearings.

Mr. Galloway, until lately a member of the Civil Service Commission, quoted in the hearing at which he was a witness from the annual report of the commission for 1917, and I read from page 15 of that hearing:

A retirement system would give stability to the service, create an inducement to capable men to continue in it, contribute to improved administrative methods, and make possible a standardization of salaries and other needed reforms. The benefits to the service from an equitable retirement system would justify a direct contribution from the Public Treasury to create an annuity for superannuated employees in the service at the time the system is established.

While reading this excerpt, Mr. President, I am led to think of another thing that has a very close connection with it, and that is the fact that we have now a great reclassification commission at work. I am not sure but what the commission has about completed its work. But note the bearing that a civil-service retirement law will have upon the work of this commission. I say this having in view the idea, namely, that the enactment of a retirement law should antedate the report of that commission, or antedate anyhow any law which we may desire to enact in regard to reclassification in pursuance of the report of such a commission.

Mr. Galloway continued, reading from the report:

A retirement system would give stability to the service, create an inducement to capable men to continue in it, contribute to improved administrative methods, and make possible a standardization of salaries, etc.—

the work in which I understand the Reclassification Commission is particularly interested. This is not Mr. Galloway's language. It is the language of the Civil Service Commission itself which I read:

In the establishment of improved administrative methods serious difficulty has been found in dealing with superannuated employees. The commission does not regard superannuation as an outgrowth of the merit system, but deals with the subject of retirement in its reports because of its relation to improved administrative methods. Superannuation is older than the civil-service act, and any increase is not a result of the merit system. Examinations and efficiency ratings tend to minimize superannuation by exposing incapacity, that otherwise would be hidden. The civil-service rules have never protected incompetents. The improvement of methods and the proper adjustment of pay can not be effectively provided for until a retirement system is established which will make provision for this class of employees—the class of employees that would come in the superannuated class.

The commission believes that a contributory plan is the only just and practicable one for the retirement of employees, and earnestly recommends its adoption at an early date.

The plan we propose, Mr. President, is a contributory plan.

Mr. Galloway says further, in the course of his testimony, on page 17, being questioned by Senator COLT:

Senator COLT. But as a matter of principle, Mr. Galloway, as affording the best retirement bill, do you think that it would be better for the employee to contribute all? In other words, do you not think possibly some burden ought to be thrown upon the Government?

Mr. GALLOWAY. Yes; I think that the Government should bear part of it.

In the testimony of witnesses some very pathetic cases are given, cases of old people, men and women, who have to be carried or wheeled in chairs to the office in which the work is done, helped to their desks, and who remain doing absolutely nothing during the hours which they are expected to work, having no efficiency whatever. There are all grades in the service, and in every branch of it, where there are people beyond 65, and even over 80 years of age, all grades, from no efficiency, as I said a moment ago, to 75 or 80 per cent of efficiency.

I call attention to a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, which was introduced and put into the RECORD by Mr. E. W. Libby, Chief Clerk of the Department of Commerce. Mr. Redfield, as will be found on page 34, said:

Failure to be as just in these matters as private concerns are injures the Government, either by causing the ambitious to seek better opportunities for service elsewhere or by relaxing the efforts of its employees generally through the unconscious drag that comes from hopeless service.

The result of the present condition is seen in the survival of many old people in the Government work, who struggle on when they should have ceased from their labors, because they needs must. Enactments requiring these aged workers to be discharged are substantially repealed by the higher law of humanity. They are demoted and maintained at reduced pay, thus creating what is in substance a pension without retirement, without the dignity of a recognition by the Government of their worth, and maintaining the inefficiency which everyone seeks to remove.

We ask the question sometimes, why do not heads of departments and bureaus discharge them? They can not discharge them, and we can not help but commend, instead of condemn, the principles of humanity by which the heads of the departments are moved in retaining them in the service.

Secretary Redfield said further:

I am not specially concerned as to the details of any measure, but do earnestly hope it may be possible soon to establish a civil retirement system which will at once justly provide for those who have served many years, open the door to more rapid promotion and to larger opportunities for younger and more active employees, and make the Government work more efficient, not only through the removal of ineffectives but by the unconscious but very real self-discipline that comes in response to wise and far-seeing treatment of the employee.

Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, said, as will be found on page 38:

Entirely apart from the humanities and justice involved in such legislation, it would seem to be high time to recognize the fact that the executive departments have a pension roll whether they like it or not.

I hope Senators will get the full significance of those words. Of course, if a man is wholly inefficient he is getting a pension to the full amount of his salary; if he is 50 per cent inefficient he is getting a pension, as it were, to the extent of 50 per cent of his salary, and so on.

Mr. Wilson proceeds:

and that it is the most expensive, cumbersome, and in many ways inhuman sort of a pension system. What I refer to here is the waterlogged pay roll, which in all essentials produces a pension system without the retirement. In other words, aged and decrepit employees who have been worn out in Government service are retained on the pay roll at a salary which is considerably higher, in most cases, than would provide an adequate pension. These people are not discharged, can not and will not be discharged by the heads of departments for humane reasons which we need not go into here. On the other hand, they must be at their desks each day for seven hours in order to receive the salary at which they are listed. This is not only a physical hardship upon them, it is a useless and inhumane one.

I might quote some other heads of departments or chief clerks, but I shall not take the time of the Senate now to read all these.

I should like, however, to read an extract from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, now Senator GLASS, on page 65 of the hearings, as follows:

The Treasury Department is constantly engaged in the work of increasing its efficiency and diminishing the relative expense of operation, but any extensive and successful effort to improve the administrative operations of this large department is very heavily handicapped by the absence of a just method of retirement.

The efficiency of the department is retarded for want of a retirement law. I believe that the enactment of legislation providing for superannuated or disabled employees of the civil service in this department would result in economies and increased efficiency in the transaction of public business. It would be a measure of benefit to the Government, and of justice to the employees who faithfully have devoted their talents and the best years of their lives to the interests of the Government.

The last paragraph of Secretary Glass's letter is a quotation from the annual report of his predecessor, Secretary McAdoo, for the fiscal year, 1918, as follows:

In considering this important question the attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the possibilities of an expansion of the principles underlying the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Humanity demands that something be done for the civil employees of the Government, and suggestions of pension systems, while praiseworthy as an effort to render justice and effective as an expedient, would probably not afford a real solution. It is confidently believed that the solution lies along the lines of insurance with both the Government and the civil employees contributing to a scientific plan that will provide for retirement as well as insurance against death.

In that statement I think Secretary Glass embodies the principles of the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. Paul F. Myers, chief clerk of the Treasury Department, in his testimony at page 69 of the hearings, said:

There are a large number of employees in the Treasury Department—I should say, roughly speaking, about 1,000 employees—who have reached the age where they are no longer rendering first-class service to the Government. Some of them are rendering 90 per cent efficient service, some of them 50 per cent, some of them 25 per cent, and a few practically nothing, and officials of the Government and officials of the Treasury Department, and, I think, that is true of all departments, feel that it is inhumane to drop these people from the rolls for the reason that they would be forced to depend upon public charity for support.

So much for the general needs of a civil-service retirement system.

Can the Government of the United States, with its resources, its population, its wealth, afford to institute a civil-service retirement system? We can afford it better than any other nation in the world. As I said at the outset, there is no great civilized nation in the world but has its civil-service retirement system. I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment while I call attention to some of the systems found in other countries.

Germany, for example—and I hope that Senators will note the cost of the civil-service retirement system to the Government of Germany—has had a civil-service retirement law since 1873. It was amended in 1881, in 1886, and again in 1907. Permanent disability after 10 years of service entitles to a pension for the remainder of life; twenty-sixtieths for retirement for incapacity during the first 10 years of service; that is, twenty-sixtieths of the average annual salary. Let us apply that and see how much Germany pays in comparison with what the United States Government would have to pay under the pending bill.

Taking the basic salary of $1,200, the pension would be $400 for less than 10 years of service. From the tenth to the thirtieth year, inclusive, however, the pension increases. It is increased each year by one-sixtieth of the annual income. Thus, if the salary were $1,200, one-sixtieth would be $20, and when the employee had served the thirtieth year his pension would be 20 times $20, plus $400, or $800. Germany then pays $800, where we, at most, would pay $720, and the employee under the German system does not contribute one cent. It is a straight pension by the Government.

Again, Mr. President, in addition to that, after the thirtieth year the pension is increased one one-hundred-and-twentieth for each year of service, which on a basis of $1,200 a year would amount to $10 per annum. The maximum amount which a pensioner may draw is limited to forty-five sixtieths of the employee's salary, and thus on a salary of $1,200 the maximum pension would be $900 in Germany as against $720 which the Government of the United States would pay under the system provided under the pending bill. Which the Government of the United States would pay? No; the Government of the United States would not by any means pay all of that. Depending upon the salary of the employee, his years of service, and upon his contribution, the Government would pay so much less than $720.

Great Britain has had a pension system since the beginning of the nineteenth century. She has for a long time had a pension law which made provision for the aged employees of the Government. The pension now is so graded as to encourage retirement at the age of 65 years.

There is this further difference to be noted between the provisions of the pending bill and the provisions of the statutes of most other countries that I have examined. The employee will not be entitled to a pension under the provisions of the pending bill unless he has served a minimum of 15 years. Under the laws of other countries he will be entitled to a pension upon the completion of a service of 10 years or more.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator just stated that in other countries they were entitled to a pension after a service of 10 years. To what countries did the Senator refer?

Mr. STERLING. I will enumerate them as far as I can: Great Britain, Germany, Canada, Italy, and, I think, France, although I will not be sure as to France. I have not the data before me now, but I think France. I think the general rule in all countries where provision is made for retirement allowances or pensions is that a minimum service of 10 years is required, rather than the longer service of 15 years, as provided in the pending bill.

The great consideration is that those countries that can less afford to pay the pensions than can the Government of the United States are paying more and higher maximum pensions than are provided in the pending bill, and that, as a rule, without contribution upon the part of the employees.

Now, a little further as to the system itself. This is sometimes called the partially contributory system. I think that is a misnomer really. It ought to be called the contributory system. That better defines the system whereunder the employee contributes a part and the Government contributes a part. Call it a contributory system. Where the employee contributes all that goes to make up his pension or pays all that goes to make up his pension, it can hardly be called a contributory plan. Contribution would seem on its face to imply different parties who were making contributions to the one fund.

Canada has had quite an involved pension or retirement system. There have been many changes in the laws of Canada within comparatively few years, but recently Canada has had under consideration the matter of a revision of her retirement laws. I am not sure but that the revision has been made by late enactment.

From an article found in the Railway Post Office, under the head "Canadian civil service and retirement," I quote the following:

> There are two methods of creating a pension fund—the contributory and the noncontributory.

Senators will note here in what sense the word "contributory" is used.

> The contributory is that in which the participants contribute a percentage of the salary and the Government guarantees the difference. Then there is the noncontributory, in which the Government provides the entire amount. So far as the expressed feeling of the service in Ottawa is concerned, it is practically unanimous in favor of the contributory system. I may add that the actual experience of the British civil service, where both systems have been in force, has been that those who are under the noncontributory system are also under a lower salary scale, which more than deducted the amount of what would have been their contribution to the superannuation fund. Moreover, contribution to the fund gives the contributors a vested interest and the right to participate in control, removing it from the suggestion of charity. It is now becoming universally recognized that a proper pension or superannuation fund is not a charity, but a straight business proposition, which pays for itself in higher efficiency of service and greater economy of administration.
> I shall add that Australia and New Zealand tried both of the systems, and it was found that the contributory system was more satisfactory to the civil servants for the same reason stated by Mr. Foran. Mr. Foran volunteers the news that the civil service of Canada is keenly interested in superannuation, and are planning a progressive policy.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to break into the Senator's speech, if he will answer the question which I desire to have answered in some other place; but as I am compelled to attend a meeting at 3.30 o'clock I should like to know whether estimates have been made as to what the establishment of this proposed system of retirement will cost the Government each year. The Senator, however, need not stop now to answer that question if he desires to defer its answer.

Mr. STERLING. I think I might as well answer it now, so far as I am able. In the report made by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment there will be found incorporated——

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator refer to the report on the pending bill?

Mr. STERLING. Yes. There is found incorporated in the report an estimate made by Mr. John S. Beach, of the Pension Bureau. Let me say with reference to Mr. Beach, that he is now and has been for some years the statistical accountant of the Pension Bureau. He was detailed by the Secretary of the Interior recently to aid in the work of the Reclassification Commission. Beginning on page 4, the Senator from Minnesota will find a statement of the cost. Mr. Beach estimates the contribution from 300,000 employees to be $8,535,000. Those will be the contributions, I will say to the Senator, at the rate of 2½ per cent of the annual salary received by each employee. The number of 300,000 employees is a little below the number at present in the civil service. I think the number now in the civil service is perhaps 350,000 or, perhaps, more than that.

Mr. POMERENE. In that number, I take it, the Senator is including what might be regarded as the extra employees due to the war?

Mr. STERLING. Some of them are, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me to explain. The Civil Service Commission's report for 1917 shows, as I remember, the number of employees in the classified service of the civil service as being 326,000; but that, I take it, was more than normal; it was after we had entered the war and a great number of additional employees had entered the service on that account. I think to take 300,000 civil-service employees would be to take the number of employees for normal times, and that is the number——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I think this is such an interesting matter that we ought to have more than four Republicans and five Democrats in the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from South Dakota did yield.

Mr. STERLING. I yielded, and, inadvertently, did not stop to inquire whether or not the Senator from Mississippi wished to ask a question. I will not interpose an objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota yielded, and I suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Spencer
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Phelan	Thomas
Dillingham	Kirby	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Gerry	McKellar	Ransdell	Watson
Glass	McNary	Robinson
Harrison	Nelson	Sheppard
Henderson	New	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. REED, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names.

Mr. HARRIS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of the absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. BALL, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. HALE, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. MCCORMICK, and Mr. FRANCE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I was proceeding to answer, as best I could, the question of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] when the absence of a quorum was suggested. I was calling attention to the statement made by Mr. John S. Beach, and found in the report of the Senate committee on this bill.

This report is based on an average annual salary for employees of $1,138. This was, in 1916, about the average annual salary. I have seen other statements making it about $1,132, but it probably ranged from $1,132 to $1,140 as the average salary of all the 300,000 employees of the Government. The report is based further on the theory that the average annuity will amount to $610, the maximum under the bill being $720 and the minimum, the very lowest, $180.

It is based on the further supposition that there will be retirements in the classified civil service of 6,400 persons. So take the contributions of 300,000 employees getting an average salary of $1,138, and you have as a result of those contributions $8,535,000, and annuities for 6,400 annuitants at $610, which will amount to $3,904,000. Then Mr. Beach takes into consideration another element, namely, that under the provisions of this bill employees will be separated from the service before they reach the retirement age, and that on their retirement there will be refunded to them the amount they had paid up to the date of retirement, together with compound interest at 4 per cent; so he estimates for the first year a refund of $274,500, making all told in annuities paid and in refunds paid $4,178,500, leaving a surplus or balance over and above all that has been expended by the Government of $4,356,500. So, Mr. President, for the first year of the operation of this act, according to the estimate of Mr. Beach, the Government will not be required to expend one cent. No appropriation will be required save the appropriation to put the act into operation and which is asked for in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to ask the Senator several questions bearing upon the proposition that he is now discussing.

This $8,535,000 will be contributions from the employees, and the bill contemplates, of course, that separate accounts shall be kept with each of these employees; so that, as a matter of fact, that is a trust fund which must be refunded to these employees in the event of their death or in the event that they do not receive annuities equal to the amount of their contributions plus the accruals of interest thereon. Am I right about that?

Mr. STERLING. In theory I may say that the Senator is right about it, I think.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Government is liable for this fund?

Mr. STERLING. I understand so.

Mr. POMERENE. Again, according to this statement, there are 6,400 annuitants. The Senator, in the earlier part of his address, made the statement, with which I am in accord, that these superannuates are some of them 25 per cent efficient, some 50 per cent efficient, some 80 per cent efficient, and so forth. Now, I think it is to be assumed that the service which is rendered by the 6,400 annuitants will have to be rendered by other clerks—in other words, new clerks—and they will have to be paid; and, assuming for the sake of the argument that they are 50 per cent efficient, you would perhaps have to have one-half as many clerks as there are superannuates, and they must be paid. So it seems to me that when we are casting up the account as to what this system is going to cost, we must take into consideration that fact as well.

Mr. STERLING. I understand the Senator, and I have that in mind. I do not know that that factor is taken into account in this statement of Mr. Beach's; but, in the first place, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio overestimates the number of replacements that will be required because of the retirement of these aged employees. I will refer a little later, if the Senator will permit me, to a statement, which I think is a moderate statement, which shows that not more than 25 per cent of replacements will be required for those that retire. I think that is demonstrated with reference, anyhow, to the employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that neither the Senator from South Dakota nor myself can get any exact figures upon that subject. Assuming that these employees are simply 50 per cent inefficient, then, of course, it would take one-half as many new employees.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. If they were only 25 per cent efficient, then it is quite true that the Senator's suggestion would be correct, of course. I think the other fact can be taken into consideration, that it is to be assumed that the retirement of these elderly clerks will to some extent improve the efficiency of the system.

Mr. SMOOT. In some cases.

Mr. POMERENE. In some cases; yes.

Mr. STERLING. But I think I shall be able to show to the Senator that, taking all replacements into consideration, there will yet, because of the retirement of these aged employees upon their annuities, be a big saving to the Government. We might as well discuss that matter a little further right here, since the Senator has called attention to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator pardon me if I ask him another question, so that he can have it in mind in making his answer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota further yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. In any event, whether it takes 25 per cent or 50 per cent or 10 per cent of new clerks to do the work of these other clerks, whatever they are paid must be taken into consideration in determining the cost to the Government.

Mr. STERLING. I agree with the Senator in that regard.

Now, I read from another statement by Mr. John S. Beach, lately furnished to the Commission on Reclassification of the Civil Service in the District of Columbia. I think Mr. Beach is very conservative and careful in these statements. Referring to the number in the Government employ here, he says:

> By July 1, 1916, the number of employees in the permanent establishments in the District of Columbia had increased to 33,511, which number also did not include the employees in the navy yard. A few other employees were likewise excluded from the total number reported. It is safe to assume that the ratio of those 65 years of age and over was maintained up until that time; if so, then the number 65 years of age and over on July 1, 1916, would have been 2,446.
> From July 1, 1916, until the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, the civil employees increased in numbers by leaps and bounds; since the signing of the armistice there has been a material reduction in force, and it is estimated that when the service becomes reasonably stabilized, in the course of four or five years, the number in the permanent service in the District of Columbia will approximate about 60,000 employees.

It is well to remember, Mr. President, that according to our best estimates that will be perhaps about one-fifth, or a little less than one-fifth, of the total number of employees in the civil service throughout the United States.

He says further:

> It is a well-known fact that the employees who have come into the service during recent years are, for the most part, young persons, and it is reasonable to assume that those who may be retained will likewise be young and consequently will not be eligible for retirement for years to come. Reasoning along this line, we must arrive at the conclusion that the actual number of employees in the service at the present time who are 65 years of age and over does not greatly exceed the number at the outbreak of the war.
> For the present let us assume that there are 3,000 employees in the civil service in the District of Columbia who are 65 years of age and over, and who are consequently eligible for retirement under the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill. The scale of annuities provided in this bill ranges from a maximum of $720 to a minimum of $180 per annum. It has been carefully estimated that the average annuity at first will be about $610 per annum, and that this average will gradually increase until it reaches a maximum of $660.
> Taking the lowest average as a basis for calculation, and assuming that all who are eligible will retire at once, we find that the expenditure on account of annuities during the first year would equal $1,830,000 ($610×3,000=$1,830,000).

It is simply $610, the average annuity, multiplied by the number who will retire from the service, 3,000. He continues:

> In 1916 the average salary for all employees in what is called the retirement group was $1,138; it is probable that the average in the District of Columbia was somewhat higher. We will assume that the average now of those eligible for retirement in the District of Columbia is $1,260.

I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to this, because it is pertinent to the inquiry he made. He says:

> We will assume that the average now of those eligible for retirement in the District of Columbia is $1,260.

The average salary now, as salaries go now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not quite understand what the Senator means when he speaks of those in the District of Columbia. Does he mean all employees, both of the General Government and of the District?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; those in the classified civil service in the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, connected with the General Government?

Mr. STERLING. The General Government. Mr. Beach continues:

On this basis the aggregate salaries of the 3,000 employees 65 years of age and over would amount to $3,780,000 ($1,260×3,000=$3,780,000). Should there be no replacement of the retired employees there would be a clear saving to the Government of $1,950,000 during the first year, which amount represents the difference between the aggregate compensation and the aggregate annuities for 3,000 employees.

I think the Senator from Ohio will see that that is a mere matter of computation. That is on the assumption that there will be no replacements. Continuing reading:

On the question of probable replacement, or filling of vacancies caused by retirement of superannuated employees, there is no reliable data. Any statement on this subject must therefore be purely speculative. The Acting Commissioner of Pensions at a hearing before the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, held on June 19, 1919, stated in substance that not more than one-third of the vacancies caused by retirement of superannuates in the Bureau of Pensions need be filled.

His testimony before the Senate committee was substantially to the same effect.

Representative LEHLBACH, chairman of this committee, made the statement in a recent public address that, in his opinion, the replacements would not exceed 20 per cent of the number retired. A conservative estimate indicates that perhaps there would be a 25 per cent replacement, and in this event the number of new entrants would be 750—

Twenty-five per cent of the 3,000 retired.

Allowing that the new entrants will receive the same average salary as that paid the retired employees, then the expenditure on this account will amount to $945,000—

Seven hundred and fifty employees at an average salary of $1,260 will amount to $945,000—

still leaving a net saving to the Government during the first year amounting to $1,462,500—

here in the District of Columbia, Mr. President; and I maintain that throughout the country at large there will be as great, if not a greater, saving proportionately to the Government by reason of this retirement bill if it becomes a law.

So, Mr. President, I think that answers the question suggested by the Senator from Ohio, namely, in regard to the cost of replacements of those who have been retired and are receiving annuities.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course, there can be no difference of opinion between the Senator and myself if we assume the different elements in the proposition to be as stated. If we assume that there are a given number of superannuates and if we assume that they are all retired, we can understand what the amount of the saving on their salary is going to be. Again, if we assume that it is not necessary to have anybody to take their places, then, of course, the conclusion of the actuary is correct. But, on the other hand, if it is necessary to replace some of these men, then the calculations are not as reliable as we might hope. I recognize the fact, of course, that in any estimate of this kind we are somewhat at sea because we can not arrive at a mathematical certainty.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. The Senator realizes, too, that we must assume some things. We have not, and in the nature of things we can not have, reliable and exact data in regard to how many will retire. We can not have reliable and exact data as to how many replacements will be required. Probably in the Pension Bureau, considering that it is peculiarly an old soldiers' bureau, there are a few more than the average number of aged employees who have reached and passed the retiring age as fixed by this bill. That is natural. But I think the estimate made by Mr. Beach as to the number who would retire in the District of Columbia, namely, 3,000 the first year, is a fair and a conservative estimate from the best data obtainable on the question.

We are not assuming, as the last remark of the Senator from Ohio might seem to indicate, that no replacements would be required. We are assuming, for the purposes of this argument, in regard to replacements, that at least 25 per cent of the replacements will be had and that it will vary somewhat in different sections of the country.

Just a word or two further in regard to the statement of Mr. Beach, which is appended to the report of the committee. He follows the contributions and the expenditures of the Government under this system throughout for a period of 10 years, and during the course of the statement we find that he allows for refunds to an increasing number of employees because of their separation from the service. Thus in the fifth year he allows for refunds to 20,000 employees separated from the service, making a total of $1,372,500.

The annuities from 10,400 annuitants, at $610 each, will in the fifth year amount to $6,344,000, a total of $7,716,500.

But, Mr. President, there was paid in in contributions that year $8,535,000, so with the surplus left over from the preceding year, amounting to $12,119,000, we have all told $20,654,000.

Deducting the total expenditures of $7,716,500 from that, we would have a surplus in the fifth year, if this bill should go into effect, of $12,937,500. Without taking up in detail all these years, let me just go to the tenth year, the last year in the statement. In the tenth year the available surplus left over, after paying out annuities and after paying out refunds for 20,000 employees, will be $6,192,500.

Mr. President, it is estimated that the surplus will gradually diminish until the Government itself will be paying something in addition to the contributions of the employees, and that the Government contributions after a period of 8 or 10 years under the operation of the bill will gradually increase until the Government is paying about five-eighths of the amount of the annuity and the employees contributing about three-eighths. It is estimated that after a little further lapse of time and when conditions are stabilized in the service and in the taking into the service of new entrants, and so forth, that it will amount to what is termed a half-and-half proposition, when the Government will be paying 50 per cent and the employees 50 per cent of the amount that goes to make up the annuity.

Mr. POMERENE. I am afraid I did not grasp the first part of the Senator's statement with regard to the 50-50 plan. Do I understand the Senator's position is that ultimately under this scheme the Government will be paying one-half of these annuities and the employees the other half?

Mr. STERLING. That is the statement, I will say to the Senator, or the estimate based on the best information I can get.

Mr. POMERENE. An estimate made by whom?

Mr. STERLING. An estimate made by Mr. Beach, and I will say, I think, according to an estimate made by Mr. McCoy, whom the Senator will remember as an expert and actuary of the Treasury Department, who was present here during the discussions on the revenue bills, affording information to the Committee on Finance, and who was of great aid to the committee and, of course, to the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator further if the actuaries furnished any statement giving the figures so that we can have them examined?

Mr. STERLING. They have not. I have a statement of Mr. McCoy, and I want to examine that a little further myself before taking it up and discussing it; but I think that is the conclusion to be derived from the figures he makes and the estimate he submits. If the Senator will pardon me, it is the estimate of Mr. John S. Beach that after 20 or 25 years it will then be a half-and-half proposition between the Government and the employees.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator this further question? In the report which he has filed he gives estimates of the expense of the system and the so-called surplus for a period of 10 years. Was this calculation continued any further than the 10-year period?

Mr. STERLING. I think not by Mr. Beach. I will not be sure as to that, but if the Senator will permit me I think some calculation or estimate was made by Mr. Beach or he would not have made the statement that after that period it would be a 50-50 proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall go into that matter somewhat later.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, a few words further as to the cost——

Mr. POMERENE. Would it interrupt the Senator if I asked another question about a matter he spoke of a moment ago?

Mr. STERLING. Not at all.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has referred to the various systems of retirement which prevail in several countries, and he made special reference to the Canadian system. My information is that the Canadian Government deducts 5 per cent from the salaries. Am I right about that?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been so informed this afternoon by a student of the subject, who is very familiar with it.

Mr. STERLING. However, I will look that matter up a little further.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator has that information I shall be glad to get it. Of course, he and I are both interested in being accurate about it.

Mr. STERLING. I think I have it at my office. I am quite satisfied from the statements I have seen as to the Canadian law and its application that it does not apply to all civil-service employees of the Canadian Government, even if there is any class of employees to which it does apply.

Mr. POMERENE. It is true, is it not, that in France the deduction is 5 per cent?

Mr. STERLING. There is some deduction in France, as I have discovered. I will refer to that a little later.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the statement of one of the witnesses whom the Senator had before his committee was to the effect that it was a deduction of 5 per cent.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, we are asked to think of this in relation to the cost to the Government, the immediate outlay to the Government in dollars and cents. We do not think and I might say that the average citizen, perhaps, would not think of the saving to the Government in increased efficiency on the part of the employees and increased economy in the Government service.

I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. McCoy, and I wish to quote just briefly from the letter. He has had under examination the pending bill, and has stated that according to his estimate while the plan will eventually cost the Government some $9,000,000 a year—not now, but eventually—it is very evident that the efficiency of the service will be increased at least 5 per cent, which is equivalent to more than $18,000,000 a year.

It is not difficult to understand why the efficiency should be increased at least 5 per cent. I think Mr. McCoy is altogether too modest in that estimate of 5 per cent increased efficiency. But if you take 300,000 employees, drawing $1,200 a year, and multiply the 300,000 by the $1,200, and then find 5 per cent of the product, you will have the $18,000,000 a year as the saving to the Government on account of the increased efficiency under the operation of the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask a further question? If my questions are disturbing the Senator or he cares to go on to something else, I hope he will be kind enough to say so, and I will desist.

Mr. STERLING. Not at all. If I can answer the Senator's questions, I am glad to do so. The Senator may ask questions that I can not answer, but he will not interrupt me at all by asking questions.

Mr. POMERENE. The question I desire to ask is this: The Senator has just stated that Mr. McCoy suggested that the cost to the Government after a while would be $9,000,000 a year. I am simply giving the round numbers, but that is his statement. I find at the conclusion of the report which was filed by the distinguished chairman of the committee that the total disbursements annually will be $22,670,000, and that the Government's proportion is 62.3 per cent and the employees' contribution 37.7 per cent.

Assuming that the figures in the report which the committee have filed through their chairman are correct, then the total disbursements annually or cost, as I understand it, to be paid by the Government would be 62.3 per cent of $22,670,000, or approximately $15,000,000. I have not calculated it in my own head, but those are figures which would seem to indicate a discrepancy between these two experts of probably 50 per cent.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think that Mr. Beach meant by the $22,670,000 the disbursements of the Government at the end of 10 years or during the tenth year. Mr. Beach also figures upon the theory that there are contributions. These are disbursements by the Government, and the disbursements include the contributions that have been made by the employees.

Mr. POMERENE. I so understood. I do not think the Senator has grasped my statement. The report indicates that the total disbursements annually are $22,670,000. The last line gives the Government's contribution as 62.3 per cent. The next to the last line in the report gives the employees' contribution as 37.7 per cent. I take it that those figures refer to the percentage of the total disbursements annually of $22,670,000.

Mr. STERLING. No; I hardly think they bear that construction, or at least were not meant to bear that construction.

I was quoting from Mr. McCoy in regard to the saving to the Government on account of increased efficiency and that if we saved 5 per cent it would amount to $18,000,000 a year, the cost ultimately to the Government being $9,000,000, but the saving being $18,000,000 a year.

I have here another statement from Mr. McCoy. It is a table showing the effect of retirement at 75 years of age as compared with retirement at 65 years of age.

He gives the cost to the Government of retiring at 75 years of age instead of 65 years of age. He takes, for instance, an employee 100 per cent efficient between 65 and 75 years of age and shows that in such a case there will be a saving to the Government, as of course there will be; but in the case of an employee 75 per cent efficient there will be a loss on account of the continued services of such an employee of $330.57; if he is 50 per cent efficient, there will be a loss on account of that one employee in 10 years of $3,932.40; if he is 25 per cent efficient only, there will be a loss to the Government during the 10 years from the services of that one man of $7,534.23; if he is not efficient at all, the loss on account of retaining that man in the service will be $11,136.06. We get here, I think, a reasonably graphic description of the losses to the Government under the present system. These figures are arrived at by taking the pay that he would receive and putting it at compound interest at 4 per cent for the 10 years and by taking also the contributions that he would make during that time, which in 10 years at $30 a year would amount to $300. The sum of the annual contributions at compound interest deducted from the amount paid by the Government in salaries with compound interest leaves a net loss to the Government on account of that one wholly inefficient employee of $11,136.06 for the 10 years; and so on in other cases in proportion to the degree of inefficiency.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I must say that I have full faith and confidence in this bill and in the principles upon which the bill is based. I think it but just and equitable that the Government should contribute a proportion of the sum that goes to make the annuity which the employee shall receive for life after he has retired from the service. Take the salaries as they have been, and even as they are now, and it is a hardship to require the employees to contribute out of their salary all that goes to make up an annuity. The Government will save its millions a year under the plan proposed, and in contributing a part—a little more than half—of that which goes to make up the annuity it is but doing pure and simple justice to the employees and to those who shall have retired from the service.

This bill is the result of years of study and consideration on the part of the civil-service employees. A committee composed of 30 men have been sitting in Washington. They have had this matter under consideration for two and a half years last past; they represent every branch of the civil service, wherever situated in the United States, and they are united to a man in favor of this bill. There were those originally who stood for the straight pension plan and for years objected to any plan wholly or partially contributory; but at last they said: "For the sake of this cause, for the sake of the civil service, for the sake of our fellow employees, we make these concessions and agree that, whatever our salaries may be, we will contribute 2½ per cent annually for the purpose of raising this fund upon which the aged men and women in our service may retire."

As I close I wish to present here these petitions. Here is one with 2,086 signatures. I send it to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the petition itself. Some other petitions I have to which I think some thousands of names have been signed, but the petition itself in each instance is the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

To the Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Legislation to retire the civil-service employees of the United States Government is now pending before Congress. The bill is commonly known as the Lehlbach-Sterling bill. Its official title in the Senate is S. 1699, and in the House H. R. 3149. The United States Government is far behind other countries in caring for its superannuated employees. Private business in many instances has inaugurated retirement measures. Legislation now pending seems to be a wise solution of the problem of superannuation which has become an expensive burden in the Government service. Good business judgment favors the enactment of the Lehlbach-Sterling bill. The employees are showing a willingness to help the Government in this matter by consenting to contribute 2½ per cent of their salaries. The provisions of the bill as to age and years of service are founded upon actuarial conclusions that come from years of experience.

We, the undersigned citizens of ———, hereby urgently request your favorable consideration of this legislation, and respectfully ask that you use your efforts to secure its passage at the earliest possible date.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD following my remarks the table, omitting the pencil marks which I myself have made, prepared by Mr. McCoy, showing the effect of retirement at 75 years of age as compared with retirement at 65 years of age, and also for the RECORD the letter from which I quoted a while ago, written by Mr. Beach to Dr. Mosher, of the Reclassification Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 30, 1923.

Senator THOMAS STERLING,
United States Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your request of to-day as to the cost to the Government of delaying retirements 10 years, I have worked out the attached table. This shows that in case of 100 per cent efficiency the Government would gain largely by such delay, but when efficiency falls below about 80 per cent, there would be a gain to the Government through early retirement.

I have worked this out on the basis of a single employee with a $1,200 salary. The total gain or loss would be this multiplied by the number the retirement of whom is delayed.

Respectfully,

Jos. S. McCoy,
Government Actuary.

"JANUARY 20, 1920.

"To: Dr. W. E. Mosher.

"From: John S. Beach.

"Subject: Retirement of superannuated and disabled Government employees in the District of Columbia.

"In response to your request for a statement as to the effect of the passage of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill upon the executive civil service in the District of Columbia, together with an estimate of the savings to the Government immediately following the enactment of such law, I beg leave to submit the following:

"It must be evident that because of the abnormal conditions which have existed in the civil service since the declaration of war with Germany on April 6, 1917, it will be exceedingly difficult to estimate the effect and cost of a retirement system as applied to present conditions. We must therefore take conditions as they existed prior to the war as a basis on which to formulate such estimates.

"Census bulletin 94, published in 1908, shows that there were 25,351 employees in the executive civil service in the District of Columbia on July 1, 1907; this number did not include mechanics and laborers in the navy yard. Of the 25,351 employees in the service at that time 1,852, or 7.3 per cent, were 65 years of age or over.

"By July 1, 1916, the number of employees in the permanent establishments in the District of Columbia had increased to 33,511, which number also did not include the employees in the navy yard. A few other employees were likewise excluded from the total number reported. It is safe to assume that the ratio of those 65 years of age and over was maintained up until that time; if so, then the number 65 years of age and over on July 1, 1916, would have been 2,446.

"From July 1, 1916, until the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, the civil employees increased in numbers by leaps and bounds; since the signing of the armistice there has been a material reduction in force, and it is estimated that when the service becomes reasonably stabilized, in the course of four or five years, the number in the permanent service in the District of Columbia will approximate about 60,000 employees.

"It is a well-known fact that the employees who have come into the service during recent years are for the most part young persons, and it is reasonable to assume that those who may be retained will likewise be young and consequently will not be eligible for retirement for years to come. Reasoning along this line, we must arrive at the conclusion that the actual number of employees in the service at the present time who are 65 years of age and over does not greatly exceed the number at the outbreak of the war.

"On this point, however, we will have conclusive data when our punch cards have been tabulated for age distribution; until that time we must deal with estimates only.

"For the present let us assume that there are 3,000 employees in the civil service in the District of Columbia who are 65 years of age and over, and who are consequently eligible for retirement under the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill. The scale of annuities provided in this bill ranges from a maximum of $720 to a minimum of $180 per annum. It has been carefully estimated that the average annuity at first will be about $610 per annum and that this average will gradually increase until it reaches a maximum of $660.

"Taking the lowest average as a basis for calculation, and assuming that all who are eligible will retire at once, we find that the expenditure on account of annuities during the first year would equal $1,830,000 ($610×3,000=$1,830,000).

"In 1916 the average salary for all employees in what is called the retirement group was $1,138; it is probable that the average in the District of Columbia was somewhat higher. We will assume that the average now of those eligible for retirement in the District of Columbia is $1,260. On this basis the aggregate salaries of the 3,000 employees 65 years of age and over would amount to $3,780,000 ($1,260×3,000=$3,780,000). Should there be no replacement of the retired employees, there would be a clear saving to the Government of $1,950,000 during the first year, which amount represents the difference between the aggregate compensation and the aggregate annuities for 3,000 employees.

"On the question of probable replacement or filling of vacancies caused by retirement of superannuated employees there is no reliable data. Any statement on this subject must therefore be purely speculative. The Acting Commissioner of Pensions, at a hearing before the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service held on June 19, 1919, stated in substance that not more than one-third of the vacancies caused by retirement of superannuates in the Bureau of Pensions need be filled. Representative LEHLBACH, chairman of this committee, made the statement in a recent public address that in his opinion the replacements would not exceed 20 per cent of the number retired. A conservative estimate indicates that perhaps there would be a 25 per cent replacement, and in this event the number of new entrants would be 750.

"Allowing that the new entrants will receive the same average salary as that paid the retired employees, then the expenditure on this account will amount to $945,000, still leaving a net saving to the Government during the first year amounting to $1,462,500.

"Another factor which must be taken into consideration when estimating the effect upon the service following the enactment of a retirement law is the question as to the number of employees who are eligible for retirement but will remain in the service beyond retirement age. It will be recalled that the Sterling-Lehlbach bill contains a provision for retention in the service of efficient employees for limited periods beyond the retirement age. (See sec. 6, S. 1699 and H. R. 3149, present Congress.) Such provision is generally indorsed by all present-day students of the retirement question.

"On this phase of the question we are confronted not only with absolute lack of data, but also with so many possible contingencies arising out of variable conditions surrounding the service and the individual employee as to render even an approximation almost impossible. Testimony presented before the committees in Congress indicates that there are many employees in the Government service 65 years of age and over who are still efficient and who should be retained in the service; yet few have estimated the percentage of those eligible for retirement who will still be retained beyond the retirement age. The Acting Commissioner of Pensions estimated that between 50 and 60 per cent of those in the Bureau of Pensions eligible for retirement would either elect or be compelled to retire. This is perhaps a fair index as to what would happen in the service as a whole.

"Another unknown quantity is the number of employees who may retire on account of disability before reaching the retirement age. (See section 5 of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill.) It is believed that the number retiring on this account will be negligible and consequently will have but slight effect upon the aggregate cost of the system at the outset. Of course, there will be an increasing cost on this account year by year until a maximum is reached.

"A concrete example of the effect of the enactment of a retirement law is afforded by using certain statistics compiled as of June 1, 1919, concerning employees in the Bureau of Pensions who were 65 years of age and over on that date, as follows:

Number 65 years of age and over	295
Estimated number who would retire	150
Average salary	$1,353.66
Aggregate salaries (150)	$203,049.00
Aggregate annuities (150)	$91,500.00
Amount for new appointees (50)	$63,000.00
Net savings to Government	$48,549.00

"It is generally believed, however, that under present conditions in the Pension Bureau there would be few, if any, replacements. To summarize the foregoing we shall probably arrive at the following conclusions:

"That there are 3,000 employees in the executive civil service in the District of Columbia 65 years of age and over; that of this number about 60 per cent, or 1,800, will elect or will be compelled to retire following the enactment of a retirement law such as contemplated by the Sterling-Lehlbach bill; that there will be a replacement equaling 25 per cent of the number retired, and that the immediate saving to the Government will be about $877,500.

"It is not deemed necessary at this time to estimate the ultimate cost of a retirement system beyond making the general statement that as contemplated by the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill the contributions by the employees of 2½ per cent of their salaries will provide a fund sufficient to pay all annuities during the first 8 or 10 years. Aside from this question, however, we should take into consideration the actual and immediate saving to the Government as herein outlined. That there will be a real saving both in money value and in an increased efficiency is beyond dispute. This saving will be manifested by replacing old worn-out employees by a lesser number of young, energetic employees, and also by increasing the output of those who remain in the service.

"And, finally, it must be emphasized that until such time as the information on the questionnaire in respect to age periods is tabulated we must accept the conclusions herein reached as estimates only. At the same time it is respectfully submitted that these estimates have been based upon certain reliable data collected some years ago, and upon the testimony and experience of those who have made a more recent study of the retirement question, present conditions in the service, and the effect of the passage of a retirement law upon the service."

Mr. STERLING. I think, Mr. President, that is all I have to say at the present time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to give notice of a substitute which I will present at the proper time. I understand, of course, that the committee will perfect its amendments. The amendment I propose is in the nature of a substitute. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 6, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 5, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Let Thy spirit, O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, possess our souls, to open our spiritual eyes to the eternal values, our spiritual ears to the insistent calls to duty, that with clear vision and high resolves we may move forward, with firm and steadfast steps, to greater achievements for ourselves as individuals and to the betterment of State and Nation. To the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Clerk, in the reading of the Journal, to say that the amendment to the deficiency bill, on which a separate vote was asked, was disagreed to. That is not correct. The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Journal Clerk that it was agreed to. Is there objection to the approval of the Journal?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the pending deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the deficiency bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last night the previous question was ordered on the deficiency bill, H. R. 12046. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] demanded the reading of the engrossed bill. Does the gentleman still desire the reading of the engrossed bill?

Mr. WINGO. I do, with the greatest of insistence.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill.

The engrossed bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ayres	Dunbar	Knutson	Sanford
Bacharach	Echols	Kreider	Saunders, Va.
Bland, Mo.	Ellsworth	Linthicum	Scott
Bland, Va.	Elston	Luhring	Scully
Booher	Ferris	McArthur	Sears
Bowers	Focht	McKinley	Sells
Browne	Ganly	Mann, S. C.	Sims
Burke	Garrett	Moon	Sinclair
Campbell, Kans.	Goldfogle	Moores, Ind.	Sinnott
Campbell, Pa.	Goodall	Morgan	Smith, N. Y.
Caraway	Gould	Nichols, Mich.	Snyder
Carew	Graham, Pa.	Nolan	Steele
Casey	Hamill	Ogden	Stoll
Clark, Fla.	Hamilton	Parker	Sullivan
Cleary	Hastings	Pell	Taylor, Tenn.
Copley	Hawley	Porter	Timberlake
Costello	Hill	Rainey, Ala.	Towner
Cullen	Houghton	Rainey, H. T.	Voigt
Curry, Calif.	Howard	Riordan	Ward
Dempsey	Johnston, N. Y.	Robinson, N. C.	Whaley
Dewalt	Jones, Pa.	Romjue	Yates
Donovan	Kennedy, Iowa	Rowan
Dooling	Kinkaid	Sanders, La.

The SPEAKER. On this vote 338 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with certain instructions, which I ask the Clerk to report, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be recognized to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit the bill with instructions. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TINKHAM. In its present form I am.

Mr. BLANTON. I am unequivocally opposed to it, without any qualifications.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts says he is opposed to the bill in its present form. The Chair thinks that is unequivocal.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask whether or not the gentleman from Massachusetts qualifies?

The SPEAKER. He does. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BLANTON. If he had not qualified, I was going to offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee, offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINKHAM moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to that committee to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $1,000,000."

Mr. TINKHAM. On that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order——

Mr. GOOD. I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not germane to the purpose of the bill and that it is not a deficiency.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifty-five Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken.

Mr. TINKHAM. I demand tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is too late. The gentleman can ask tellers on the vote.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair has counted now 216 Members and there are still many more to be counted. A quorum is present. The noes have it.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Pending that I would like to see if we can not agree on the other side in regard to the length of general debate.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. We have requests on this side for about five hours.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me that that would require too much time. We would like to get through with the general debate to-day.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I want to agree on a certain number of hours of debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman think he needs five hours?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we ought to conclude the general debate to-day. The sentiment seems to be that debate should close to-day. If it is agreeable, the hours for general debate might be agreed to, and if necessary we can run that much later this evening.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. The gentleman will remember that we discussed this matter yesterday, and we thought then that debate would begin at 12 o'clock. We have now lost over an hour, and I think it should be extended to give us eight hours of debate, in any event.

Mr. HAUGEN. If it is to be consumed to-day, very well. Four hours to a side.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Four hours to a side would be agreeable, but I hardly think it is fair to limit it to the day, because about 5.30 o'clock we will adjourn.

Mr. HAUGEN. The general sentiment seems to be that we should not go beyond to-day. Eight hours would bring us up to 9 o'clock.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. That was the understanding yesterday, but the gentleman thought that he would begin general debate at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest, then, that the general debate close at 1 o'clock to-morrow. That will give us the full day.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. This is a very important measure and the gentleman knows that we will probably take up the hour to-morrow in calling the roll.

Mr. HAUGEN. It would be agreeable to me to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RUBEY. We might just as well give a little time for general debate. Let us have four hours on a side, and we will close the general debate to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. RUBEY. I think that is the wise thing to do, in view of the importance of the bill that is before us and the interest that the Members of the House take in this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest that we might consume one hour to-morrow in general debate.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. I would suggest to the gentleman in this connection that if he will give more time to general debate it would facilitate the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. There are gentlemen on our side who desire to discuss certain specific items in the bill in which they are interested, and if they have the opportunity to discuss them under general debate they would have a better chance to express their views and will eliminate further discussion under the five-minute rule. We will get along faster in that way. In view of the importance of the bill and that all of the country from north to south and east to west is interested in the bill more than in any other bill, perhaps, that will come before the House, I think full debate ought to be allowed.

Mr. HAUGEN. As the gentleman knows, general debate is not generally confined to the bill. The debate on the bill will be under the five-minute rule. I want to be as liberal as possible, but the policy seems to be that not more than one day should be devoted to general debate on any one bill.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition, but we will have less than a day.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we will expedite matters by simply agreeing to consume the whole day with general debate and one hour to-morrow, and if we could go to 9 o'clock to-night we will have eight hours to-day and one hour to-morrow; and I believe that Members will be willing to stay this evening, so that all will be accommodated.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee that under the peculiar circumstances which obtain in the Nation this bill is of more interest to the average Member of the House than any bill that will come before it for some time. The difficulty is that with the restriction which the gentleman desires general debate will be consumed almost exclusively by the members of the committee on the two sides of the House. Those of us who are not fortunate enough to be members of this great committee feel that time ought to be given to us in order that some suggestions which we think might be made for the benefit of the House and the country could be made in general debate, in a connected sort of way, instead of limiting us to the shot-to-pieces method observed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the general practice the merits of the bill are not generally discussed in general debate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There ought to be some agreement, some understanding, that this general debate shall be limited to the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, I do not think so, because that would be a departure from the rules of the House. In yielding time I never ask a Member what he is going to discuss. That is the practice generally observed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I do not insist on it; I offered the suggestion and the gentleman seems not to agree to it.

Mr. HAUGEN. In discussing the merits and demerits of the bill, may we not discuss them under the five-minute rule?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I shall insist on having four hours for general debate on this side.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is impossible to give it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what urgent reason is there that general debate on this bill should be disposed of by 1 o'clock to-morrow as suggested by the gentleman? Is there some prearranged program?

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the policy is not to grant more than one day's general debate on any appropriation bill. I think as much time should be given to this bill as any other bill, and I believe the Members of the House are as much interested in it as any other bill, if not more so. I agree to a full day and have suggested that limitation of time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will agree with me, in view of the present situation this is probably the most important bill Congress is going to have to pass.

Mr. HAUGEN. And in view of its importance I am sure Members will stay here this evening and give everybody an opportunity to be heard. I will stay here until 9 or 10 o'clock or whatever hour is suggested.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The ranking member of the committee on this side on this bill has suggested to the chairman that he will absolutely require four hours on his side to take care of the requests for legitimate debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the plan suggested he may have four hours or more. It is only a question of remaining here this evening.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I merely suggest that we might make more headway if we make that agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman suggests six hours, if that is more agreeable than as suggested, one hour to-morrow——

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Eight hours, and that was my suggestion to the gentleman heretofore.

Mr. HAUGEN. Six hours?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. And I agreed to it; and I can not get along with less than four hours on this side.

Mr. HAUGEN. And I agreed to give all day to-day and one hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his request?

Mr. RUBEY. Make it eight hours and let us go ahead.

Mr. HAUGEN. My suggestion was that we take one day for general debate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HAUGEN. We can set the time by staying this evening.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. But the committee will not stay, and the gentleman knows it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order, which stops further debate. Will the gentleman from Iowa state his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the day be consumed in general debate and one hour to-morrow, to close at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RUBEY. I object.

Mr. HAUGEN. I renew my request, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate be—well, put it at six hours.

Mr. RUBEY. If the gentleman will make it seven hours, we might agree.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, seven hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to seven hours——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How to be controlled?

Mr. HAUGEN. Half the time by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to seven hours, half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia and half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret to have to suggest an objection——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. I think general debate ought not to go——

Mr. BLANTON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the general debate be divided, half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and half by the gentleman from Georgia. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. As much time as he may need.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I appreciate the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in allowing me such time as I may desire, and I wish first of all to assure you that I am not going to abuse that courtesy. It seems to me that it behooves us to expedite business here under all the circumstances in which we find ourselves as rapidly as we can and do so efficiently, so I shall only take a few minutes of your time. I believe we appreciate the imperative importance of economy at this crucial time, and while it will not be possible for this committee to show as large a percentage of reductions as will be shown by committees whose appropriations necessarily were greatly enlarged because of war conditions, yet at the same time I believe our committee has done its work well, and that we have reduced at every point where reductions were possible, with one exception, to which I hope to call your attention a little later. The bill carries $30,340,034, which is $3,359,727 below last year, $7,132,823 below the estimates of the department, and $11,558,204 below the estimates of the bureaus. Personally I had hoped that we might show a greater reduction this year than we have been able to do. Owing to the straitened condition of the Federal Treasury and the overtax-burdened condition of the country, it is certainly necessary that we reduce at every place where reduction is possible. But we should not forget the fact that this is an agricultural Nation and that agriculture is our chief business. The whole prosperity and activity of the Nation rests upon agriculture as a foundation. Agriculture represents the very life and support of this Nation itself. The appropriations that are made for this department are quite permanent in their character and scope, because the great work of production goes on year after year and can not stand retrenchment anywhere along the line. The committees whose appropriations were multiplied manyfold of necessity during the war can, of course, now, as we find ourselves gradually coming back to the normal basis, show a great percentage of reduction in their appropriations, and rightly so. But agriculture can not be reduced in the same proportion. The important bureaus, such as Farm Management, the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Chemistry, the Bureau of Crop Estimates, the Bureau of Entomology, the Biological Survey, the States Relations Service, Public Roads, and Bureau of Markets, are of such a nature that they all encourage production, and some of them assist in marketing. We appreciate the importance and necessity of these bureaus. Just at this time our country is being called upon as never before, except during the prosecution of the war itself, to produce in greater quantities. We must not only produce for ourselves, but we must produce for much of the rest of the world.

There is a scarcity of production which, to a large extent, is accountable for what we call the high cost of living. The only remedy we have for the high cost of living is increased production and the gradual contraction of the volume of currency. The world was engaged for four years in a systematic program of destruction of values. Production was necessarily greatly curtailed while consumption was greatly increased; and now, in order to overcome that condition which was forced upon us because of the war, it is necessary for us to encourage production to a larger degree than ever before. Therefore these important bureaus of the Department of Agriculture which had to do with the encouragement of healthy grain and plant and fruit seeds and production must be encouraged at this time.

There were diseases not before common to the crops of the country that crept in upon us during the war period unawares, and these new menaces must be met and must be driven out of our country and production must be encouraged in every way possible.

There is one place, however, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, where we can stand a further cut in this bill. I refer to page 29 and to the heading "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," beginning with line 24 on page 20 and extending through line 13 on page 32. I believe at the proper time a motion should be made to strike out this part of the bill, and I believe it should carry by all means.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I can not yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just wanted to get a little information.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I am sorry I can not yield, but I have just a few things here I desire to say, and there will be plenty of opportunity, I am sure, for others to discuss the question in their own time. Therefore the gentleman will please pardon me. I must decline to yield.

It is quite probable that the original purpose of this provision had for its object real good. But whatever good may have been intended and whatever good may have been accomplished in times past by this provision, in my judgment, does not obtain to any great degree at this time. Originally this provision was for the growth and encouragement and distribution of strange and uncommon and valuable seeds, and the impression went out to the country, whether directly or indirectly, to that effect, and for a number of years people had the impression that they were receiving seeds of an uncommon value. It is a fact now, as shown in the provisions of this bill, that these seeds are purchased in the open market and from parties who will give the best price. In other words, bids are submitted, and those who furnish the lowest bids get the business.

And it is a fact that in many portions of the country the seeds that go out to the people are of an inferior quality. They are not as good as those that they may buy of their local dealers. It is also a fact that in our day local seed companies in various portions of the country are operating and are in position to grow in their particular sections and climates better seeds than it is possible for this department to secure in the way that it does and send to these same communities. Many of the seeds that are sent out are not adapted to the climate and conditions in the section to which they go. Many of them do not germinate. And it has come to be a publicly recognized fact that these seeds, the large proportion of them that go out, are inferior, and people talk it publicly, and it is a discredit to the department and a discredit to the Congress which makes provision for carrying on this work.

Now, in my section of the country, at least, this act is regarded as an opportunity created by Congressmen themselves for the purpose of sending out little remembrances to the people for political purposes, and it has come to be looked upon in many sections of the country solely as political graft.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I can not yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not send them out just the same?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Even though there are some gentlemen who are opposed to this provision, who do send out seeds because they are allotted to them the same as to others, it is no argument in favor of the provision. I believe that the fact that these seeds are inferior and are generally considered to be so by the public, the fact that it incurs an expense of more than a quarter of a million dollars every year, makes it evident that this large expenditure is unnecessary, and that the same amount of money could be put to much better use along other lines.

In addition to the fact that this has come to be regarded as a sort of political graft, I want to call your attention to this further fact, that this practice encourages the spirit of paternalism on the part of the people of the country. I submit, gentlemen, that we have gone about far enough in encouraging the people in every section of the country to regard the Federal Government as something from which they can extract something. [Applause.] Where is the man in this House now who is not constantly receiving pleas, and inquiries, and petitions from men, and companies of men in every section of the country, asking that the Government do something especially for them? This spirit has been encouraged by just such procedure as the one in this provision.

The war workers who came down here during the war emergency and should now be let out of employment of the Federal Government because they are no longer needed are appealing to Congressmen from their particular districts to create places for them, so that they may still have their hand in the Federal Treasury. And I am sorry to say that a good many Congressmen are bending all the energies they can, in spite of the straitened condition of the Federal Treasury and in spite of the necessity for getting back to prewar condition and prewar economy, to exert what influence they can to hold the constituents of their community here on the public pay roll for work that is not necessary. Such pleas for special favor are the direct result of just such acts as these on the part of the Federal Government, concerning which I am now speaking. It encourages the spirit of paternalism and fosters requests for special favors from every quarter.

I suggest, if we are further to encourage this spirit of paternalism on the part of the people, we should do something worth while for them and accept the suggestion of a recent United States Senator, who advised that we send out upright pianos to the people. I had a letter from a man in my district not long ago who said he did not care for any of these seeds; they would not grow anyhow; but he had noticed in the public press a good many statements about the sheep and goats that were being grazed on the White House lawn, and he suggested that we provide some way to frank out lambs and kids to the people, because they were more valuable. Another man wrote me that he did not care to receive any seeds because they would not grow, but suggesting that if I would frank him a Ford car or a tractor he would be glad to use it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That request, I am sure, did not come from Texas, because we Texas men are able to raise our own kids down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe, in view of the fact that these seeds are inferior, in view of the further fact that the practice is regarded on the part of many of our constituents as pure political graft, and in view of the further fact that this practice encourages the spirit of paternalism on the part of the people, this is a needless waste of money and the practice should be stopped.

This Congress should dignify itself by striking out the provision, and I hope at the proper time that an amendment to strike out the provision will be offered, and I sincerely hope that the majority of this body will vote to eliminate this useless, wasteful practice which has brought this body into discredit in the minds of many of our constituents, and that we will save to the Federal Treasury this $239,000 which the committee now by a vote of 8 to 8 has left in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have no intention of using the full hour that has been so kindly yielded to me, but I do want to take advantage of this occasion to make a few general observations in reference to the great subject of agriculture.

In all the history of this Nation, when we have been making our laws under which our Government has been operated, one strange thing has happened. The importance of agriculture to the Nation's welfare has never been recognized as it should have been recognized. There probably was a very good reason for it in the early history of the country, in that our population at that time, the great preponderance of it, lived on the farm and produced practically everything they consumed. But as time came on and conditions changed the population began to gravitate toward the congested cities in the Nation, and at this time, instead of there being the productive capacity on the farm that there was in former years, less than one-third of our people live on the farm and in the small towns and villages of the Nation. More than two-thirds of our people have gone to these congested centers, and they are no longer producers of agricultural products.

During the war the importance of agriculture was accentuated. Before our country was involved in that conflict Germany came well-nigh winning the war by reason of the fact that she had kept food, and was keeping food, from the Allies, and after our country engaged in the war, then for the first time there came before the people of this Nation the important fact that the cities and consuming centers of our Nation were short of rations.

There is some reason for this, gentlemen. Why is it that our population is leaving the farm day after day? Why is it that the farm is no longer attractive to the farmer's son, and why is it that the farmer's daughter is leaving the farm? This is an important query that should address itself to your intelligence and to my intelligence as Members of this great lawmaking body. If Congress has been lax in its duty toward agriculture, we ought to wake up to that fact and we ought to right the wrong. [Applause.]

Strange to say, during all the history of our Nation, while we have prepared a financial system that took care of the commercial industries of the Nation, the manufacturers; while a system of banking has been established that cares for their needs and their credits, the whole Nation has overlooked the fact that for those upon whom others must depend for their food supply there was no financial system by which they could engage in the great business of farming, and only within the past few years did we awake to that condition, and through the Federal-reserve act, gentlemen representing the agricultural districts of the Nation being aroused as to the oversight, we insisted that farming is a great business, that it requires money, that it requires banking facilities, and there must be written into this law some provision that will take care of agriculture. And in that law we wrote a recognition of the fact that farmers' paper had a right to enter the banking circles, and we provided for the rediscount privilege of prime agricultural paper. [Applause.]

Now, my friends, I am talking in all seriousness, especially to the gentlemen here who represent the agricultural sections of this Nation, from whatever section you may come. Ah, if you will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you will find that surreptitiously the fight is on so to amend the Federal-reserve act as to destroy that feature of it that recognizes agriculture. I sound this note of warning to the American Congress and to the American people. Read, if you please, the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] a few days since, and you will not have to go any further to prove the statement that I have made that that fight is with us. And what does it mean if that fight should be won? My friends from the wheat belt, from the cotton belt, from the cattle belt, it means that financial power will again be centered in the East, in Wall Street, if you please. Grow your cattle if you will; grow your wheat if you will; grow your cotton if you will; but if you strike out of the Federal-bank act that provision which enables those products to be financed in the Federal-reserve banks under the rediscount privilege, you will have again the conditions that prevailed before the Federal reserve-bank act was passed, and Wall Street will name the price that you will get for your cattle, for your wheat, for your cotton. Are you willing for them to do it?

I sound that note of alarm. They have done it all these years. I know the conditions in my own country, a great cattle country. The State of Texas is the breeding ground for the feeding pens of the balance of the United States. There are 8,000,000 head of cattle in that State. It is also a great producer of cotton. It grows one-third of the entire cotton crop of the South. I have seen men, women, and children as they toiled from one end of the year to the other, producing this great crop, that went out to bless humanity and clothe the world. I have seen them bring in their cotton in the fall, having made it on a credit. The market had gone to the bad. They were not offered enough to pay the cost of production, to say nothing of the reasonable profit and the living wage to which they were entitled. They would go to their bankers, to whom they owed these obligations for the year's supplies, or to their merchants, and say, "The cotton market is so disastrous that if I sell the crop that my wife and children have helped me to make I can not pay my obligations. Won't you extend my credit? Let me hold it a while longer." That was the universal cry. The banker would say, "I can not do it." The merchant would say, "I can not do it." And why? Not that the banker was not interested in his people, not that the merchant was not interested in his customers, but these bankers and merchants were borrowing institutions, and the banks had rediscounted their paper in New York with their correspondents there at a fixed charge of 6½ per cent rediscount rate, and then 20 per cent kept within the vaults of the correspondent and never reaching the productive territory. New York had said to us, "You must take up this rediscount paper." They said that to the cattlemen, they said it to your wheat men, they said it to the cotton farmer. They held your obligations, and your banker was forced to respond and to drive the farmers' products onto the market—cotton, wheat, cattle, and everything that is produced on the farm. Why did the New Yorkers do this—this Wall Street financial crowd? They stood hand in glove with the great manufacturing interests of the country and forced these raw products out of the hands of the men who made them, at sacrifice prices. These products went through the manufacturing institutions, and the consumer of the manufactured goods did not know that the blood that went into the production of the raw material was not getting fair pay for the service it rendered to humanity. When the bill is offered, are you going to repeal that section of our financial law that does take care of agriculture and enables our farmers to obtain credit and to know that the work they do is recognized by our Government and that they have a financial system that will care for their needs?

Oh, my friends from the congested centers, you may think as I speak thus that I am speaking selfishly, representing a great agricultural district as I do; but I want to say to you that it is a broader question than that which relates to the farmers themselves. Why, you cry out at the high cost of living in the cities. There are gentlemen coming before our committees every day advocating all kinds of legislation that will enable them to buy the farmers' products at a price that will be satisfactory to these consumers in the congested centers.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. He refers to the Federal-reserve act?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And also to the farm-loan act?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Which I will discuss a little later.

Mr. CANNON. I have been busy about other things, and I will be glad if the gentleman during his speech will call attention to what the law is now and to the proposed changes and the effect thereof. I ask this in perfect good faith for information.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I am sure of that. The gentleman represents a great producing section, as well as myself. But as I have stated, gentlemen from Chicago, mayors of great cities in New Jersey and other congested centers, have constantly appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and called our attention to the high cost of living in those centers and asked us, among other things, to draft an embargo law prohibiting the shipment of these supplies to any other nation on earth, and all sorts of other wild ideas and fancies that they ask us to write into law so that the people in these large centers may live more cheaply. As far as I am concerned, I will not favor one of them. You are only now seeing in these centers what you will see more emphatically in the near future, when living conditions in the great industrial centers of the Nation and such and when such extravagant wages are paid to those who labor there that they withdraw from the farm and are leaving it by multiplied hundreds of thousands and are becoming consumers in your large centers.

Why is it? Ah, they have worked not 8 hours a day but 12 hours a day. They have produced year in and year out. They are tired of this labor when they can go to a congested center and draw greater compensation, work shorter hours, enjoy the picture shows and the bright lights of the city. Week by week and month by month and year by year you are drawing them from the farm. Yet you come with a remedy proposing an embargo on the farmers' products and price fixing on his products and all kinds of wild schemes, overlooking the fact that the farmer has been the one man who has slaved and worked and has met the obligations that have come to him as a citizen. Now you add to his burden and you are depopulating the farms of the Nation, and after a while—and that time is not so far distant—it will be a question of meat and bread for the people in these consuming centers. Add not to the burdens of the farmer. Detract not from his banking laws giving him a field of credit. If the congested centers are wise, instead of trying to do something to add to the burden of the farmer, they will look deeper and will say, "Let us make life on the farm more attractive, in order that the people may find their way back to the soil." [Applause.]

Another proposition: All through the history of our Government Congress had never seen its duty and never had provided a system of finance by which our people could become farm owners. What is the result? In my State and elsewhere the tenant class is growing so rapidly that it is a great problem with our people who is to till the soil. It remained for us in the same Congress in which we passed the Federal reserve-bank act also to look to agriculture and say to the farmers of this Nation, "We want you to become farm owners. We want to release you from the hands of the usurer. We want to provide a system which will give you time and a reasonable rate of interest, so that the young men of the country may have hope of owning their own roof and of tilling their own soil." With that understanding we passed the Federal farm-loan act. Time after time on this floor that law has been assaulted, especially by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. It has received assaults at the other end of the Capitol. It may be that amendments are necessary, inasmuch as it carries two systems—one the farmers' end, I must call it, and the other a joint-stock end. There seems to be a conflict in the actual operations of these two institutions, and some amendment is necessary probably to keep the joint-stock end of the institution from destroying the farmers' end of the institution.

I want to warn you now, however, that whatever amendment may be drafted, it ought to be drawn by the friends of the law, to see to it that the law is perfected and that credit may be extended, so that our people can own their farms. How was it under the old system? I believe I live in the richest county in the world, not excepting the black land in the district of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I moved to that county 27 years ago. The soil there is black and waxy, it is of unlimited depth, and there is no wear out to it. Yet when I cast my lot with the people of that county I found that from year to year as I visited the court-house doors, additional bulletin boards had to be erected from year to year on which to post notices of trustees' sales against men who had bought these farm lands to make a home for themselves and their children. Why was it? They were energetic men, they were good farmers, they were industrious, they had good business capacity, but they had gone up against the game that no man could win. The hand of the usurer had them by the throat, and the rate of interest they had to pay ranged from 12 to 15 per cent per annum, and the length of the loan was only about five years. Let a crop failure come, let sickness come, and the farmer failed, and the trustees' notices appeared. They were good men, they went out broken in spirit, they were cast down, they were paying into the hands of the usurer, and that usurious bunch would like to get back in control and destroy the Federal farm-loan act and force us back to the old conditions. Now, what have you? You have a system with a low rate of interest and a reasonable rate. You have a period of years, and if your crop failure comes or sickness comes, then the man who has purchased the land knows that within the period of 30 or 40 years he is going to be able to make good. They are buying homes in my country and they are buying homes in the whole Nation, and let me again sound a note of warning. You ought to encourage men to buy farms and keep them out of the congested centers, but if you cripple this law you are going to drive them away again. This is what I am appealing for, and I am not talking as a Democrat or as a Republican, but I am speaking as a true, loyal citizen who is to retire from Congress at the end of the present session and go back to private life, but I am telling what I know about the facts and history of this great industry. I sound this warning to you who will be here after I am gone.

I get sick and tired of the propaganda that reaches my desk from day to day, and I dare say that other Members of Congress have the same sort of thing to contend with. Already we have some sections of this country where the sentiment would overturn our Government.

They are in the majority. In some communities 80 per cent of the people are foreigners, with a very large percentage of men who can not speak the English language. They did not know what a government was where they came from and they do not know what a government is here. They do not know how to appreciate liberty that comes with our law. I have this conviction, however: This Government is not going to be overturned in my time and generation, but if conditions continue as they have continued for the past few years it may be overturned in the lifetime of my children. My father did his best to hand down to me a good Government, and our ancestors did for all of us. I want to be a good, loyal American citizen and do for those who come after us what our ancestors did for us. I want to leave the best Government on earth for my children and my children's children. [Applause.] Have the people go back to the soil, where in the heyday of the prosperity of our Nation they lived, and let them have a system of finance by which they can become owners of the soil and of their homes. There are not enough devils in hell to cause the people in an agricultural community owning their own farms to turn their backs on the Government that protects their firesides. [Applause.] It is a question for you gentlemen from the congested centers. I am afraid that you have been unwise; you have been too anxious to get rich quickly. This is a great country. It is a great productive country. The earth is filled with coal and oil and iron ore and lime rock and sulphur, and our forests with timber, though that is disappearing very rapidly. Our great resources make us a great country in spite of ourselves, and I believe in the development of such resources wherever they may be. I do not believe in their development, however, sufficiently to be willing to permit the onrushing hordes of anarchists and Bolshevists to come to our shores for the purpose of development so that they will ultimately destroy us. I do not believe in prosperity, if you may call it so, to such an extent that I am willing to throw down the bars at our ports so that that class may multiply here until they overwhelm us and destroy our Government. [Applause.] These are things that we may well think of.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. I have followed the gentleman's argument and I concur in what he has had to say, but does he not think that the whole proposition will fail unless the Federal Government gives to the producers of the country a comprehensive marketing system?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The gentleman has asked a question that I have thought of a great deal and have no doubt that other Members of Congress have thought of a great deal. That is the question of distribution from the farm to the consumer. The farmer is not getting rich, is he?

If he was, the farms would not be depopulated year after year, as the figures show they are. So the farmer is not getting rich, because if he was getting rich he would stay on the farm. A man stays by the thing that is making him rich. The consumers in the congested centers are crying out because they can not live because prices are too high. Are they paying too much for what they eat? The farmer we know is not getting too much. If they are paying too much for what they eat, where does the trouble lie? Take the milk situation. The farmer gets 8 cents a quart and the consumer pays from 24 to 28 cents a quart. Does the farmer get too much? No. If he was getting too much, there would be more people going into the dairy business, would there not?

The farmer in the wheat industry before the war got about 60, 70, or 80 cents, did he not? Was he getting too much? He quit the wheat business and went to something else. He was a sensible man, and when he found he was losing money he went to something else. Of course wheat is higher now, as everything else, but he was not getting too much. The consumer says he is paying too much. Where is your trouble? It is the intervening agencies. How many men handle milk from the producer on the farm to the consumer in the city? How many men handle wheat from the farm to the consumer in the city? How many men handle cotton between the producer on the farm and the consumer in the city?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. How many men handle cattle from the producer on the farm to the consumer of the city?

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the individual producer could place his commodity any more economically in the hands of the ultimate consumer if he undertook to make the distribution than it is done now? That is the question here.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not think that the individual producer can in the case of these various products. It is a physical impossibility for him to place them in the hands of the ultimate consumer, because we have there the great question of distribution that no man yet has been able to determine how it should be worked out. We all know that there are those who live between the producer and the consumer and profit where they should not profit, and who ought to be driven out of that sphere and put back to something useful that they might do. [Applause.] Now, Congress recognized that problem; it is recognized the world over; and a few years back we gave an appropriation of $50,000, out of which grew the Bureau of Markets. Their appropriation has been multiplied until it is between two and three million dollars, and they have got experts working on this distribution problem. They are suggesting their ideas, they are trying out experiments, and in many cases they have done wonderful work.

In other cases their labors have been thrown away, as I knew they would be thrown away. It is a matter of demonstration, it is a matter of carrying out, it is a matter of seeking to find the relief, and I am willing as a Member of this Congress, and I shall be willing when I retire to private life as a private citizen, to stand my part of the taxation and waste enough money, if necessary, to have our Government work out a system of distribution that will enable the producer to get a fair and just price for his labors and at the same time hand those products down to the consumer at fair and equitable prices. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOWAY. If the gentleman will yield, answering the question of the gentleman from Chicago, I will ask the gentleman who now occupies the floor if he does not recall the testimony before the committee was that by the telegraphic system of tolls to find markets for the producers in this country that the producer of potatoes in Maine got more for his potatoes and if there was not an anomaly within an anomaly shown in that they were laid down on the consumer's table at a less price due solely to the fact that the unnecessary middleman was cut out?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That is true in a great many industries. In some things the Bureau of Markets has not succeeded as well as I had hoped. I referred to it in the committee as I do now. I stated in the committee as I state to you that some of the efforts were going to be a failure, that you are not wise enough to work them all out. I am going to be a producer after I leave Congress, and I am willing to waste enough money to help work out this most important problem. The stuff I shall produce will enter interstate commerce; much shall go to the other side of the seas. What this great Nation should do is to spend enough money to get intelligence enough if we can find it, and waste a part of the funds if necessary to help us make these demonstrations to see if we can not work out a system that will take care of the situation that confronts this country. We have got so much interest here. We have a diversified Nation. It is a great pity we had a Civil War, and it divided our people, and it took 50 years or more to get over the bad feeling that existed between the different sections. But this is the greatest Nation on earth. Take the State of my friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], a great wheat-producing State. He feeds my people, although we are coming right along on his heels and are producing wheat now. When I need an automobile way down in Texas I have to go to the State of my friend from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] to buy my automobile, and when I need on my farm in the springtime to buy new turning plows and new cultivators and new wagons, I have to look to the State of Uncle Joe to furnish the manufactured articles. When my county goes to building bridges and needs the steel and structural iron, we have to go to the great State of Pennsylvania to buy those products, and when we want citrus fruits and dried raisins we have to go and look to California, and when we need woolen clothes we have to go West and look to the sheep producers. On the other hand, you gentlemen in those sections I have mentioned, when your people need the overalls that the working men wear, the cheap clothing for your people, you have got to look to the broad fields of Texas and the South, which produce this cheap clothing material.

It is a great Nation with diversified interests, the greatest Nation on earth, the greatest manufacturing Nation on earth. We are now exporters, and the world looks to us to be fed, to be clothed, and to be financed. What a field is up to you Members of Congress and citizens of a great Nation; what a great opportunity is afforded to work together as one people and one Nation to make the best of the opportunities we now have. [Applause.]

Can you hurt the cotton industry in the South without affecting the iron industry in Pennsylvania? Oh, no. Can the iron industry in Pennsylvania suffer loss without its affecting Texas? Oh, no. Can the citrus-fruit crop fail in California without our being forced to do without it in Texas? Oh, no. Can we wear woolen clothes if a calamity should happen to the sheep growers of the country? Oh, no. We all contribute, and nature has fixed it that we shall contribute, to the sum total of the whole. And I am sick and tired in hearing now and then men on this floor raising criticism of this item or that item of appropriation because it happens to go to that section or this section or to this industry or that industry. We ought to take a broader view, as one great Nation and one great whole, of what is necessary to make it greater, and we, as Congress, are going to do it. If you destroy a cotton producer in the South, you destroy his purchasing power, and he can not buy the things he would like to have. He uses his old plows; he does not buy an automobile; and he quits riding in his buggy. And so it is with any industry. If you destroy an agricultural product, the producers are not purchasers any more from the manufacturing sections of the country. We ought to have a broad vision, to the effect that agriculture shall be prosperous and draw people back to the farm. Let the manufacturing sections of the country be prosperous and reach out after the world's trade. So far as I am concerned, I have never cast a vote in the 10 years I have been in Congress but that is in line with what I am stating now. And whenever in my committee there has been an appropriation to relieve some State of some pest, all I wanted to know was that it was an agricultural problem, a national problem, and I have voted to give every dollar that has been necessary to meet such problems as they arose from day to day. And I hope that that will be the spirit that will dominate our people in this Congress in dealing with this bill and the other bills that may follow. [Applause.]

Now, what do we do? Here is an Agricultural appropriation bill carrying about $30,000,000, and some boast has been made that we have cut it down a million or so. Agriculture? Agriculture? Only yesterday we had a rider to an appropriation bill asking for some $9,000,000 for some wharves and docks or something. While this bill carries about $30,000,000 plus under the title of an Agricultural appropriation bill, there are many things in it that do not relate to agriculture. You have millions of dollars appropriated for the Forest Service. That is not agriculture. It is simply put in by the wisdom of the people who drew that law under the administration of the Secretary of Agriculture. We have other millions of dollars in this bill for meat inspection and for the pure food and drug act. That is not agriculture. That is for the health of the people. And yet those are given in the sum total and are charged up to agriculture. I dare say if you go through these figures and take items appropriated to agriculture you will find less than $20,000,000 going directly to agriculture. Is that a record to be proud of? I am not proud of it, my friends.

I have shown you the defects on the farm, the trouble there, and I have shown you that we need encouragement. I have shown this congested section that it is a great problem for them to get their people back there. And instead of bragging about cutting down appropriations for agriculture, I am willing wherever it can be pointed out to me and wherever I can give a dollar that will aid in bringing agriculture back to its life to do so. Yet I am in favor of cutting down the expenses of this Government. My people are. I want to get on a business basis. I am against the propaganda for military training and universal service that seeks to take multiplied hundreds of millions of dollars out of the pockets of our people in order to create a warlike nation out of us. God knows we do not need it! We fought the greatest warlike nation on earth with boys that we took off the farms and from the blacksmiths' shops and the stores, and they defeated the choice troops of the Kaiser.

I want to spend money to develop the resources of my country, whether in agriculture or in manufacture or in whatever it may be, but I do not want to dissipate it in making trained soldiers out of American boys. I do not want any more war, but when we have a just war the American boys will rise up and win it, as they did this war and as they have every other war in which they ever fought. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I notice here in the recapitulation put in the RECORD yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] for this Bureau of Markets the gentleman is discussing on the floor, and which is a very important feature of this bill, that the committee reported a bill which decreased the estimates for this Bureau of Markets in the sum of $544,000. Can the gentleman tell us what argument was made before the committee for that enormous reduction of the estimates for that bureau?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. If I would try to sum up the argument, I presume it would be the same one that has been made before the committee before, to the effect that we have got to be economical and cut down the expenses of the Government. That is about all there is to it.

Now, gentlemen, as I stated, I do not think you ought to cut out an important item when we see, as I have tried my best to point out, the condition into which agriculture is getting. And I speak it from personal knowledge, and these gentlemen who sit before me know what I am saying is the truth from personal knowledge. I am surprised that these gentlemen from congested centers are so provincial in their thought. They do not know anything about the great subject of agriculture. They do not know anything about their dependence on these people out in the far West, in the Middle West, and in the South. I do not believe we ought to commence knifing here if we can add something to it that will aid agriculture and get people back onto the farms. I want to get these clerks out of these departments down here—these war clerks—just as fast as we can. When they finish up the work they ought to go home. [Applause.] It is best for them and best for this Government. I want to cut down the useless boards that grew up during the war, and some of which are still alive. Just as quick as they can wind up the war business, my people expect them to go home, and, as far as my vote is concerned, if I can find any appropriation to cut out that will send them home, I want to do it. I want to get this Government back on a peace basis just as quick as I can, and I do not want these gentlemen getting up here and suggesting these wild theories about the high cost of living, that some price fixer can come down on the farm and take the cotton and other products of the farm and fix the price on them. I do not want the price fixed on the wheat of my friend from Kansas. It has been a fruitful source of annoyance. Gentlemen who were here when we passed the food-control bill know that for an hour and a quarter I stood on the floor and tried to keep our Nation from embarking on that proposition. It is a false economy. I do not want any legislation that will interfere with the great law of supply and demand, whether it affects agriculture or whatever it affects. If I were a manufacturer, I would do like they do. I would keep my books. I would know my markets. I would buy my raw material. I would map out my program, and I would go and tell the other fellow what he had to pay me for my manufactured products.

That is what they do, do they not? That is business, is it not? They call that a good business system, and it is. But I am a farmer. I bet 12 months' work against the cotton crop or the corn crop or the wheat crop or the oat crop or the barley crop that I produce or the cattle crop or the hog crop. I bet that 12 months' work, working 12 hours or more per day. I am betting against the season. I do not know whether I am going to have a flood or not. I do not know whether I am going to have a drought or not. If God spares me from flood and drought, the devilish boll weevil is right at my heel, and also every oth insect known to agriculture. I bet on that, but I get by, and I make a good, bad, or indifferent crop.

Now, I live 5 miles in the country, and I drive into town with 5 bales of cotton. Am I like the manufacturer who produces farming utensils or clothing or who manufactures food supplies, and can name the price I am going to demand, being able to control my output or price it, knowing the expense incurred as a bookkeeping proposition? Oh, no.

I am telling you the history of agriculture now. I drive into my little town with these 5 bales of cotton. The local merchant comes out. Does he ask me what I will take for that cotton? No. Does he ask me what I will take for the box of eggs that I have put on top of that load of cotton? Does he ask me what I will take for the few dozens of chickens that I have piled up on top of that load of cotton? No. He does not do that. I can not say to him that I want 20 cents or 30 cents or 40 cents per pound for this cotton; that I want 75 cents a dozen for these eggs; or that I want 75 cents apiece for these chickens. I can not mention any price that I can demand for these things which it has taken me 12 months to produce.

Do you think the farmer has not got a problem? Do you men from the congested centers think so? Could you survive on that kind of a business operation? Then when you get into the market with a great commodity like wheat or cattle or cotton you have the bull and the bear to contend with. The cotton people have all Europe to contend with, combining with the bear element in this country, to fight down and impoverish the men, women, and children who produce that great crop. And so it is with our wheat, and so it is with your cattle.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. No; I regret I can not. I want to get through. Take cattle. My friend from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] knows something about that matter. I have seen men spend three years in growing a herd of cattle for market, and I have seen those cattle going out of my town; I have seen them send solid trainloads to Kansas City and St. Louis and Chicago. It is a funny thing that these same packers that operate in Kansas City and Chicago all operate also at Fort Worth. I live 60 miles from Fort Worth, and we are forced to ship our cattle from away down there to St. Louis and Chicago and Kansas City in order to get a fair price, with the same packers established down at Fort Worth.

What do you do? You unload them when you get to St. Louis or Kansas City. You get up on the fence. You sit there. You see a commission merchant come along, and you see prospective buyers come along, just a few of them. Have I, as a cattle shipper, any word to say as to what I shall get for those cattle, after I have spent thousands of dollars in growing and fattening them? Ought I not to have something to say about what they will bring, after having devoted to their production my judgment, my money, and my time, preparing these animals for the consumption of the people of the world? No. I sit there on that fence and see my cattle struck off at any price these packers see fit to give. They have bankrupted thousands of the cattlemen in my country and have driven them into other business. [Applause.]

These are some of the questions confronting agriculture, and I speak as a man who knows the facts and who comes from the section that has been hit by such a marketing system as that.

Oh, you do not get any cheap meat after they get cheap cattle from us, do you? I will tell you another thing about these packers. I did not mean to go into that, but it is a monopoly pure and simple. They have got in their hands every cattleman in this Nation.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. The gentleman knows that the Swift Packing Co. have published their prices weekly here. The gentleman knows that the prices of dressed beef quoted in the Washington market are about 6 cents per pound lower than they were four months ago, and yet the gentleman has stated that we are not getting any cheap meat and are really not getting any perceptibly cheaper meat. That would seem to reaffirm the statement previously made that it is the distribution that is at fault.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That is true. They have driven nearly everybody out of the business and they are trying to drive the grocery men out of business. These jobbers have made a desperately hard fight.

That is marketing. Are you willing as an American citizen, as a Member of this Congress, for the food supply of every character that you must depend on to sustain life and for the life and health of your children and your children's children—are you willing that the whole supply of the Nation, on which you and I must depend in order to exist and in order that our children may exist and be healthy and in order that our children's children may exist—are you willing for our Government to sit idly by and let any combination of five take charge of the whole food and meat supply of the Nation, with a power that can destroy not only individuals but nations?

Now, some years ago down in my part of the country we found a way to make use of cotton seed. Formerly, in my boyhood days, cotton seed was burned in the furnace of the steam engine. We did not know what it was; but later we found that we could take the hulls off of these seeds, and we could get the linters from which they make our smokeless powder, and we could get the kernel out of that seed and grind it and crush it, and it made a splendid food oil that now goes into the commerce of the Nation. Then they take the cottonseed cake and grind it into meal, and it goes back as a feed supply to your stock, and gives you the fat cattle, when combined with the hulls that you have taken from it. That was all waste stuff in my boyhood days. Now it is practically one-fourth of the value of this cotton crop.

These packers are smart. You know they make all kinds of substitutes for butter and lard, and vegetable oil is a good substitute. It is all right. I have no objection to using it. I use it frequently. It is healthful and has good food value. But what did they do? They slipped down the Atlantic coast and began to buy up, one by one, the oil mills in the cotton belt; and the oil mills own the gins, and the gins charge the farmer for ginning his cotton. The packers have extended their power to that industry, primarily to take over the oils that come from our cotton seed, and, secondarily, to force me as a cotton producer who must have my cotton ginned, when they have driven the private ginner out of existence, to pay the price that they demand for the simple ginning of my cotton. Primarily they want the oil out of the seed, because it enters into competition with the animal fat that is produced by their industry.

They have taken over the peanut industry in the same way. Are we going to sit idly by? What are you going to do? Are you going to let them use that power as they do use it, as they have driven other men out of existence, and let them drive the peanut grower from the farm and drive the cotton producer from the farm? They will do it if they can. They are selfish, money-making fellows. That is the power, and that is the way they are going to use it. It is up to this Congress to say, "Thus far shalt thou go and no further," and I am ready to cast a vote to put that limitation on them at this moment.

Ah, they say they can do it so much more efficiently. Of course they can. What are all these people going to do when they are driven out of business? You have got your efficiency, but you have got a great bank account to the credit of that efficiency, too. I should like to see our people encouraged to go back to these farms and produce whatever their section of the country may and will produce; and be assured that this Government as a government will use every power that it has to see to it that no one man or one set of men shall consolidate the market of any product so that there is not open competition for the stuff that is produced. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I will.

Mr. COOPER. Some time ago the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held hearings on the packing-house question, and those hearings were brought about by charges preferred by the Federal Trade Commission. Independent packers appeared before the committee and stated that, as far as they were concerned, the five big packers never closed the market to them, that there was always an open market for them, and that they were in no serious competition with the five big packers.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not know what their testimony was. I am telling you the experience of a man who lives in the producing section of the country and knows about how these markets are conducted and about how my people as producers were driven out of this productive business and into other enterprises.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will yield, I will say in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] that these independent packers, or the majority of them, who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and testified that they were allowed to compete with the big packers had testified in the opposite direction when they appeared before the Federal Trade Commission. I do not know just why they changed their minds.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. So much for that. My time is about up. Now, my friends, in conclusion let me reiterate let not this Congress ever cripple the financial system that we have given our farmers through the Federal Reserve Bank act. Let both the productive and the congested sections of our country wake up to the fact that we need more men on the farms to own their own homes; and do not let any selfish set of usurious interest collectors make an inroad on the farm-loan bank act, because when you do it you destroy the farm owner. You take from the farm the bulwark of protection against Bolshevism and anarchism, because the farmer owning the title to his own farm will fight to the death to protect the Government that protects his title. [Applause.] Give to the farmer through the Bureau of Markets or otherwise a better system of distribution, and the farmer will do as he has done. He will feed the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] 30 minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am sure I voice the sentiments of every member of the Agricultural Committee when I say that it is with profound regret that we hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG], who has just left the floor, announce that he is retiring from Congress. I do not belong to the same political party that he does, but I want to say to you that from my short experience on that committee I believe that when he leaves Congress the men who feed the world will lose from the Halls of Congress one of their stanchest, fairest, ablest friends.

I absolutely agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] that there should be no legislation, whether it comes through the "loose" remarks of people from Massachusetts or from any other State or any other man, to hinder the progress of the farmer through amendments of our financial laws that would tend to injure him. I am proud to be a Member of Congress, where it is manifest that the great majority of it considers the producer first and not second, and where there is absolutely no danger of any law passing that will cripple the producers of this great Commonwealth. The producer is safe enough in Congress, but no man can keep some other man from introducing on the floor of the House his private ideas, no man can keep a committee from coming down here from Chicago to appear before the Committee on Agriculture, as one did the other day, asking for an embargo on foodstuffs. No man here is responsible for the fact that they got together up there and appropriated a fund to reduce the high cost of living, and then, without any consideration whatever, concluded that the way to do it was to put an embargo on all farm products. They would starve themselves to death if they were let alone. But there was not any danger. They came before a joint committee of the Senate and the House, and while some of the members did not say anything, did not want to hurt their feelings, they were absolutely unanimous that this Congress would not consider for a moment the crippling of the producer and the absolute destruction of production by passing such fool laws.

I, too, with my friend from Texas lament the fact that the boys and the girls are leaving the farms. I am sorry for the fact that, even with these great laws that we have now protecting the producer, the tendency to leave the farm is still manifest. I wonder how to account for that fact. It is hard for a full-grown man to understand the ambitions of the farm boy who wants to give up his position on the farm to be a clerk in a store, and we as a government ought to set some kind of an example, but do we do it? Congress, I say, is safe. The Nation has nothing to fear from this Congress in the way of legislation that will injure the producer, but how are we as a government treating this great business? I say it is first the most important business of a nation to feed the nation. Every man I have ever talked to in Congress agrees with me, except one Member, and he is from a congested center. He has always told me how few farmers there are as compared with the consumers. He really has not stopped to think much. The fewer the farmers the more decent treatment they are entitled to, because it is absolutely admitted and conceded that they must feed you all. But are we being treated as such by the different branches of the Government? I understand we still have the legislative and executive branches of the Government. The Executive has authority under the law to appoint at the head of the great Department of Agriculture a man who would take pride and pleasure in it and who would promote this great industry. This Congress has said by a vote over the protest of the Executive that farming is not secondary. It has gone on record that farming is first, that the industries which depend on the farm for food are secondary—in response to a direct challenge. My friends who are more intimate with the man than I am, and more intimate with the department than I am, tell me that we have had up to within the last few days the greatest Secretary of Agriculture that the country has ever known. They tell me that the man appointed as a member of the President's official family at the beginning of his administration, Mr. Houston, was the best-posted man and the greatest Secretary of Agriculture we have ever had.

I do not know for sure, but I have my opinion. But some one is treating the business as secondary. Within a year of the time when his term would naturally expire some one looks upon this great business as so unimportant that they give him a job as a clerk in another store—the same practice that we are complaining of in respect to the farm boy and the farm girl leaving the farm. The Secretary of Agriculture has been given what they call a promotion and has been made the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope the time will come when not only the great American Congress may be depended upon to stand by the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] and treat agriculture as first in this country, but that the time will come when the Congress will have the backing of the Chief Executive of our Nation, and that he, too, will regard the producer and the farmer as first and not secondary to anyone in this great Nation.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman just stated that he was sorry to see the boys and the girls leave the farm.

Mr. TINCHER. Absolutely.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with him. Does not the gentleman think that the best way to keep those boys and girls on the farm is to develop the farm-loan system and build schoolhouses and good roads and a system of marketing, so that the producer can sell to the consumer without being robbed by the middleman?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, certainly; and I was glad to hear the gentleman from Texas say what he did about the packers; I was glad to see him have the nerve to stand on the floor of Congress and say that he believes in it.

I have been here only a short time, and I am sorry that he is leaving, because I say to him that here is one man who has come to Congress who would help him work out a system of regulating any man or set of men, if it develops that they have a monopoly on the food products of the Nation. Of course, the committee may disagree on details as to what brings about a real market system, and Members of Congress may disagree as to the best way to bring about that system, whether by Federal control or by Government ownership, but I say to you that you are right, that a marketing system is the important thing, and that until the farmer can have a fair deal, until he can have fair treatment, you can not hope to increase production, you can not reduce the high cost of living, and you can not satisfy the farmer without increasing production. The gentleman from Illinois interrupted my friend and asked him about the milk situation. How in the world can a man be happy to live on the farm when the limit of wages that the producer of milk can pay for producing the milk is $60 a month, while the man who is peddling the milk in the city is striking for $300 a month—a man who does not have to have the qualifications, who does not have to know as much, who does not have to have the intelligence, but who, simply because he belongs to some organization and lives in the city and works 8 hours a day, while the fellow on the farm works 12, can earn $300 a month, when the price that the farmer receives for his milk will not justify him in paying more than $60 a month to the man on the farm. Those are things that must be reached in some way. Those are problems that must be solved and the farmer is entitled to have them solved.

And the farmer is entitled to be treated first, because he does feed the world and should not be treated by any department of our Government as secondary in these critical times. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY and Mr. SABATH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Chicago.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I defer to the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman speaks about the price of milk. Is it not a fact that the dairy interests of this country have made an agreement or contract with the milk dealers in the large centers whereby they compel them to charge a certain price for milk, and, unless they comply with the agreement to charge the high price for milk in the cities, that these dairy interests refuse to deliver milk to these dealers who are willing to sell for lower prices than agreed upon on the part of these interests?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I do not believe that. I know what the gentleman is reflecting on. It is the collective bargaining. But the dairymen have by reason of their ability in collective bargaining been able to make an arrangement to sell their milk whereby they could pay their hired men who work 12 hours a day $60 a month, and they have sold milk to the man in the city who sells to the consumer, and he is selling to the consumer on the basis of his paying the organized labor $280 a month for delivering that; and that same labor has nothing like the ability or stability or manhood of the man who produces the milk. I decline to yield further.

Mr. SABATH. So there is such an agreement between the dairy interests and the retail milk interests who sell their milk in the cities?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is up to the gentleman from Illinois to explain that. He urges that there is a certain agreement. No one has ever contended, so far as I know, there is any such agreement. The fact is this——

Mr. SABATH. Well, understanding.

Mr. HAUGEN. The fact is this: The farmers took 7 cents for their milk in Ohio, and as a result they took them out of bed at 2 o'clock in the morning and put them in jail and did not give them an opportunity to give bond until 11 o'clock the next morning, when they went into court and they were acquitted of the charge. The gentleman is familiar with what took place in Illinois, and he knows that they had a trial, they had a day in court, and they were acquitted.

Mr. SABATH. I know they were indicted.

Mr. HAUGEN. And all these reports that go about and falsehoods are without foundation.

Mr. SABATH. I am not accusing the dairy interests.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman insinuated there was such an agreement.

Mr. SABATH. I asked whether the dairy interests did not deliberately enter into a contract or agreement with the large milk dealers in the large centers whereby they compelled them to charge a certain price for milk in the cities, and where any of the dealers refused to charge that certain price those certain dairy interests refused to sell milk to any such dealer.

Mr. TINCHER. No.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman asked the question, and in a way insinuated that an agreement had been reached.

Mr. SABATH. I wanted to know whether or not that was true.

Mr. TINCHER. It is not true.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is up to the gentleman to furnish the proof.

Mr. TINCHER. Six weeks of hearings have convinced me that it is absolutely untrue. I now yield to the other gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I am always interested in the debate of the gentleman from Kansas, enjoying the privilege of being on the same committee with him, and I have directed this query to him heretofore. I am delighted to hear him say he is interested in the farmers of this country, and I know that all of the Committee on Agriculture are interested in the farmers of this country.

I know it is absolutely essential that the farmers of this country be given some attention, and I want the gentleman from Kansas and the other gentlemen from the agricultural interests to know that two years ago when I first came to Congress, and, coming from the great industrial center of Chicago—the great packing industries are in my district—I said on the floor of the House that I wanted the farmer and the packer to get together so that there would be a mutual understanding between them both, and so that both could get along. I said that I was interested not only in the farmer, but I was interested in the millions of people in this country in the great industrial centers who, unlike the farmer, can not lay up a store of provisions for the year. Out in my city, in Chicago, the oppressed poor people do not have enough to feed them two days. What I am interested in is this, that these people be provided for, and also to have the farmers understand that if it were not for the industrial centers they could not live, because these centers furnish them with machinery with which to till the soil, and also purchase what the farmers produce.

Mr. TINCHER. I decline to yield further. I just want to say this in reply to the gentleman, that whenever as a representative of the congested industrial centers he realizes the fact that right now in the United States of America the thing that is good for the producer is good for the consumer we will have made one step forward, and whenever committees from his town come before the Committee on Agriculture in Washington and ask for an embargo on the farmers' food product he is asking for something that in the end will absolutely ruin the consumers of this country and practically make the production of food impossible to feed even this country.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TINCHER. I decline to yield further. The gentleman has had five or six minutes of my time already.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I would like to interrupt you a moment there.

Mr. TINCHER. Go ahead. I am good-natured.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Thank you, sir. I know that. A committee from my city came here with suggestions, asking relief from Congress, recognizing that a great majority of the people in this Congress, the Members of this House, were interested in the consumer as they are interested in the producer. That committee is not trying to solve the situation, but they are offering suggestions, and they came from a congested district, and they want you and the rest of the Members to help enact legislation that will be beneficial not only to the farmer but to consider legislation that will be beneficial as well to 110,000,000 of Americans in this country. That is what we ask.

Mr. TINCHER. And that is actually what I want to do. I want to fix it so that the packer can not ruin the cattleman or the hog man as he has done this year so the consumer in Chicago will get the benefit of it. I want to show the middleman, that has grown rich and has had a monopoly, that it is time for him to abandon it and let the fair producer and the fair consumer live. [Applause.] I decline to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me just a moment, so that I may ask right along this same line a question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TINCHER. Certainly.

Mr. RUBEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] this question:

The other day we had a committee from Chicago before our Committee on Agriculture asking us to put an embargo on agricultural products. On the night before, at one of the big hotels in the city, there was another committee from Chicago, and they had a banquet, and they asked us then and there to open up the ports of the country and to establish foreign trade everywhere and to carry the foreign manufactured products over the country. Now, what I want to ask is, Which committee do you stand for, the one that wants the embargo or the one that wants to open up the ports of the country to the world?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I will say in answer——

Mr. TINCHER. Let me say to the gentleman that he will have a lot of time, and they can thrash that question out among themselves.

Gentlemen of the committee, I want to discuss the bill with you just for a moment. There was an estimate made by the department for much more money than the committee appropriated. There were several weeks of hearings on this bill—I think about six weeks—and the department did not ask to release a man, and there was not a single branch of the work but that they wanted to put some extra men in. The older members of the committee and the majority of the committee decided that they would not this year indulge in the employment of new men, and in some instances they recommended a decrease in the number.

I find this proposition in the Department of Agriculture, and it is a proposition I do not consider that there should be much mean feeling about. But there is a principle involved. Every man agrees that it is proper for the Department of Agriculture to conduct experiments, for instance, in the live-stock industry, as to the eradication of diseases and the troubles that affect that industry.

Every man agrees that whenever the Department of Agriculture can by experiment produce a cure or a preventive for one of those diseases they have done a great work. But there is the serious question and principle involved as to how far the Government should go in that work. Take, for instance, some of the ailments common to hogs—for instance, hog cholera. Either the State colleges or the Government have developed a serum that will prevent hog cholera—not cure it, but prevent it—with two "shots," as the farmers call it. That is so well established that hundreds of individual concerns are manufacturing that serum. Now, there is not any question but that the Government should do just what it has done, pass a law that that serum should be manufactured under Government supervision, so that every man that buys it would know that it was pure and fit for use. And that kind of a law is a Federal law, and it takes $180,000 a year to inspect those private plants. The privately owned establishments advertise their wares extensively. The department asks for, I think, about $30,000 to conduct further experiments, with the hope of benefiting that treatment, and no man on the committee was opposed to that. No man on the committee was opposed to the appropriation for the supervision. The Government had conducted the experiments, and the serum is now being manufactured by individuals under the supervision of the Government, and no man objects to going further with the experiment.

Now, the proposition I want to discuss and leave for you to think over, and that newer Members of Congress here know more about than you older Members, is how much money do you want to appropriate for a year to send men out to make speeches and talk about that serum? How much money do you want to appropriate per year to send veterinarians to vaccinate individual droves of hogs?

I contend that after the Government has conducted the experiments, issued its bulletins, caused the manufacture of it, as it has in this instance, and the concerns manufacturing it are advertising it and are pursuing the experiments to find if we can better the condition, it is unfair for us to appropriate money from the Public Treasury to administer that treatment to the hogs of any individual. And I say that for this reason, gentlemen: Instead of it taking a few million dollars of this Government's money to administer that treatment to the farmers' hogs, it would take billions of dollars to do it fairly, because it is unfair to administer it to the hogs of one section of the country and not administer it to the hogs of another section. And that same principle is involved in a great many other items in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. In just a moment. I want to say to you that there is this little fight going on. The State agricultural colleges and the farm bureaus do not think we should continue sending experts out from Washington. The department here thinks that we should.

I do not want to be unreasonable about it, but it is a matter worthy of consideration, because more than $2,250,000 of our last year's appropriation was spent on these experts traveling out from Washington, who, as some of us think, we can well get along without. That is a proposition well worthy the consideration of the American Congress. I want to say to you this, that a great many men think that the Department of Agriculture would be much more efficient if it did not send out so many experts, and simply contented itself with the legitimate experiments and propaganda of these matters.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. JACOWAY. I want to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no; I am not yielding for the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. JACOWAY. Well, then, I want the gentleman to state what his answer would be to this question: If through the activities of the Department of Agriculture down here in a single year, by speech making and by these other activities that the gentleman has mentioned, the death rate in hogs can be reduced from 137 to 37 per thousand, and if in one calendar year the Department of Agriculture can save $10,000,000 worth of hog flesh, does he not think the propaganda is a good propaganda and ought to be indulged in, and that the Federal Government is justified in carrying on the work further?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think a speech ever saved a hog. I do believe that this serum has saved the hog. I agree with what the committee is doing now. The committee is trying this year an experiment of cutting off a few hundred of the experts and seeing if we can live without them. I am simply calling the attention of Congress to it at this time for the reason that if we do succeed and get along this year without them, in the course recommended in the committee report, we can get along next year without a lot of others. I do not believe that it is necessary for seven men to look at a wheat field. I think our experts do get in each other's way once in a while, and I think this is a good year to leave off a few of them, as the committee so wisely decided to do. [Applause.]

This bill carries a reduction, in my judgment, of $6,000,000 that is not disclosed in figures upon the face of this bill. This department and this bill appropriates for the national forests. Last year we pastured through the grazing season in the national forests two and a half million cattle and horses. We pastured in the national forests, in round numbers, 8,000,000 head of sheep and goats. We received for the pasturing of the sheep and goats practically nothing, just as nominal a figure as could be made; but for the pasturing of the cattle and horses for the season we received an average of 71 cents per season. Now, mark you, this is not the homesteaders' stock; this is the big herds. When this matter was before the committee, the department's attention was called by our chairman to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture had said in his address to the stockmen what his policy would be, or words to that effect, that there would be no advances in these charges. Now, as a matter of fact, there has been an advance of, say, more than 300 per cent in privately owned pastures in the last two years, but the Government was using the same old price. This bill compels a remedying of this situation. The department does, I understand, agree that the language in this bill will raise for the Government more than $2,000,000. Stockmen tell me, and I know that it is true, that the proper observance of the new language in this bill by the department will increase the revenues of this country—because we have increased the forests and have increased the fencing year by year—will increase the revenues of this country $6,000,000.

Inasmuch as these hearings have lasted for more than a month—have been almost continual for two months—it would be unfair for any Member to attempt to cover the subject, be unfair to his colleagues, and unfair to the record.

The President said, in vetoing the daylight-saving repeal last summer, that he considered the industrial enterprises of the Nation of supreme importance; practically said that he considered agriculture as secondary. He has borne out this comparison between the relative importance of these departments recently by relieving the Secretary of Agriculture simply to fill a place in another department of our Government. I am not complaining of this, because I have the feeling that the Department of Agriculture is now top-heavy, poorly administered, and that a change can not operate to its disadvantage. However, I submit that the proposition that if a man is the success that they claim he is at the head of the great Department of Agriculture, what a shame it is that this great Nation can not furnish some other man to fill some other position, and let him finish out what our friends would like to term "his successful administration" of this great department.

Personally I am glad that we are through with the consideration of this bill, as I am glad to be free from the confinement its consideration has caused all members of the committee. I am glad to be able to be back on the floor where I can, at least, lend my vote on divisions and tellers if, for instance, the Prussian military bill now reported by the Senate should come up here for consideration; if, for instance, the creating of this new $100,000,000 aeroplane department of our Government should come on the floor of the House for consideration. In short, I am glad to be able to be back on the floor of the House to assist our floor leader [Mr. MONDELL] in his noble fight for Americanism and economy; and if they do pass that Prussian military bill over in the Senate over the protests of the Senators from my State and other real Americans, and if it does see the light of day out of the Military Affairs Committee of the House over the noble fight that my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is making against it and for American ideals, then I am glad to be able to be here on the floor to help place the stamp of disapproval upon it that it so richly deserves at the hands of an American Congress; and, in this connection, permit me to say that when the paid propagandists of militarism throw out their slurs, as against Senators CURTIS and CAPPER for their fight on this bill in the Senate, and throw out their slurs against DAN ANTHONY for the day-and-night fight he has made these many months against it in the House committee, they only make me and all the Kansas Members know and love our colleagues the more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MADDEN). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, every day we read something about enemies of this Government being deported. My friends, while we are enacting laws to deport foreign Bolshevists from our country, let us not forget that we can not deport their ideas. Those ideas must be overcome mainly by education. At this particular time of crisis the wisdom of Jefferson's advice clearly emerges:

> Educate and inform the whole mass of the people, enable them to see that it is to their interest to preserve peace and order, and they will preserve them.

We must depend on the schools to help the homes, churches, and the press of the country to teach our boys and girls that human liberty can only be obtained and enjoyed through the means of established government. An understanding of the fundamental principles of our Government must be inculcated in the heart and mind of every child until it becomes a part of his very soul, so as to make him strong and impervious to the influences of those Bolshevists who would destroy this great American Government. We must educate the youth to understand that the interests of organized capital and organized labor are bound up with the interests of the community as a whole, and that the interests of all are bound together in the interests of the Nation; that it is impossible to separate the interests of any class or of any association; that mutual consideration is not only a manifestation of a Christian spirit but good business; that we must have capital, labor, and genius in order to develop the resources of our country and make it possible for all the people to find employment and be contented, happy, and prosperous; that those who sow discord between capital and labor are enemies of society and good government; that while our Government is not perfect, because it is human, still it is the best government in the world; that under our Constitution we have the means by which the citizen, rich or poor, high or humble, can improve his Government with his ballot without resorting to bullets.

Teach the young that the men who would destroy the Constitution handed down to us by the fathers of our country as a protecting shield would be the worst victims of their own folly; that for more than a century this Constitution has stood true in every storm and crisis, and has protected us from the despotism of the ambitious autocrat, as well as from the tyranny of the mob. And faded would be the glory of our country and dim the majesty of its laws whenever the humblest citizen of the land will not be able to say, "This is my home, and my family and I are safe. I am an American citizen, and I invoke the protection of the Constitution and its laws."

Important as education is to all people, it is especially important to the citizens of a democracy, where the power of government rests in the hands of the people, and where the excellence of the Government depends upon the intelligence and information of the people. Information as to our past and preparation as to the future are essential if individual and Government success are to be assured and if disastrous mistakes are to be avoided. No wave rises very high above the sea, and no individual rises very far above the established standard of intelligence of his country and his people. When we raise the educational standards of our country and our people, we increase the opportunity for our own sons and daughters, as well as for the sons and daughters of every other citizen.

The agricultural products of a nation form the sum of the products of the cultivated farms of a nation; the untilled territory produces very little. The industrial products of a nation constitute the products of the skilled labor of the trained workmen of the nation. "Training is learning; cultivation is education." Everything is education which teaches us to be better workmen, better men, better citizens, more useful members of society. Just as every farm should be cultivated if we want the fullest crop, so every man should be educated if we want the fullest results in the human equation. These are days of intensive cultivation and they should be days of intensive education.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. LAZARO. Can the gentleman from Georgia yield me two minutes?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. LAZARO. Now more than ever before in the history of the world should every boy and girl be given the best and broadest opportunity in life through an education that is liberal and practical in every sense of the word. The success of a government like ours, a government of the people, depends on individuals whose minds and hearts have been educated to protect, love, and defend their Constitution.

This, gentlemen of the House, is the time when great and complicated problems are being presented for solution, and we need the very best efforts not only of some of our citizens but of all our citizens to keep America in the front ranks of the mighty march of progress. The educators are the torch bearers of democracy. They hold high the lamp of learning to light the path of progress and to make the advancing steps of democracy safe and sure. Now, gentlemen of the House, if it be true that education is necessary to render our youths immune against the poison of Bolshevism and preserve this great Republic of ours, then the question comes up, are we doing our duty toward the school system of our country? The facts brought out at a recent conference of commissioners of education are deplorable in the extreme. Thousands of our best teachers have already resigned. A large number of farms have been abandoned, because families will not stay in a community where their children can not get schooling. Attendance at State normal schools has decreased because the teaching profession no longer affords the same attraction as other careers.

Mr. Chairman, the object of my address to-day is to appeal to the lawmakers of our country here in Congress and in the States to see this problem as it exists and remedy this situation as soon as possible. And in doing so let us deep in mind the fact that it is good, sound economy always to build good schoolhouses and to employ the most efficient teachers we can find, so that the children, the future citizens of America, will get what they are entitled to—a good, practical education. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have listened with keen interest to the speeches just made in behalf of the great agricultural industry of our country, and I want to discuss a question now the proper and speedy settlement of which will benefit the business of every farmer in America. The failure of the United States Senate to ratify the peace treaty, which provides for a League of Nations to promote peace and prevent war, has contributed to and prolonged the disturbed and distracted conditions that obtain throughout the countries of the Old World. The last Congress provided machinery through the operation of which the banking institutions of the United States could finance foreign countries in the purchase of products of American farms and factories, and these great financial institutions have been ready and anxious for months to assist with their money these foreign countries that desire and need the products of America. But these banking institutions of America have been waiting and waiting for the Senate of the United States to ratify the peace treaty and the League of Nations so that some semblance of peace and order could be established where distracted and chaotic conditions now exist in the Old World.

They will not put their money back of these foreign interests who desire to buy American goods until some international stabilizing power is set up that will undertake at least to establish peace and order and restore conditions to the normal state.

The one thing needed to be done to improve conditions the world over, the thing necessary to be done to give hope and encouragement to the suffering and despairing people of the Old World, torn and cursed by war; the one thing that will do more to restore the whole world to a normal basis is the ratification of the league treaty by the Senate of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The failure to ratify the League of Nations has injured the agricultural, the commercial, the banking, and the manufacturing interests of the United States. It has seriously handicapped and hurt America's export trade with foreign countries. [Applause on the Democratic side.] These foreign countries want to trade with us. Their people are suffering and starving. They want to buy our products, but they are suffering from the evil effects of a terrible war and they have not got the money with which to pay us for what they wish to buy.

But here are great banking institutions in our country, capable of financing, and expressing their willingness to finance, every purchase by these foreign countries of American goods, provided that the League of Nations were established to insure law and order and prevent the disturbance and destruction of the peace of the world.

Gentlemen, there is no way to escape the conclusion that the long-continued disturbed and distracted conditions in the countries over the sea, the suffering and starvation of people who could have had their purchases of American products financed over here had the League of Nations been ratified, is traceable to the door of the leaders of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen of the Republican side, if your leaders over yonder had thought as much of the rights and welfare of humanity; if they had thought as much of the peace of America and the peace of the world as they have shown that they were thinking about how to obtain party power in the Nation, the league treaty would have been ratified long ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, the Washington Post this morning contains a statement to the effect that Mr. Will Hays, the political boss and campaign-fund captain of the Republican Party [applause on the Republican side], chairman of the Republican national committee [applause on the Republican side], has been out for two months making a political tour of the country. What report does he make? He says that the country wants a change. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think that he is right about it. You

Republicans have been in power in the House and Senate since last March, and I am glad to have you applaud the suggestion that the country is already anxious to have the political complexion of these two bodies changed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the party program announced in the Post he sets out a few things that he thinks the party should stand for and do in order to win in the national election. But not a word does he say about the League of Nations. Think of it! This all-important and stupendous effort on the part of the peace-loving nations of the world, to establish a tribunal to promote peace and prevent cruel and murderous war, finds no place for even passing notice in the political program of the power-seeking leaders of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The call from the agricultural and commercial interests of the country to hurry up and ratify the League of Nations treaty falls dead on his ears.

The gun and munition makers of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Massachusetts do not want the league treaty ratified, and they, of course, are opposed to having any suggestion of its ratification mentioned in the Republican program, and the Republican national chairman, Mr. Hays, in his program printed in the Post this morning, was as silent as the tomb upon the subject.

Mr. Chairman, while the war was raging in Europe and our boys were fighting and dying in the effort to defeat and destroy a military despotism that threatened free government here and the world over, President Wilson advocated the establishment of a League of Nations. He said that the situation presented by the awful and destructive war then raging had proven the necessity of uniting the forces of civilization to make such a war in the future impossible. The American people applauded his position. No Republican politician lifted up his voice in protest. They all seemed to approve his stand. And the great rank and file of the Democratic and Republican Parties expressed their whole-hearted support of the President's position. But when the war ended Republican leaders and bosses changed their position and commenced to do everything in their power to defeat the League of Nations plan.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call my colleague's attention to the fact that Mr. Hays, in the noon edition of the paper, tells the Republicans to keep their hands off of the league.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I should judge from his program published in the Post this morning that he wants the league treaty to remain unratified.

This House and the Senate by practically a unanimous vote placed a provision in the naval bill of 1916 requesting the President of the United States to call a conference of the nations to provide for the establishment of a League of Nations or some other international tribunal for the purpose of settling disputes by mediation or arbitration. The President has done what Congress requested him to do.

On July 4, 1918, standing at Mount Vernon, by the tomb of Washington, where thousands of patriotic Americans had assembled, he announced the 14 principles on which the war was won, principles upon which the peace treaty and League of Nations were to be established. The justice-loving and peace-loving people of America hailed with delight the great and humane principles enunciated by the President at Mount Vernon. The civilized nations of the earth lifted up their voices in praise of the doctrine proclaimed by the President of the United States. It seemed to be universally approved. No Republican in the Senate—the treaty-making body in our Congress—found fault with this position of the President.

Many of them were outspoken in praise of his position and not one of them criticized it. But when the President had obeyed the mandate of Congress and had called a conference of the nations and had gone as a representative of the American people to accomplish what Congress had expressed its desire to have accomplished—the establishment of an international peace tribunal—then it was that the opposition to a League of Nations commenced to assert itself in the United States. Republican leaders in the Senate who had already declared in favor of a League of Nations began very suddenly to oppose such a league even before they knew what the proposed plan would be. They demanded that the provisions for a League of Nations be left out of the peace treaty, and while the President, with the other delegates in the peace conference, was striving to settle the most stupendous problems that ever confronted the human race Republican Senators hampered and embarrassed him by sending him a "round robin" demanding that the League of Nations be not included in the treaty of peace. Yes, they sent that "round robin," and I think to humiliate and embarrass the great President of the United States, the master spirit of our age and the foremost leader that has ever appeared in the world's affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, I shall never forget the 11th day of November, 1918. Sitting in this House I heard the clang of hammers, the trumpet call of buglers, and the roar of cannon all mingled with the shouts of the people of the Capital City.

What is it?—was the question asked on every hand. And the answer came, "The armistice is signed. Thank God, the war is over." [Applause on the Democratic side.] We went out upon the balcony and looked down the Avenue. Thousands of people were parading the streets, waving their banners and shouting for joy. A great float passed down the Avenue; on one side of it in large letters were written the words "In God we trust," and on the other side appeared the blessed words of the Master, "Peace on earth, good will to men." There was rejoicing on every hand. Mothers who had gold stars in their windows stood, with tears streaming down their faces, thanking God that the war had ended, that other mothers' boys would not have to die in the conflict. [Applause.] There was happiness and there was rejoicing everywhere in the country, except at the gun and ammunition plants in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

What happened there? Trucks were loaded with guns and ammunition. Railroad trains were moving out with guns and ammunition, ships loaded down with war munitions were going over the seas, and all that traffic stopped suddenly. The Secretary of War notified the gun and munition factories to send "No more guns and ammunition," and the Secretary of the Navy requested them to send "No more guns and ammunition." The Allies notified them to send "No more guns and ammunition." And then the spirit of greed and avarice said, "What! Is all this mighty traffic to cease?" And the devil's agent said, "Yes; it is to cease unless you defeat the League of Nations. If you defeat the League of Nations, then the nations of the earth will arm to the teeth and every Government on the globe will become an armed camp, bristling with bayonets and groaning beneath its war equipment, and you will sell them billions of dollars worth of guns and ammunition. That is what will happen." And then the gun and munition makers commenced to plan for the defeat of the League of Nations.

What care they for wars and crimes;
Its dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes.

They sent their hired agents around the country to misrepresent the plans and purposes of the League of Nations. They have purchased newspapers and carried on a campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood against the League of Nations.

They have carried on a propaganda of slander and vilification against the President of the United States, all because the League of Nations proposes to bring about a reduction in the war equipment of the nations and to settle disputes hereafter by arbitration and not by the sword.

The League of Nations will promote peace, save human life, and prevent war, and the prevention of war hurts the gun and munition maker's business, and therefore in order to defeat the League of Nations he is willing to expend millions in campaign funds for Republican leaders in order that he may make billions later on selling guns and ammunition to the nations of the world as they arm and get ready for another war if the league is defeated.

Be not deceived, gentlemen. The American people know what is going on. They know who is back of the wicked purpose to defeat the League of Nations, and unless Republican Senators ratify the league and permit America to join the other civilized nations and use her influence to promote peace and prevent war your party is going to receive the condemnation and scorn of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, no Republican in this House has manifested enough interest in a plan to prevent war to make a speech in behalf of an international tribunal to protect human life in America from the bloody butchery of brutal war in the future.

The armistice was signed in November, 1918. November, 1919, has come and gone, and here we are in February, 1920, and the League of Nations is not yet ratified by the Senate of the United States. And why? Because Republican Senators opposing it would not let it be ratified. Not one of you Republicans in this House has ever entered your protest against the efforts of your party in the Senate to defeat the League of Nations. Is it possible that this mighty war monster who has murdered 10,000,000 of men and crippled 30,000,000 more is of such little consequence to you in comparison with your desire to obtain complete political power in the Nation that you do not care to give it mention?

What will the fathers and mothers say who were told when they gave their boys to fight to put down this war monster that this Government would immediately use its power and influence to set up a tribunal for the purpose of settling disputes in the future by arbitration? What will they say when they find that the gun and munition makers are powerful enough with your party to prevent even the mention of our League of Nations pledge made to the boys and fathers and mothers of America when we called for soldiers to put down that cruel and most destructive war of the ages? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Those who expect to profit from a money standpoint and from a political standpoint if the league is defeated have misrepresented and tried to destroy the President of the United States in their efforts to defeat the league. They accused him of being unwilling to cooperate with Republican Senators in making up the provisions for a League of Nations. But what are the facts? When the President returned from the peace conference in February he brought the general outline or tentative plan of the league treaty with him, and he laid it before Senator LODGE, the Republican leader of the Senate, and others for their consideration. He requested them to go over the plan carefully and to make any suggestion that they desired to make regarding changes desired.

They returned the copy to the President with a number of suggested changes.

The President took the league treaty with all the changes that Senator LODGE and others had suggested, and returned with it to the peace conference in Paris. There the President urged the conference to adopt, and it did adopt, all of the changes thus suggested. Then the President felt that he was entitled to and would have the support and cooperation of Senator LODGE and the other Republican Senators. But what happened?

When the President called an extra session of Congress and it was announced that the treaty providing for an international tribunal to prevent the cruel and useless slaughter of human beings would soon be submitted for ratification to the Senate of the United States, this same Republican leader, Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, sent a telegram to all Republican Senators requesting them not to pledge their support to the league treaty that had been made to conform to the objections that he and they had made.

He requested them to remain silent until a secret Republican caucus could be held to determine the fate of this nonpartisan and great international question that vitally affects the welfare and destiny of the whole human race. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was the conduct of Republican Leader LODGE upon that serious occasion. God forgive him and those who have followed him in delaying and playing politics with this all-important world question. The American people will not forgive them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order and refrain from mentioning Members of the other body by name or from indulging in remarks that can be construed as a criticism upon that branch.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the rule is that you can refer to the acts——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear what the rule is. The Chair is familiar with the rule about the Senate and is cautioning the gentleman, and will ask him to proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Chair hold that I can not refer to what a Senator does outside of the Senate? If the Chair so holds, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman must desist from making remarks that consist of criticisms of Members of the other body.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hold that I have not transgressed the rule in that regard. So there is a difference of opinion between myself and the Chair, but, of course, I can understand how the Chair, who is a good parliamentarian, will every now and then be a little partisan, and especially so when you go to treading upon the toes of some who hail from the same State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman will either proceed in order or will yield the floor.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. If a Member on the floor uses language that is unparliamentary, the proper procedure is very clearly defined in the rules. I do not know of any remarks that the gentleman from Alabama has made that would provoke the immediate ruling the Chair has just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that if a Member on the floor charges the Chair with improper conduct, it is not necessary for a Member on the floor to ask that those words be taken down.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman did not. The gentleman made a statement, which I think is perfectly legitimate in debate, and I think, in fact, more stringent remarks have been made by both Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Alabama did not, of course, intend to cast any reflection upon the general integrity of the Chair.

Mr. WINGO. To say that a man can not undertake to charge another with political bias without imputing bad faith is stifling freedom of debate in a parliamentary body, and I for one protest against any such arbitrary ruling in the parliament of a free people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a further point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will suspend. The Chair understood the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama to be clearly reflective upon the ruling of the Chair. The Chair has no desire to be partisan, but the rules of the House clearly provide the limit within which Members may go in discussing matters upon the floor of the House. The Chair feels that when it involves the prerogatives of the House, as well as the prerogatives of the coordinate branch of the Congress, it is not necessary for the Chair to have the matter called to his attention by a Member on the floor, but it is the duty of the Chair to direct the gentleman's attention to that matter and to caution him to proceed in order. That the Chair had done, and he was then charged with indulging in a partisan bias, which the Chair thinks is a reflection upon the Chair, and is not a proper remark for a Member to indulge in under the circumstances.

Mr. WINGO. I submit in all seriousness that charging a man, even in plain language, with political crookedness does not involve personal turpitude.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, it is not necessary that any reflection should involve political turpitude or any kind of turpitude. The Chair felt that the gentleman—and he assumes inadvertently—charged the Chair with political and partisan bias.

Mr. WINGO. In all frankness I submit that the Chair would plead guilty to having a partisan bias in favor of his own party. Is it any reflection, or is it a violation of the rules of the House, to charge a man with loyalty to his own party?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair is not the occupant of his position as a partisan. It is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rules of the House free from any partisan or political bias or interpretation. He is here as the presiding officer of this committee, and he feels that it is his duty to interpret those rules fairly and free from political partisan bias. So far as the Chair has ruled, he has shown no such bias.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Alabama claims his right to refer to acts of Senators not connected with their official duties in the Senate, but on the outside of the Senate Chamber. I submit as a point of order that the gentleman from Alabama was clearly within his right in claiming to have the right to refer to such outside acts. The gentleman from Alabama understood the Chair to limit that particular right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas, the Chair thinks, may not have closely followed the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, but in the view of the Chair they clearly did involve the action of the Senate, and whether it referred to the attitude or action taken by Senators outside of the Senate, a Senator was mentioned by name, and the attitude and action of the Senate as such was further referred to by the gentleman from Alabama, and a criticism was involved in the remarks of the gentleman. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Alabama to proceed in order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Ohio for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would gladly yield to my friend from Ohio, but I do not want this time taken out of the time allotted to me.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman yields, it will be taken out of his time. Does he yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does the Chair base his seemingly extraordinary ruling on the fact that the gentleman referred to a Senator sending a telegram?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair does not. The Chair bases his ruling upon those parts of the remarks of the gentleman which clearly were a reflection and a criticism of the United States Senate as such.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, then, I shall proceed to make my argument to this House and to the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, when this extraordinary performance that I have referred to was indulged in, when the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate had sent telegrams to Republican Senators before Congress convened urging that no position be taken favorable to the League of Nations, I submit to this House and to the country that that act was not in keeping with the highest and best interests of the people of our country or the best interests of the civilized world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If there ever was a question of a nonpartisan nature, surely the safeguarding of human life against murder is a nonpartisan question. Democrats and Republicans alike fought in the war together under the leadership of the great Commander in Chief of the United States Army and Navy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When this great American President had about finished his stupendous task and was making ready to come home certain Senators obtained an incomplete copy of the league treaty, coming through Germany. It was said to have been brought over here by German spies. Then it was brought down to the Capital from New York and turned over to leading Republicans of another body, and there it was seriously announced that they intended to print it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The President was appraised of that extraordinary conduct. He cabled to those gentlemen telling them that that copy was incomplete, and that he, the President of the United States, had given his word to the members of the peace conference that no copy of the league treaty would be published in the United States until he himself presented it in due form to the Senate for ratification, and on top of that information he solemnly requested them not to print it. In spite of the President's protest these Republican leaders insisted upon printing it. When the matter came up for consideration a man by the name of MCCUMBER, a Senator from North Dakota, a Republican, arose and said that for 20 years he had made it a rule not to vote to print any treaty in the RECORD until it was duly submitted by the President of the United States, and that he could not change his position now because there is a change in administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Here is a strong insinuation and an indirect charge by a Republican that his Republican colleagues were treating the President in this improper fashion because the treaty was being submitted by a Democrat.

The people believe that that is true. Mr. Taft, you remember, has said that if a Republican had negotiated this treaty and had submitted it for ratification that there would have been no opposition to it in the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You will recall also that Mr. Taft is quoted as saying that the Republican leaders in the Senate had packed the Foreign Relations Committee with those opposed to the League of Nations. What more proof do we need to show that the gunmakers and ammunition makers of the four States named have had their influence felt? Ah, they tell us that the gun and ammunition makers, who made more than $4,000,000,000 through the sale of guns and ammunition during the war just ended, sitting back and clipping their coupons behind the screen, are telling the Republican leaders of another body, "Defeat the League of Nations and we will give you all the campaign funds that you want."

So, gentlemen of the House, we must decide and the American people must decide whether the welfare, the peace, and happiness of the people of America and the people of the whole world shall have our consideration and support, or whether we shall permit Germany and the gun and munition makers here to barter in the blood of our boys and gamble on the peace of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, a few years ago a yellow-fever epidemic would break out at different periods in New Orleans and the people, panic stricken, would flee from the city. The postal authorities down there fumigated the mail going out from New Orleans to prevent the spread of yellow-fever germs in other sections of the country. What a farcical performance! One day a doctor went down to New Orleans and convinced the people that a mosquito was responsible for the yellow fever. He said: "Come with me to this cesspool, this lagoon, this lake, and clean out these mosquito-breeding holes. They are the hotbed and breeding places of your yellow-fever germ." And they flooded those places with kerosene oil, and now New Orleans is a happy and prosperous city, no longer afflicted with the demoralizing and deadly epidemics caused by the yellow fever.

This happy condition exists. Why? Because the people of New Orleans went to the very root of the evil back of yellow fever and destroyed it. The same thing must be done with regard to war. Wars innumerable have come, and all the methods employed in the past to prevent them have failed.

Under the old plan one nation would have a peace treaty with another nation agreeing not to fight one another, and yet they frequently, through private understanding or secret intrigue, agreed to unite their forces to fight another nation. And the world was living over an underground network of private agreements and understandings between nations. Through this unintelligent and irresponsible system plans and schemes were laid for the preparation and commencement of wars that the world knew nothing about. Because there was nowhere in the world any common understanding among the nations that they would use their combined powers in one mighty, concerted action to prevent any one nation from beginning a war of aggression or conquest, Germany quietly and secretly planned and prepared to conquer the world.

I repeat, the old methods employed to prevent war have failed utterly.

There is only one way to prevent war, and that is to go to the root of the evil, as they did in the case of yellow fever at New Orleans.

There must be established an international tribunal whose duty it shall be to prevent the outlaw nation from arming and equipping itself so that it will become a menace and a danger to the peace of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Establish such a tribunal and you will bring about a reduction in national armament the world over. The peace-loving nations are praying for such a time. Do that and you have broken up the hotbed and breeding place of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The law-observing and peace-loving people of the world must join forces for the purpose of saying to the outlaw nation, "We will not permit you to disturb and destroy the peace of the world." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, one night many years ago down in the Mississippi Valley, when in the immediate vicinity there was no sign of rain, a flood came down from the streams above and the Father of Waters swept out over the valley beyond. When the people on the hills round about awoke in the morning they saw that the houses of the people in the valley were covered with water, and they knew that the people in those houses were drowned while they slept. When the flood receded they buried the dead, and then some of the people said, "We ought not to permit anybody else to try to live down in the valley." Then an old patriarch said, "God created this rich valley to be used and enjoyed by the people, and there ought to be a way to control the flood," and then a civil engineer came forward and said, "There is a way to control the flood. I can build a levee or sea wall that will hold that river to its course until the flood has spent its force."

He built the walls, and now when the river rises and rages in its fury these walls stand there holding the river to its course, and they protect from danger and death the people in the valley beyond. So, gentlemen of the House, the League of Nations proposes to erect between the lives of human beings and the cruel slaughterhouse of war and the humane walls of peaceful arbitration. And when disputes arise and the angry passions of nations rise and rage these walls of arbitration will hold them to the course of peaceful settlement marked out by the League of Nations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They will hold these angry passions in check and prevent them from reaching the sward in the valley beyond. And to achieve such an end ought to be the burning desire and ambition of every civilized nation on the globe. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The President has urged the Senate to hurry up and ratify the league treaty, and he has said time and again that he was willing to accept any reservation that would not make it necessary for the Allies to again submit the treaty to Germany.

What are the essential provisions and powers of the proposed League of Nations?

It is composed of an assembly of 32 members. Each nation has one vote in the assembly, and in all matters of importance where a decision affecting all is concerned the vote must be unanimous, so the United States could by its single vote defeat any measure that was not agreeable to our representative in the assembly. The council is the head and front of the whole league plan. It is composed of nine votes—the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Brazil, Spain, Greece, and Japan. All were allies in the war with Germany. It requires a unanimous vote in the council to even advise action in any important matter, and the United States by her one vote can defeat any action sought to be taken by the council. There is no power conferred on the League of Nations to order any member to do a given thing. Its power is purely of an advisory nature. The league has no power to commit the United States to a war program under any condition, and it has no power to send a single soldier out of the United States. Congress, and Congress alone, has the power to declare war and raise an army. President Wilson had placed in the League of Nations a provision which allows a nation dissatisfied with the conduct of the league to withdraw from membership in two years' time.

But they tell us that England has 6 votes in the assembly. Well, we have 16 votes in the Pan American Union, and since the vote in the assembly must be unanimous, requiring that all 32 votes shall agree, America's 1 vote will as effectively defeat a given proposition as if she had 6 or 16 votes.

Mr. Chairman, modern war has become so dangerous and deadly that something has got to be done to prevent it. The old system will not, can not, prevent it. It is the mother of all the wars of the past. America must be in position in the future to use her influence to prevent war. She deplored the outbreak of the last war, but she had no way to prevent it. If she must ever fight in another foreign war, it must be after she has had the opportunity to use her influence and power to prevent it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the bloody maelstrom just ended 10,000,000 of men were murdered, thirty-odd millions more maimed and mangled are lame and halt and blind, and more women and children made widows and orphans, more barbarities committed, and more suffering and sorrow produced than were ever produced in any other war in all the history of the world.

And yet we are criticized and condemned for advocating a League of Nations. We are condemned because we want to substitute international arbitration for the arbitrament of the sword.

Mr. Chairman, if we were justified in joining the Allies to put down a war that threatened our liberty and the civilization of the world, would we not be justified now, and is it not our duty now, to join with the Allies in establishing a tribunal for the purpose of preventing another such war.

I regard it as the paramount and supreme duty of this Government to use every power and influence at its command to establish now an international tribunal for the prevention of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This league covenant was planned and framed by the big and brainy representatives of the triumphant armies of civilization. There on the soil of France, drenched with blood and covered with the graves of 4,000,000 of dead, there midst the grief and groans of sorrowing women and children, they dedicated themselves to the cause of justice and the cause of peace.

They proclaimed to the world their intention and determination to substitute for war's bloody butchery the humane processes of international peace. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The war just ended cost the warring nations more than half of the wealth of the world. It cost us nearly $30,000,000,000. It is responsible for every tax burden borne by our people to-day. When the war ended it was costing this Government $2,000,000 an hour—nearly $50,000,000 a day. It is responsible, through battle casualties, disease, and accident, for the death of nearly 300,000 American boys. The voice of wounded soldiers and the blood of murdered millions are crying out to us to destroy the old system that has produced all the murderous wars of the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The lives of human beings are precious in the sight of God. The failure to establish the League of Nations leaves us in the grasp of the old system, enveloped in the darkness and gloom of hopeless despair. We know that the old system has produced all the wars of the past and that if permitted to remain it will produce more wars in the future.

It seems to me that now while the world is still disturbed and distracted because of the war just ended, now while the horrors and the sorrows of that war are still in the minds and hearts of the people, now while 10,000,000 of new-made graves stand as mute testimonials against the old system, now while the blood of wounded millions cries out from the ground against the possibility of leaving human beings in the future to the mercy of the murderous old system, now while the righteous indignation of the civilized world is aroused against monstrous modern war, now while the graves of our dead and the blood on the sod are sending their protests against war up to God—now, now is the time to establish a League of Nations for the promotion of peace and the prevention of war. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, after listening to the remarks of the talented and eloquent gentleman from the South [Mr. HEFLIN], there comes to my mind the old saying that—

> God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform.

Before the President of the United States started out on his memorable trip over this country in his attempt to coerce the United States Senate, in a speech on the floor of this House I asked that the President tell the truth to the people of the United States about the League of Nations, and we see to-day the great Senator and Democratic leader from the home State of the gentleman who has just spoken trying to find some way to agree to reservations, to disconnect from the peace treaty the abominable League of Nations. I am an American, and so are you gentlemen over there, and may I call your attention to the burning words of America's first great President, George Washington, who said:

> Why forget the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world.

But you are getting away from the bearings of the fathers. You are forgetting that your great leader tried to give away with the pen what American soldiers have fought five wars to preserve. Well, thank God for the men of American ideas and American blood who are over at the other end of the Capitol to-day. They are thinking for America. Oh, you talk about stopping war. Why, you are as selfish to-day as you were before the war. Human nature has not changed because of the late war, and you are seeking to tie up America with people who deceived America, according to your own great leader's statement, before one of our blessed boys was murdered overseas. The loot of this war was divided, according to a published statement in the public press, before one American soldier crossed the seas, and at the peace table there sat keen-eyed, bright-brained men with a bag gathering in the loot that had been apportioned before America went into the war.

Ah, talk about the League of Nations preventing war! You know better than that. Your intelligence tells you better than that. I do not believe that the gentleman who just left the floor believes that America ought to have just one vote while England and the British Empire has six. I do not want to analyze the treaty, I have not the time, but I want to call your attention to the fact that we are not afraid to go to the country on the League of Nations, gentlemen from the South [applause on the Republican side], because we believe in America, and we do not care to be tied up to all of the quarrels of the world. We have troubles of our own right here.

Talk about owing so much to those over there! We have loaned them $10,000,000,000, and they owe us a million dollars a day in interest that they have not paid. We have given them $100,000,000, and a bill will be in here in a few days to give them $50,000,000 more, while American manhood and womanhood all over this land is groaning with the burden of taxation. Oh, folks, forget party lines and commence to think for your homeland first. We were called upon to go out and fight for the freedom of the world. Our other wars have been for freedom, and we have won them, and we won this time, but we do not want to be tied up so that we will have to conscript, as your Secretary of War asked in a letter to the Military Affairs Committee not long since, 600,000 or more boys 19 years old every year to be trained. And what for? We just licked the German Empire because they believe in that system, and your Secretary of War would have us saddle that system onto this great people, who have been so happy and prosperous until this time, and then your party tried and you have tried to uphold the hands of the leader who has misled the people of America and bulldozed and bamboozled them by his false promises since 1912! And I close with the words of a real American, Abraham Lincoln:

> Again I admonish you not to be turned from your stern purpose of defending our beloved country and its free institutions by any arguments urged by ambitious and designing men, but stand fast to the Union and the Old Flag.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, it is very seldom that I take up any time in debate upon this floor, but at this time I am moved to express myself in just a few words. How we rejoiced on that eventful day, November 11, 1918, when the message was flashed across the Atlantic Ocean to the American people that the Great War was at an end. Yes, we rejoiced in our souls that the end had come to the great conflict of arms, and how proud we felt of the part that we had in that great fight for a Christian civilization and for righteousness. It is more than a year now since we won the final victory upon the battle field, but we find that our work is not yet done. It was not to be expected that at the end of four years of awful war and bloodshed, which brought so much sorrow and misery and suffering to the world, that we could immediately adjust ourselves back again to the normal peace-time conditions. A war that has brought about such sweeping revolutions and has overthrown kings and dynasties is not likely to leave society just as it was before. So to-day our work is not done, and we are face to face with the great problems of reconstruction, and, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is no time in American life for political parties and their followers to make un-American assaults upon those who hold different political beliefs, and I for one am personally sorry that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] interjected that question into this discussion here this afternoon. But it seems as though that is going to be a part of the propaganda of the Democratic Party in the coming campaign. In that respect it is much to be regretted that the governor of the great State of Ohio, Hon. James M. Cox, in a partisan tirade, which he delivered at the Jackson Day banquet, held here in Washington on the 8th of January, in referring to the Republican success at the polls in 1918, indulged in just such an un-American attack upon the Republicans of our country as was made here a few moments ago by the gentleman from Alabama. Quoting verbatim from a part of his remarks that he made at that time, in referring to the Republican victory in 1918, he said:

On the other hand, Republican leaders gave seemingly sympathetic ear and word, as a shield for poisonous partisanship, to every momentary complaint born of the stirred emotions of the time. The wounds of a bleeding Nation were seized upon with almost ghoulish enthusiasm and an attempt made to turn heartaches and anxieties into bitterness against governmental authority.

Again, he said:

But this was not the worst feature of the campaign. The Republican leaders were cohabiting notoriously with every disloyal group. The result in 1918 was not a Democratic defeat. No political party which denies intercourse with treason suffers a reverse in so doing.

And that is the man who is talked of as a Democratic candidate for President in the next Democratic convention! At the time that Gov. Cox made this statement the American boys, God bless them, whom the gentleman from Alabama has so eloquently pictured on the western front—at the time that he accuses the Republican party of notorious cohabiting with every disloyal group and accusing them of treason to our country, our soldier boys were in the thickest of the fighting on the western front. There are Members of this House here to-day who had boys on that front; Republican Members of Congress who had boys on that front. There were hundreds of thousands of fathers and mothers in this country who believed in the principles of the Republican Party, as enunciated by Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, and Roosevelt, who had boys in the thickest of the fight, on the front battle line at that time, and yet this man, who is a talked-of candidate for President on the Democratic ticket, in a statement that he made on the 8th day of last January, at the Jackson Day banquet, said that "at that time the Republicans of this country were cohabiting notoriously with every disloyal group" and accused them of treason. I personally do not believe that the man who would make such a statement as that is a safe person to have for President of the United States.

Shortly after the declaration of war you know what action this House took, and there was only one position that the Republican Party could take, if it was to be true to its traditions, and that was loyalty to our country. That was the position that the Republican Party took as an organization at that time, and that is the unswerving position that it takes to-day. The Republican Party has never limited its devotion to the flag and loyalty to the country to a time when it has been in power. The Republican Party was born in the dark days when our country was fighting for human rights and liberty. This is no time for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] or for the governor of the great State of Ohio to make un-American assaults on those who hold different political beliefs from them; this is the time when we all should pull together as Americans, not as followers of any political party. We should pull together as Americans for the reconstruction of this great country of ours. I do not contend that I dare speak for the Republican Party or the Republican leaders, but as a member of the Republican Party from the very beginning I have favored the fundamental principles upon which the League of Nations was supposed to be founded.

I am one who believes that we as a Christian Nation of people have some responsibility resting upon us to help maintain the future peace of the world; yet as an American I am not ready to sacrifice these great fundamental principles which have made us the greatest Nation in the world in order to have the President's idea of a League of Nations adopted.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the President himself did not know what was in the covenant of the League of Nations when he brought it to our country, and yet he demanded that the American people, through their representatives in the United States Senate, accept it without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." The American people want to see the peace treaty ratified, but they never will surrender their sovereignty to a foreign power. Let us ratify the peace treaty as soon as possible, but in doing so let us guard well the sacred principles which are near and dear to the hearts of all true Americans, and one of those great principles is the right to govern and manage our own affairs without any interference from a foreign power. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the gentleman from Alabama making his partisan attack upon the Republican leaders in the House and Senate, I wondered if he had forgotten that critical time in 1917, when Congress was trying to pass the legislation that was necessary for the prosecution of the war. I ask him if he has forgotten how the President of the United States was compelled to call to his assistance the Republican leaders in Congress and requested them to take charge of this legislation? He was compelled to take this action by reason of the fact that the Democratic leaders in the House had turned a deaf ear to his appeal and refused to assist him in the most critical time of our Nation's history. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama and Gov. Cox, of Ohio, that the Republicans are just as loyal to our country to-day as they were in 1917, and that the Democratic Party will not get very far with real Americans in charging disloyalty and treason to the Republican Party. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is highly important that we, as Representatives of the American people in Congress, should consider the welfare of our own American life as well as international questions. It seems to me that the President and his followers have, to a great degree, forgotten our own American life. They have been so busily engrossed in international affairs that they could find but very little time to consider the welfare of our own people. So I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama and Gov. Cox, of Ohio, who are both representatives of the American people, that they devote a little more of their time and energy to the consideration of questions that will be of benefit and good to our own people instead of making bitter, partisan, un-American charges against those American citizens who believe in the principles of the Republican Party. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCFADDEN having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3270. An act authorizing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims for damages occasioned by acts for which said survey is responsible in certain cases.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 48.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enroll the amendment of the Senate No. 94 to said bill in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement thereto and had agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 20. Joint resolution giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with very much interest to the discussion here this afternoon on the League of Nations. I am reminded that hitherto in this body but one man, so far as I remember, has said anything from the floor of the House about the League of Nations. I confess that I have been somewhat surprised to find that the most of the leaders on the other side of the House had refrained thus far from discussing that matter at all. As I recall, but one gentleman on the other side of the House has made any speech upon the floor of this House in support of that league, and no man on the Republican side, as I remember, has thus far spoken. Perhaps there has been a reason for that. I do not believe that all of the other Members on the other side of the House, save the gentleman from Alabama, are out of harmony with the idea of a League of Nations properly safeguarded. It may be that other gentlemen have spoken in defense of the league, but my attention has not been brought to it, and I should be very glad if some gentleman would rise and name the men on the other side who have undertaken to defend this League of Nations as it has been presented to the Senate.

I think the reason is very apparent. This treaty-making power is a coordinate power. The President of the United States by virtue of the Constitution has upon him the very onerous duty and responsibility of initiating the making of treaties. President Wilson had a perfect right, in my judgment, to take the initiation of that treaty into his own hands, and while many people thought it unwise for him to go to Paris I have found no man yet who has urgently insisted at least that he was not within his constitutional prerogatives when he went in person to the Paris treaty conference. But having gone there and having done the work and brought it back, it became the duty of the Senate of the United States to exercise its best judgment as to the wisdom of the provisions in this treaty. If it is true, as has been asserted, that to-day a majority of the Senators of the United States in a world crisis have so far forgotten their oath of office as to be willing to be influenced primarily by some partisan consideration when a world problem is involved, then God help the Republic. The charge is not true. You must remember that every Senator took an oath as solemnly as did the President and that each individual Senator has as much responsibility for what is in that treaty if he votes for it as has the President himself. The habit on the floor of this House of charging men who are in public life with being moved by ulterior or partisan motives in the most difficult of all problems, the determination of our relations with the future of the world—I say that habit at least is to be deplored. There are some real reasons why a man perhaps should challenge every statement in that treaty to see whether its provisions are wise when we remember that he who primarily negotiated the treaty had not seen what the gentleman from Alabama has just told us was inevitable, that the great current of human events was surely bearing us toward war and that it was inevitable.

When the leadership of this Nation did not see as we stood upon the brink of that mighty crisis, is it strange that men are unwilling to believe that the same leadership sees with wiser vision and clearer perspective than those who gave birth to the Nation and the other patriotic men who have preserved to us the inestimable privileges which we now enjoy? Then, too, the American public is not altogether ignorant now in regard to the provisions of the treaty or of the conditions under which it was made. Even the great leader who negotiated the treaty has said that he was not aware of the secret treaties that had been entered into between the allied powers, and when he got over to Europe he found that Africa had been parceled out to Italy and to England and to France. The whole continent, with 176,000,000 people, had been parceled out over the table by the men who were controlling the inner secret relationship, and that stood. And then, too, he found that a secret treaty had been entered into which disposed of the Shantung Peninsula, and, though reprobating the principle involved, yet that stood. And so there is reason to believe that as much as in the settlement of any other treaty at the close of a great war it was a matter of barter and trade. And so, with England fixed in her control of Egypt, fixed in that she shall receive the German colonies, and with Italy fixed in her possession and France fixed in her possessions, it is not strange that a Senator, after taking an oath to support the Constitution, should be unwilling that this country should obligate itself permanently to hold those possessions in the hands of the people to whom they had been assigned in that treaty? And so, while declamation is sometimes cheap and sometimes easy, there are facts, difficult, stubborn facts, connected with the negotiation of that treaty that it well behooves any Senator to study carefully, and when he thus studies it and has confidence that there is any danger to the future of this country, it is his sworn duty to oppose its ratification without proper reservation. Personally I have hoped that out of this awful war there might come some understanding by which the dangers of war might be less than they have been in the past. I have hoped and I still hope that in some way these proper reservations may be adopted and that the treaty may be ratified.

For I tell you frankly, gentlemen, I do not believe that from the moment it was submitted to the Senate it has ever been a proper thing for partisan discussion. I still believe it is too big; that it ought to be settled, and settled before long, by a wise preservation of American rights. If that may not be, if stubbornly, persistently, the power that alone can act still insists that the judgment and the conscience and the reason of those Members of another body who are opposed to ratification without reservations, if the man who alone can settle it insists, then it is a proper subject for political discussion. It is strange that when Members arise on the floor of this House they question motives if the views expressed do not happen to conform to their individual opinions or their political necessities. There is a better way. Now, I would be very glad, indeed, if gentlemen from the other side would enter into a discussion of the merits of the treaty, and particularly in defense of article 10 and in defense of the fact that the British Government has six votes and that the American Government will have but one.

It will not do, gentlemen, to imagine that oratory and eloquence, that rhetoric and brilliant periods, will in any way settle this proposition. It will be perfectly proper for gentlemen to discuss fearlessly and honestly, as they will, the merits of this proposition, instead of upbraiding others for being hypocritical.

The merits of this proposition involve both the League of Nations and the treaty of peace. The two are so interwoven that the league in its present form would permanently set its seal of approval for all time on every injustice in the treaty itself. This it is too late to avoid, we are told. If that be true, then the league will not only sanction the wrong but bind itself in perpetuity to see that wrong is never righted. It is this binding of the Republic to permanent participation and responsibility for the continuance of any injustice that may have been done in the making of the treaty to which some Senators object. To say the least the question ought to be open to discussion and to the full recognition that there are two sides to that question. There are many other reasons put forth by gentlemen of undoubted loyalty which these gentlemen say make it impossible for them to vote for the treaty in its present form. The whole question involves the history and institutions of the Republic.

The development of this Republic is the most stupendous experience of the human race in the last 400 years. Those who wrought it out are the most striking personalities of modern history. Their safeguarding of the individual right has no parallel in any other country. Their limitations on themselves shows forth an absolute dedication of all that they were and all that they hoped to be to the good of their country. They wanted only that its rights should be respected; that its people might, unmolested, work out their own destinies; that they might keep from all entangling alliances; that they might address themselves to the problem of self-government. Early in our history there were those who would have entangled us with France against England. Happily, as we now see, we escaped that entanglement. But it took the courage of a Washington and the wisdom of his advisers to prevent it. We took the position that we would not fight save in defense of our own rights; at the same time we said to all the world we would scrupulously respect the rights of every other people.

The Republic was born right. There was world unrest then, as now. Right, liberty, freedom were words to conjure with. Self-determination and self-government were in the hearts of the people of Europe, as well as in those of America. The setting of the two peoples was entirely different. It was a difference due not only to physical surroundings but to an inheritance which made the American colonists capable not only of self-determination but of self-government after the determination had been made.

Self-determination and self-government are different. Self-determination may be given to any people. Self-government is born of character and experience. Self-determination may result in any kind of government. Mexico has a self-determined government; Haiti has a self-determined government; Russia has a self-determined government. They lack either character or experience, possibly both. Self-government means intelligence, wisdom, self-restraint, sense of responsibility, as well as sense of privilege.

The only self-government worthy the name is due to the building of an essential structure formed on the eternal principles of the inalienable rights of man, accompanied by duties that are also inalienable. The agitator may mouth of rights. It is as indispensable that he study the question of duty. Sense of duty has its origin in responsibility. Responsibility has its genesis in the recognition of the rights of others. Rights without obligations are will-o'-the-wisps, the fantasy of a distempered mind, the orgy of a disordered intellect, the chaos of irreligious, immoral vaporings.

These truths were perceived clearly by the founders of the Republic. The Huguenots of the Carolinas, the royalists of the established church of Virginia, the Quakers of Pennsylvania, the Catholics of Maryland, and the Puritans of New England were the determining factors in the spiritual setting of the American people. They claimed the right of religious freedom, of intellectual freedom, of self-governing freedom. Never for a moment did they separate from these rights the duties consequent upon them to themselves and to their posterity. Their ancestors linked with the birth of the Christian religion. Theirs was the ancestry that held through the centuries to the convictions of purity and holiness that were given to the world by the Nazarene and His apostles. Of that ancestry they were proud. These fathers of the Republic were forced to brave the dangers of an unknown sea and thread the maizes of an unknown continent.

They brought civilization with them. The Puritan pact was framed on the Mayflower. It was a constitution of a people already fitted for self-government. They were educated men. The church, the town, and the school were erected in the wilderness. They were capable not only of self-determination, but of self-government. Back of their ancestry, their religion, their traditions, their convictions was their abiding faith in a just God who overruled the destinies of nations. At heart these progenitors of the American Republic held to every part that has made for liberty in the Republic.

We have not outgrown them nor those who followed after. The same sun still shines, the same physical processes are still at work, the same spiritual laws still hold. All of us are indebted to the past. Its literature, its institutions, its laws, its lessons in government, its sufferings, its achievements, have all come down to us as a rich and noble heritage. The world has grown through the movements of the nineteenth century. The folks of the world live closer together than ever before. This we all recognize, but fail to understand that the storm and the tempest, the lightning's flash and the thunder's roar, the roar of the torrent and the power of the flood are as of old. So, too, a so-called new day has brought the peoples of the world closer together. The printing press has made the literature of the past, the history of the past, the government of the past, as of yesterday. In the thought of to-day the mass of mankind is nearer to all the people of the past than ever before. Their hopes, their ambitions, their failures, what they have wrought, the purpose they had in mind, all these are ours. On this continent under this flag this day we can compare all that has been and all that is and the processes that have determined a history of every country in the world. On the Continent of Europe Spain has run her course, her foreign possessions are lost to her forevermore. Great Britain still holds, but in the recent war her Government was shaken to the foundations. Italy and Germany and Austria were leagued together for mutual protection and advantage. Russia and France and England were likewise leagued to maintain the balance of power. Russia is in utter chaos, Austria is dismembered, Turkey as still the plague spot of the East, is recognized as a European power, Germany has been thwarted in her ambitions.

The whole course of European diplomacy has led only to destruction. Japan, young in the New World's organization, is steadily extending her territory and realizing her ambitions in the same way in which England has become mistress of the seas and caused her flag to float on every continent and in the isles of the sea.

Italy hesitated long and entered on the side of the Allies when promised an extension of her territory. The statesmanship of Europe in its wisdom has failed. The conditions of the middle classes would indicate that up to 1914 Europe had a set of primary interests quite different from our own. But one great people in the world drawn into the war simply and only to protect their own most sacred rights have no unholy ambitions to gratify, no indemnities to collect, no selfish interest to subserve. How does it happen that we find ourselves in this happy position? Is it due to chance or is it due to set principles? Is it due to the wisdom and self-restraint and sense of duty or is it due to circumstances over which we had no control? Things do not happen. Rather is our situation due to the steady, persistent, wise, and beneficent course our people have followed. There are those who say that we must change our course, that we can no longer follow out the course laid down by the fathers of the Republic and followed through a hundred and fifty years of unexampled peace and happiness. It may be that we have come to the dividing of the ways, that henceforth we shall have to abandon this course that has proven so beneficent and launch out into an unknown sea. It would at least be well to take the matter into consideration before we do so. It might be well to wait until the clouds of passion and hate and avarice that hang heavily over Europe shall have been dissipated. It might not be unpatriotic or partisan to ask that, first, this country shall fix its eyes on the pole star of our destiny and determine the precise direction in which we are going. In any event the issues are so tremendous, so freighted with the happiness of our people, that we shall pause long enough to clear the decks, unite the crew, and start the voyage with a clear conviction that we shall reach the port toward which we are aiming. Every humane man desires that war shall cease. He ought to be willing to take some chances that this desired object may be obtained. In the quiet of the home hearthstone he should study to know only his duty. When convinced of that he should not falter. This much we may know.

No harm can come to us or the peoples of the world if the League of Nations shall be so formed that the American people at heart and soul shall be for its perpetuity. Our fathers took time to grow into self-government through 300 years. The union of the Colonies was discussed for 50 years and then came the Revolution. The Articles of Confederation jealously guarded the rights of the States, and powers were not granted until they were seen to be necessary. It took seven years of war in the Revolution and six years of peace after it under the Articles of Confederation to convince the fathers that a closer union was necessary.

The Constitution of the United States was drafted by men who had faith in the common cause. Alike in language, in religion, in political institutions, they had a common ancestry that reached back to the Magna Charta, and yet the Constitution was taken before each State legislature, and not for two years did the last of the thirteen original Colonies ratify the instrument. Thus, fully, freely, critically, its every phrase was subjected to the scrutiny of representatives chosen by the people to challenge the wisdom of the instrument. It was adopted; then began the long critical period, beginning with the decisions of John Marshall, as to what the instrument might mean when practically applied. The interpretation of one of the most vital principles was determined only by the arbitrament of war.

Happily the Government lives, and now, when strong and mighty, a power for good, the greatest moral force in the world to-day, men tell us that a new government with all the nations of the world, in many of whose breasts a vicious fire of malice and hate still burns, that a new government involving surrender of the right to determine our course should be adopted at once by the Senate. Its interpretation is to be left to the council of nine, on which we have but one member. Those who know anything of the powers of the committees can understand that the interests of Europe in this matter are primary, and can easily understand that the interpretation of every article of the treaty may be unconsciously prejudiced. Germany hates us for the course we took during the war. There is no gratitude on the part of England or France or Italy. They assume that the money we loaned, the food we furnished, and the lives we sacrificed, all the efforts we made, were but the fulfilling of our duty to ourselves. They claim that these powers fought our war as well as their own for two years. These are the cold, hard facts that will ever confront that council sitting on the justice of any claim which the United States may present for the repayment of its loan. Does it not behoove us, then, to eliminate from the treaty things that may prove dangerous to the best interests of this country and in turn to the best interests of the world? Would it not be a source of untold misery and woe for the world itself if the course sanctioned by the League of Nations should prove distasteful to our people? Nay, more, would it not be cause for infinite regret if unhappily through haste and overanxiety we should find that a sense of duty to ourselves required that we withdraw? There is an expressed provision that any nation can withdraw when it has fulfilled all of its international obligations. Who is to determine what those international obligations are and when they have been fulfilled?

A group of men sitting at Paris have undertaken to reconstruct the map of Europe. The cause assigned for this action is that a new day has dawned; that old things have passed away. True, this action is taken in the name of the free nations of the world and purports to be a voluntary association of such nations. As a matter of fact, it is forced upon the world by the leading powers that joined in the defeat of Germany. Those powers have undertaken to compose all the difficulties and animosities that have grown up with the centuries. Their wisdom is not to be questioned. The territorial limits which they fix are to be eternal. There are to be no more changes or expansions of territory on the part of any nation which subscribes to the covenant. Austria is to be dismembered, Germany disrupted, Turkey parceled out, the colonies to receive mandatories, and the age of peace and good will toward men is to be ushered in. If this scheme does not work well and any people or group of powers should engage to change the parts settled upon at Paris, then the whole power of the United States is to be used in defense of the league in spite of Congress, in spite of any opposition from the people, in spite of the Executive. An international council shall determine when the people of the United States shall go to war, just how many soldiers from our own homes are to be drafted, just where they shall be sent, and how long they shall remain. This is an abdication of sovereignty on the part of the United States. It may be objected that the judgment of the council of nine must be unanimous before the country would be involved; then one man living in an international atmosphere, thinking of the world and not of his country, out of touch with the people, subject to every ebb and flow of the cross currents of Europe, would be empowered to speak for the Congress, for the Executive, for the judiciary, and for all the people numbering a hundred and ten million. No man can be safely trusted with any such power. Such a man would ultimately have no country. He would be a citizen of the world. Patriotism to him would become provincialism.

Those who advocate the acceptance of the League of Nations as drafted are charging that any man who may hope to amend it, to clarify it, or even to question the possibility of a league seeking the ends proposed, is moved only by partisanship. In other words, the proponents of the league say: "We are good, accept our goodness; we are wise, accept our wisdom; we are statesmen, accept our statesmanship, or be anathema."

The horror of the late war has led us all to wish that reason and conscience might rule the world. We were mistaken in 1914 as to the progress the world had made toward universal peace. We understood but little of the conditions in Europe. We failed entirely to sense either the causes or the magnitude of the struggle. We thanked God we were 3,000 miles away. In 1916 we still "thanked God that He had kept us out of war." We were asked to be neutral even in thought. So late as October, 1916, President Wilson himself, in his Shadow Lawn speech, spoke as follows:

> I am not expecting this country to get into war. I know that the way in which we have preserved peace is objected to, and that certain gentlemen say that they would have taken another way that would inevitably have resulted in war, but I am not expecting this country to get into war partly because I am not expecting those gentlemen to have a chance to make a mess of it.

Scarcely had the echoes of that campaign died away when we were called to Washington in special session to declare war against Germany. War was declared. We justified that declaration of war to our constituents by showing that the rights of this country had been ruthlessly disregarded; that already the submarine, the demon of the sea, in German hands had destroyed our property and sent to an untimely grave at the bottom of the sea men, women, and children of our common country. We justified our action before our constituents on the ground that war with Germany was next to our own self-preservation. Indeed, no man could justify involving this great country in war save for the preservation of its rights on land and sea. A Member of Congress takes a solemn oath to defend the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance of his office. If one should vote to plunge the country into war on any other ground than the preservation of the rights of its citizens under the Constitution and the laws of the country, he would violate the oath of office.

The eastern question is not a new question. For decades Turkey has robbed and murdered Christians in Armenia. Much as we may deplore the situation of those people, yet no statesman has ever dared to suggest that the Congress of the United States or the executive department had any right to chastise the Government of Turkey for so doing. Citizens of the United States have been robbed and murdered in Mexico and trade with that unhappy country has been all but suspended, yet no humanitarian appeal for interference in that unhappy country has emanated from the White House. Is it possible that a group of intellectuals meeting in a palace in Paris for a few months are able to agree upon the world document that shall prevent war? Already the seeds of future wars have been sown in the settlement of the treaty between Germany and the Allies. We heard much of the freedom of the seas. Great Britain wins by being guaranteed undiminished control. We hear much of a league of free nations. Great Britain wins by having six votes to one of the United States or of any other power. Colonies were to be self-determining; Great Britain wins the major part of the former German colonies for trade and exploitation. Egypt is confirmed in her position; Great Britain secures greatly increased influence in the East. She secures reparation for injuries and losses to civilians. The league guarantees to Great Britain the full integrity of her empire on land and domination of the sea. Wherever the British flag floats, from the westernmost coast of Ireland to the farthest regions of the Indies on the east, from the northernmost point of Labrador to Australia and the islands of the Southern Sea, under this League of Nations that flag shall float for evermore.

Some one may object that the league guarantees protection to the interests of the Empire only when assailed from without. This means that no part of the British Empire could hope to receive any assistance from any outside power in case it declared its independence without that power at the same time declaring war against the whole league. No such help as France gave us in 1778 could be expected in the interest of any nations struggling for liberty. Ireland must forever remain an integral part of the British Empire. Her possessions in South Africa, in America, in India, in the Continent of Europe, and in the islands of the sea will constitute Great Britain an Empire whose far-flung flag will float in every land and on every sea. There can be no other like her for all time.

To France has been given Alsace-Lorraine and the Saar Valley and a barrier all along the Rhine against another German attack. Added to this she has secured reparation for injuries and losses to civilians. Belgium wins more territory, renewed independence, and compensation for injuries and losses in the war. Italy wins Italia irrendenta, the Alpine frontier, and control of the Adriatic Sea; in addition to that a huge indemnity for losses in the war. Japan wins the German islands in the Pacific. She is confirmed in her control over China and given a free hand in Asiatic Russia. The United States wins not at all. She loses. The friendship of Italy, Japan, and China has been sacrificed. The power of self-defense has been taken away. This country will not long have the right to determine the size of its Army and Navy nor the right to make treaties at will. Our country is forever prohibited from minding her own business. That is the League of Nations indorsed by Woodrow Wilson and his apostles. And yet they claim that there is no partisanship in this blind indorsement or this fulsome eulogy of the President. How does it happen that some newspapers are for anything that the self-appointed agents at the peace conference may propose? Is there no partisanship in their blind support of whatever terms the treaty may contain? Are they moved by only patriotic impulses when they charge that even a free and full discussion is out of harmony with the best interests of this country. The Senate has been ignored in only that it has been told plainly that it would be put in the same category with Germany so far as the acceptance of the treaty is concerned. The President himself threatened that he would purposely interweave the League of Nations with the treaty of peace with Germany; that no peace with them could be secured unless along with it the league should be ratified. That is a challenge to the self-respect, the judgment, the conscience, the reason of a coordinate body of the Government especially named by the Constitution as part of the treaty-making power. So autocratic, so high-handed, so imperious, so egotistical has been that attitude of the President that the personal element involved in the treaty of peace is in danger of overshadowing the merits of that document. The treaty of peace drawn by Mr. Wilson and his own chosen satellites is ratified in the minds of some even before its provisions are fully known. Is it not partisanship of the blindest sort? Is it not an abdication of judgment and a sycophantic attitude for any man to take in order to uphold the hands of the leader of his party?

The men who laid the foundations of the Republic were jealous of centralized power. Under the administration of Great Britain they had been subjected to a power that could reach immediately and directly from the throne and touch the individual citizen. With this in view, their first draft of the Constitution guarded so well the liberties of the States that it proved to be nothing more than a rope of sand in enforcing national obligations; yet the Revolution was fought out under that instrument. Six more years, from 1783 to 1789, were necessary before the people were willing to sacrifice part of that independence that a more effective Government might be instituted. For a hundred years the Colonies had experience in self-government. The Revolution made clear their interdependence. Their common language, their common religion, their common social institutions, their nearness to each other, their common dangers, and their common experiences made possible the Union. In the draft of the Constitution of the United States these people, who had already suffered in the common cause, who had already had like experiences in self-government, whose boundaries were contiguous, met at Philadelphia and framed the Constitution of the United States. What wealth of experience those men had had. What necessity was upon them for the immediate solution of the difficulties and dangers that threatened to annul all the suffering and sacrifices the people of the Colonies had endured, and yet so calm, so quiet, so dignified, so wise were they that they spent four months in framing the instrument, having before them the Articles of Confederation under which the Government was then organized. These men not only had in view the amendments which they desired to secure but an instrument that had proven inadequate, but that had been thoroughly discussed at least two years before the Constitutional Convention met, so that their work was not hastily done. This Constitution was ratified by the representatives of each State elected for that express purpose, and only after two years of thorough and exhaustive debate and with the express understanding that the instrument would be amended in at least 10 important particulars. There was no haste; no one man endeavored to impose his own will on these States without ample time for full discussion and the weighing of every important item in the Constitution. Yet we are asked quickly to indorse a League of Nations made up of peoples differing in religion, language, in liberty, in social customs, in governmental ideas, having deep-seated enmity and smarting under real and fancied grievances. We are asked, I say, to indorse such a league without question, without discussion, without judgment of its far-reaching consequences, or be accused of partisanship. This attitude by the blind indorsers of the league is the most contemptible, pharisaical, and egotistical that could be imagined. The Constitution of the United States was a growth in the minds and hearts of a homogeneous people. Mere paper constitutions are the product of intellectuals who sense neither the experience necessary in directing the government of the people nor the dangers incident to the yoking together in one heterogeneous mass of bodies of people ideally different; men who judge every people by the wisdom and self-restraint of the people with whom they live. Mexico has a constitution as free and liberal and wise in its provisions as the Constitution of the United States. That written document does not keep that unhappy people from constant revolution. The black Republics of Haiti and San Domingo have constitutions and laws as ideal as the Constitution and laws of the United States. These constitutions and laws have not saved them from utter failure in government. Every Republic of South America has modeled its constitution after that of the United States, and while they slowly emerge into stable, efficient Governments they are not yet free from frequent and destructive insurrections. Yet it is urged that Austrian republics born yesterday, German republics about to be born, Turkish republics waiting the mandatory of the United States Government, free Governments in the Far East, China, Japan, and India are ready and eager, Afghanistan and Siberia—that all these people, so widely different, so antagonistic, may be compelled to unite under a paper constitution so that their mutual antagonisms, enmities, and grievances shall not lead to war. Rather would it seem that the effort to force the whole world into one huge supergovernment, that the final grant of appeal, the nine nations that dominate the world to-day—rather, I say, would it seem that such a covenant would induce war instead of preventing it. Our fathers studied carefully, moved slowly and cautiously, in creating a Republic; as carefully and cautiously its destinies have been guided by those into whose hands those destinies were committed. Concerned with our own affairs, we are interested to know what is best for our own people and what is right toward other people of other nations. The wisdom of our course thus far has been questioned. By adhering to that course the United States, ever the greatest moral power in home government, has come to be the mightiest power.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, on Monday of this week there was organized and set up in the State of Kansas for the first time in this country a high court for the settlement of industrial disputes. Knowing the general interest among the Members in that great subject which everywhere presses for solution, I am asking to take a few moments of your time to make a brief statement about it. I do not have the time to enter into any detailed discussion of the law, though I am very sure you would all be interested in it. But I am going to ask consent, when I have finished, to insert as a part of my remarks a very brief synopsis which I have made of the Kansas law. For I firmly believe, gentlemen, that within the months that are just ahead of us you are going to hear very much in this country concerning the Kansas "experiment," if you please to call it that, with reference to the settlement of industrial controversies and the direction of industrial life.

May I give you a word or two with reference to the history of this legislation? When the coal strike was at its height, and everywhere the situation was becoming critical, and particularly so in parts of my own State where coal is largely the only fuel available, the State took over the mines, under receivership proceedings, and Gov. Allen called for volunteers to operate them. Thousands of the young men of Kansas responded, and production was just getting well under way when the strike came to a close. That whole situation so focused the attention of the people upon the seriousness of the industrial question and its sinister possibilities that Gov. Allen called a special session of the legislature for the purpose of considering it.

He read a strong message urging the establishment of an industrial court and a bill of the sort was ready for introduction on the opening day. The session was a unique one. Men of National as well as State prominence were invited to address the legislature on the subject, and both sides were heard fully. On final passage the bill received all but four votes in the senate and all but eight in the house. In this connection I think it proper to put into the RECORD the fact that the measure, which is comprehensive and very carefully drawn, is largely the work of W. L. Huggins, member of the State public utilities commission, assisted by Senator Francis C. Price, both able lawyers, well known in the State for many years. Mr. Huggins has been appointed presiding judge of the court.

Now, in brief, the provisions are as follows:

There is set up a court of three members, appointed by the governor, and this court is given large powers of adjustment in matters of wages, hours, and living conditions, in industries having to do with the manufacture of food products, clothing, and the production of fuel, or the transportation of food, clothing, or fuel, and in public utilities generally. The court is to hear complaints, on petition of either party, where disagreement exists threatening the public peace or public health. And upon its own initiative the court has power to intervene where public welfare demands it and in emergency take over and operate temporarily the industries and utilities named. A square deal to both capital and labor is guaranteed and effort made to safeguard the public interest in these essential industries and utilities. Conspiracies of operators or of employees to suspend or limit the operation of these essential industries in a way to jeopardize the public welfare are penalized. Appeal is provided to the supreme court of the State.

It would be foolish, I realize, for anyone to predict that every provision of this Kansas law will be found to be justified by experience, or to say that the law may not have to be changed in very many respects, but I do say that this Kansas court of industrial relations is the first large attempt in this country to deal in a constructive way with those principles and phases of the industrial problem that everywhere seek solution. [Applause.]

It is a fine piece of pioneering in a great field. Out of the great heart of the Middle West, which pulses always with virile, wholesome American life, comes the first clear note in the midst of all this industrial discord. [Applause.] And will you pardon a touch of State pride when I call your attention to the fact that Kansas, pioneer in many a great movement, is still running true to form? [Applause.]

In conclusion may I say just a word or two in general with reference to the labor question? What is in store for the world after the upheaval through which it is still passing no man can tell. But one of the things that is plain is that out of these turbulent times labor is going to come with a larger share in the fruits of production than it has ever had. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOCH. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HOCH. It seems to me that the man who can not see that is blind to what is going on in the world; and, what is more, I say that the man who can not welcome this better day for labor has something wrong in his make-up.

Let no reactionary spirit, aroused by the un-American doctrines and the utterly indefensible methods of some of the false leaders of labor, sweep us away from a deep, true sympathy with the aspirations of labor and a vigilant guarding of every rightful interest of labor. It is not only a time for respect for law and for courage—these we must have—but also a time for clear thinking. It is only natural that labor should look with great distrust upon any limitation of its use of the old weapons. The old weapons have been necessary in defense against the abuses of capitalistic greed. But surely society, surely civilization, can find something better than the old law of the tooth and the claw, something to supplant the methods of the jungle. It must be so.

I think that somehow clubs must give way to courts in this country. [Applause.] Labor and capital must have a common tribunal, where under orderly process they can get their just deserts without resort to the old methods, with their waste and hardship and their infringement upon the rights of the public. Labor in this country is fundamentally sound and American, and in the long run honest labor, just as honest capital, will best be served under a system of law which offers——

Mr. HULINGS. A square deal.

Mr. HOCH. Yes; a square deal for both and for the public generally. A system, I say, which provides without the loss from strike and lockout the largest possible opportunity for happiness and growth to the laborer and his family, which sets itself like flint against class control, whether of capital or of labor, which holds orderly government inviolate and which is based always on the common welfare. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, watch the Kansas idea grow! [Applause.]

Now, in the synopsis of the Kansas law which I have prepared I omit some provisions, such as that which carries over to this new court the general powers of the State public utilities commission, which it supplants, and give only those provisions having to do with the industrial problem I have been discussing. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks by adding this synopsis of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The synopsis of the law is as follows:

SYNOPSIS OF KANSAS NEW INDUSTRIAL COURT LAW.

1. Declares the following to be impressed "with a public interest" and "therefore subject to supervision by the State" for the purpose of "preserving the public peace, protecting the public health, preventing industrial strife, disorder, and waste, and securing regular and orderly conduct of the businesses directly affecting the living conditions of the people of the State, and in the promotion of the public welfare":

(1) The manufacture or preparation of food products.
(2) The manufacture of clothing.
(3) The mining or production of fuel.
(4) The transportation of food, clothing, fuel.
(5) All public utilities.

2. Declares it necessary in public interest that industries and utilities above named "be operated with reasonable continuity and efficiency." Any willful attempt to hinder, delay, limit, or suspend such continuous and efficient operation "for the purpose of evading the purpose and intent" of the act is declared unlawful.

3. Creates court of three members, appointed by the governor. Three-year term; salary $5,000. Court clothed with all incidental powers of high court, and given wide powers of investigation as to industrial conditions and problems generally. Free access to books and papers.

4. Court to hear controversy in industries and utilities named upon complaint of either party, or of any 10 citizen taxpayers of community, or of attorney general, if it appears that parties are unable to agree and such disagreement threatens continuity or efficiency of service in contravention of public welfare.

5. Court given power to intervene upon its own initiative in industrial controversies when it appears that such controversies threaten continuity and efficiency of service to extent of "endangering the public peace or threatening the public health."

6. Declares that public welfare requires that workers in employments named shall "receive fair wage and healthful and moral surroundings," and that capital "shall have fair return." Court may make orders as to wages, hours, etc., under terms that are "fair and reasonable" and are such as to enable industries and utilities to continue operations. Cases may be reopened for modification after 60 days compliance by either party. Any increase of wages to date back to beginning of action. No court costs to either party.

7. Right of appeal from findings or orders within 10 days to Supreme Court. And industrial court may bring action in Supreme Court to compel compliance with orders.

8. Right of collective bargaining recognized. Unions or associations which incorporate considered legal entities and may be represented by those of their own choosing. To bargain collectively, unincorporated associations must appoint representatives in writing. Collective bargains and contracts must be subject to principle set out in No. 6.

9. Declared unlawful for operators in classes named "willfully to limit or cease operations for the purpose of limiting production or transportation or to affect prices for the purpose of avoiding any of the provisions" of the act. Authority to limit or cease operations to be granted upon proper showing.

10. Declared unlawful for any two or more employees in industries named to conspire to quit employment "for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or suspending operation" or to intimidate others with intent to induce them to quit employment or with intent to prevent others from accepting employment.

11. The right of any individual to quit employment at any time is recognized.

12. Unlawful to discriminate against any employee because of testimony given or action taken before court. Unlawful for two or more to conspire to injure by boycott, picketing, advertising, or otherwise because of any action taken before the court or because of any order by the court.

13. Willful violation of provisions of act or of order of court made misdemeanor, punishable by maximum fine of $1,000 or maximum term of one year, or both. In case of officer of corporation or officer of labor organization willful violation made a felony, punishable by maximum fine of $5,000 or maximum term of two years, or both.

14. Emergency power to court to take over and operate industries and utilities named when suspension or limitation of operation endangers public peace or threatens public health. Owners to receive fair return and employees fair wages during such operation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am at some disadvantage in the consideration of the present bill by reason of the serious illness which has existed in my family for several weeks, as well as being seriously sick myself. Therefore I was not able to attend very many of the hearings on this bill. However, I helped all I could in committee in the preparation of the bill, and I have read the exhaustive report thereon made by our distinguished chairman, Mr. HAUGEN, and the very full and illuminating analysis of the appropriations in the bill by the very able gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] contained in yesterday's RECORD, and before I was taken sick I read the estimates submitted by the department, and therefore I am reasonably well informed as to all the important provisions of the bill. A friend of mine, a Member of the House, said to me this morning, "Well, CANDLER, I am glad to see you able to be out again; I thought the appearance on the floor of the Agriculture bill would cure you." I said, "Yes; to have an opportunity to aid the farmers by helping to pass the very beneficial legislation contained in the Agricultural bill was a splendid tonic for me, which revived my spirits and renewed my strength and brought me back to the House to engage in that good work." [Laughter and applause.] I am glad to hear several of my friends who have preceded me in the discussion of this bill say that they believed the great agricultural interests of the country should have the very first and primary consideration of the Congress.

I have long, as I know you will bear willing testimony, preached that doctrine upon this floor. In fact, during the long service I have had here, through the kindness and generosity of the noble and patriotic people whom I have the honor to represent, I have from time to time voiced this sentiment and urged it upon the consideration of the representatives of the great American people here assembled, and because I am here recognized by all of you, and the people generally, as the farmers' consistent advocate and true friend, my constituents in great numbers, from every part of my district, and from every county in it, are writing me voluntarily that they want me to continue in their service and that they are going to reelect me for another term in Congress.

Mr. KITCHIN. You deserve to be reelected, and I have no doubt your constituents will reelect you. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Thank you, sir.

There is no one interest in all the land that approximates the agricultural interest of this Republic, because of the fact that all other interests are necessarily dependent upon it. When it prospers all other business prospers, and when it is depressed everything else is likewise depressed.

I do not agree with the suggestion made by some who have preceded me, that further reductions should be made in agricultural appropriations. At least no reductions should be made that possibly might cripple the activities of the great Agricultural Department, and thereby retard the development of the agricultural interests of the land. I do not favor any reductions of appropriations in this bill, but trust that they will be maintained and receive your approval and votes, unless it can be made very evident that the specific purpose for which the appropriations are proposed are no longer useful, and I do not believe that can be done. I have insisted in days gone by, and I insist now, that the appropriations in each succeeding bill should be enlarged wherever necessary to keep pace with the development and importance of the business of agriculture, in which so many of our splendid citizens are engaged. [Applause.]

When we come to consider the agricultural interests of America, upon investigation it is found to be the greatest business, putting it upon a business basis, of any business in the land. I saw the other day this account of the value of the agricultural productions of the United States:

American farmers have just completed the most prosperous business year in history, the Agricultural Department showed in announcing that the value of 1919 crops, together with animals and animal products, had reached the enormous and almost inconceivable sum of $24,982,000,000, an increase of $2,500,000,000 over 1918.

This farm turnover represents an average income of nearly $4,000 for each of the 6,000,000 farms in the United States. It is approximately five times as great as the sum the Government is preparing to spend in the current fiscal year.

If applied exclusively to our war debt, it would practically pay it with the year's products and relieve us of that burden. Crops produced 64.1 per cent of the total and animals and animal products the remaining 35.9 per cent. Crops alone are valued at $16,025,000,000, while animals and animal products are estimated at $8,957,000,000.

Looking at these enormous figures you can have some faint conception of what the agricultural business of this country amounts to, and therefore the interest which the American people have in it. As I stated awhile ago, there is no other business at all comparable to it, and therefore when we make the appropriations yearly which are made in the Agricultural bill of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 or more, as the case may be, it is a small expenditure we make for the agricultural development of this great Republic in comparison with the results obtained. I maintain, however, that the appropriations made for agriculture are not in reality an expenditure but, on the contrary, are an investment, because by the use of the money appropriated we stimulate and encourage the production of the results which are shown by the statement which I have just read, showing it to be a good, paying business policy to invest the various sums appropriated to secure the splendid results obtained. It is money well invested and judiciously expended in a continually growing and paying business, to wit, in the business of the Nation's agriculture. [Applause.]

The Agricultural appropriation bill last year carried $33,899,761. The amount carried in the present bill is $30,540,034. The investment of $30,540,034, which is appropriated in this bill for a business which brings to the people of the country the enormous sum of $24,982,000,000 in a single year, is really a small investment for the Government to make to obtain the results produced.

For this reason, as I stated before, I have advocated increases wherever necessary in order that the work of this great department should be carried on without hindrance and keep pace with ever increasing and progressive agriculture. I do not believe any decrease of appropriations for agriculture should be made where any question or reasonable doubt exists as to the necessity for it to carry forward the activities of the department. Where there is a doubt, the doubt ought to be resolved in favor of the department. We ought to know no injury will result before the appropriation is decreased.

All over this country there is a demand for a reduction in the high cost of living, and it is a demand to which we should all listen and bend our every effort to secure every reduction possible in the necessary living expenses of the people. God knows I want to help all the people, and especially those who really need help. [Applause.]

The most effective way to reduce the high cost of living is to increase production in the country, and the object of this bill is to stimulate and increase production. The great trouble now is we have only about a 60 per cent production to supply a 100 per cent demand. The supply of production must be adequate to meet the demand of consumption. So long as the demand for consumption exceeds the available supply, prices will be high, but when the production of the necessaries of life—food, clothing, fuel, and other necessaries—equals or exceeds the demand for consumption the high cost of living can be, and then will be, reduced. Therefore increased production is at least one of the fundamental and most important means by which this high cost of living can be reduced, and it ought to be reduced, and I hope it will be reduced.

During the great World War through which we have just passed the farmers of this land responded patriotically to every call made upon them by the Government of the United States, and they increased production in every nook and corner throughout this great Republic, and fed our own people and the boys in our Army and Navy and those of our Allies. May God ever bless them for the glorious way in which they cheerfully and enthusiastically performed this great national service. [Applause.]

We gave to the Department of Agriculture the additional appropriations necessary to extend the work, in order to help them bring about this increased production, in the bill which I introduced in the House, reported from the Committee on Agriculture, and had the honor to have charge of on the floor of the House, known as the Candler food-production bill. The necessary money was appropriated in that bill to aid in the great and necessary work for production, and the farmers of America furnished the result which we promised you, as members of the Agricultural Committee, would follow the expenditure of the money appropriated by your votes which secured the passage of that measure. The farmers of this country are loyal and true, and they never have in the past, and they never will in the future, fail in their patriotic duty in peace or in war. [Applause.]

Although, as I have already shown, the farmers broke all records during the year 1919 in production, still they are being urged to continue to increase production this year. I have no doubt they will respond to the very utmost of their energies, resources, and ability. They are, however, at this very time confronted with very serious difficulties. Two hundred thousand inquiries were recently sent broadcast to farmers by the Post Office Department, in an effort to ascertain if the department could assist in reducing the high cost of living. Forty thousand replies were received, and they were practically unanimous with respect to three difficulties, to wit: First, scarcity of farm labor, because of the movement from the farm to towns and cities; second, big profits taken by middlemen handling farm products; third, lack of facilities for direct trading between the farmer and the ultimate consumer.

The first difficulty mentioned, that of the scarcity of farm labor, can not be remedied by law. A man has the inherent right to live where he pleases. If he chooses to leave the country and the farm and go to the town or city, no statute can prevent him from doing so. As an American citizen he can live anywhere in America he desires, and follow any trade, vocation, calling, or profession that appeals to him and promises the greatest remuneration for his services. That incentive is really the cause of this trouble. It is general and is due largely to high wages in towns and cities, the widespread demand for labor there, with the improved working conditions and short hours. The Agricultural Department, however, under laws we have passed and appropriations made, does undertake to help in this matter by advising where a scarcity of farm labor exists and where a supply may be obtained, and in aiding those who desire to secure labor and those who desire employment or to change their surroundings to get together for the common good of both parties.

We are attempting through the efforts and activities of the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture, which I am glad to say I helped to establish and for which there is a large appropriation in this bill, to help to solve and to remedy the other two difficulties mentioned, to wit: Big profits taken by middlemen in handling farm products and lack of adequate facilities for direct trading between the producer and the ultimate consumer. This bureau is trying to find a way to cut down the big profits of the middlemen, and to eliminate the middlemen wherever it can be done, and thus bring the producer and ultimate consumer directly together, so that they may trade with each other face to face when possible to do so. The cost of food distribution in this country is too high, and the margin between the price received by the producer and the price paid by the consumer is exorbitant. God grant that we, the servants and representatives of the people, this great bureau, the Department of Justice, and every other agency of the Government may bend every effort and do everything possible to solve, in the interest of all the people, and especially for the benefit of the poor and needy, this intricate, complex, difficult, yet this practical and very important problem of the high cost of living. [Applause.]

In this connection I commend to your earnest consideration and to the careful attention of the American people the following very strong, clear statement of the new Secretary of Agriculture, the Hon. Edwin T. Meredith, of Iowa, who has just recently been appointed by the President a member of his Cabinet and assumed control of the great Department of Agriculture. Now listen. Here is what he says:

FARMERS MUST HAVE HELP TO CUT LIVING COST, SAYS NEW SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Answering questions regarding means for reducing the high cost of living, Edwin T. Meredith, the newly installed Secretary of Agriculture, said yesterday that useless employees, no matter in what line they may be engaged, must be released from nonproductive work and given an opportunity to become producers upon the farm or in the factory.

If this is done, and if jobbers and retailers recognize the harm that must ultimately come from profiteering on the farmer and content themselves with a reasonable profit, he said, the question of the high cost of living will largely solve itself to the permanent good of all. But unless the whole country—all business and all labor—does recognize this as a common problem and do the things necessary to solve it, he continued, "less and less will there be of farm produce to divide among the whole people and higher and higher will go the price of that which is produced.

FARMERS WILL PRODUCE.

"The farmers must certainly produce," said Secretary Meredith. "They have produced and will produce—that is their business. They are on a piece-measure basis; so, given satisfactory conditions, they will do their part, as the farmers of America have in every situation or crisis that has faced the country. It is not a satisfactory condition for the farmer to receive reduced prices for his pork, wheat, hides, while the prices of his machinery, lumber, and shoes are raised. It does not conduce to a pleasant frame of mind on the part of the farmer or spur him to greater production to be obliged to sell his products for half or less than he later sees them sold for at retail.

"The farmers of America," the new Secretary went on, "are willing to assume their part of the responsibilities as American citizens in meeting any problem threatening the welfare and stability of our country, but this high cost of living problem is a mutual one, and they ask that it be approached by all the people as a common problem. They ask that there be an adequate number of producers of wealth, and this includes property and food of all kinds, and only such number of distributors as is necessary to perform the services required.

COUNTRY NEEDS PRODUCERS.

"Let us enjoy in America a highly developed system of distribution, but let us cut out the useless member, the surplus one here and there, and give him an opportunity to become a producer upon the farm or in the factory. Let us have six-tenths of our people in production and four-tenths in distribution, that there may be six-tenths of what a man can produce each day for each of us, rather than have four-tenths in production and six-tenths in distribution, which gives us only four-tenths of what a man can produce each day for each of us. To do this conditions in production must be attractive, farming must be remunerative and offer to a young man who engages in it an opportunity equal to that offered him should he go into a bank, railroad, wholesale, or retail establishment.

"The farmer asks that the laborers in the mines, the factory, and the mills, who are also real producers along with the farmers, make an effort comparable to his to see there is just as little labor expense as possible in each article turned out by their hands, thereby helping the farmers of America, who in turn will help the laborer. This is not inconsistent with the views and desires of the loyal, intelligent laboring men, who recognize the mutual advantage to all in an honest day's work for an honest day's pay. Given this, and the manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers taking a reasonable profit and recognizing the harm that must ultimately come from profiteering upon the farmer, the question of the high cost of living will largely solve itself to the permanent good of all concerned."

That is the first public utterance I have seen from the new Secretary of Agriculture, and it is in reference to a live question and has the right ring to it.

I saw in another statement where he said he would do his best to devise some effective method for the distribution of farm products so as to bring closer together the producer and the consumer for the mutual benefit of each. I am sure we all wish him every success in this effort and in every other effort for the advancement of the agricultural interests and the solution of the problems which will bring to the people comforts, prosperity, and happiness, and in his every effort he will, I am certain, have your help and assistance, and he will surely have mine. [Applause.]

In this connection also I desire to call your attention to the following statements in a memorial issued on January 30, 1920, by the executive heads of six large national farmers' organizations in conference at the headquarters of the National Board of Farm Organizations.

The memorial was drafted by the following executives: W. I. Drummond, of Oklahoma, chairman of board of governors of the International Farm Congress; J. R. Howard, of Iowa, president American Farm Bureau Federation; T. C. Atkeson, Washington representative of the National Grange; R. F. Bower, National Farmers' Union; O. G. Smith, president Farmers' National Congress; and John D. Miller, National Milk Producers' Federation.

Other organizations represented at the conference were the State Farm Bureau Federations of Indiana, Vermont, New Jersey, and West Virginia; the State Granges of Maryland, Massachusetts, Delaware, and New Jersey; the American Cotton Association; the Farmers' Union of Oklahoma, Washington, and Virginia; and the Dairyman's League of New York.

The specific statements to which I call your special attention are these:

Agriculture is the basis of all commerce and industry. The great world need of to-day is production. Production is dependent on labor. The solidarity of labor is such that the wages and hours of labor prevailing in other industries are reflected upon the farm. Prices of food products will be determined accordingly. Under present conditions agricultural production must materially decline, and thus react against the entire industrial system. In view of this recognized economic law, we submit that it will be wise to consider the farm in any industrial plan adopted.

Country and flag first: The first and constant obligation of every citizen, and of every organization of citizens, is undivided loyalty to our country. Its institutions must be protected and its traditions preserved and respected. No conflicting obligations can be tolerated.

Adequate production: The farmers of the United States are continuing their best efforts to produce abundant foodstuffs; and, contending that production in the factories, mines, and mills is second in importance only to that of the farms, they demand of both labor and capital that they, too, shall earnestly and consistently speed up their part of the production so urgently needed.

Profiteering: We condemn in unmeasured terms those who, ignoring the distress their actions cause, and unmindful of the danger signals that are only too apparent, continue to exact excessive profits in dealing in the necessities of life. The sharing of such profits with employees does not correct the evil.

Ownership of railroads: The Government ownership or continued operation of railroads is most emphatically opposed. It is against good public policy and the principles of sound Americanism. We are convinced that any possible emergency calling for such operation has passed; that its continuance is costly, inefficient, and inadvisable. We urge Congress to expedite the enactment of legislation providing for the proper reorganization, recquipment, and control of the railroads under private ownership; that this legislation be as plain as possible and providing as few restrictions and complications as will properly protect the superior interests of the public in the operation of railroads. We are opposed to a Government guaranty of dividends on a Government subsidy.

Governmental economy: Strict economy in public expenditures for all departments of government is essential as is the cutting out of some customs in transaction of public affairs as add expense and delay in rendering efficient service, and the discontinuance of all departments or employees which are not rendering efficient service.

Compulsory military training: We are opposed to compulsory military training and a large standing army in time of peace.

Daylight saving: We commend the act of Congress in repealing the so-called daylight-saving law and oppose any action to revive such legislation by Federal, State, or municipal action.

I voted against the daylight-saving law when it was passed, and of course I voted for its repeal.

I wish I had time to discuss each one of these suggestions in detail, but the time being limited I must not take up too much of it. Therefore, while I urge upon you careful consideration of all these suggestions, because of their importance and the eminent source from which they come to us, suffice it for me at the present time to say that profiteering, wherever it exists, can not be too severely condemned. Whoever takes advantage of conditions to rob his neighbor by profiteering upon him should receive the condemnation of every honest and fair man and deserves and should receive the severe punishment of the law.

Government operation of the railroads has already caused a deficit of over a billion dollars, and there yet remains a deficit of $700,000,000 to be paid. Therefore it has proven to be a very large losing business to date. It was necessary to take them over during the war, but that emergency has now passed, and the President and Congress have determined to return them to their owners, the President by proclamation having fixed March 1, next, as the date upon which to return them.

Compulsory military training, it is variously estimated, would cost from $131,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 a year; besides, it would take the boys between 18 and 21 years old off of the farms and out of the factories and away from home and out of production for four, and possibly six, months in each year, which would cost many millions more in reduced production, when increased production is so much needed. We fought the great World War to destroy militarism, and our forefathers left the Old World to get away from it, and came to this great country, "The land of the free and the home of the brave"; and we do not want to start a policy in times of peace, at such an enormous cost, to encourage and build up militarism and retard the progressive development of real democracy. A reasonably sized Regular Army and the National Guard are sufficient. They met and were victorious in every emergency in the World War, and they can and will measure up to every emergency in the future. No, sirs, no conscription for me in times of peace; no forcible, no compulsory, military service and training now. The fathers and mothers of America—and the boys themselves—have enough of war for the present. Let us avoid war and even the appearance of war ever in the future if possible. [Applause.] So much for those questions for the present. I wish time would permit me to discuss others, but I must not now.

I am anxious for us to get back to normal conditions at the earliest possible moment, and to this end I favor the repeal of the war-time legislation—made necessary by war-time conditions and not necessary in peace times—as rapidly as it can be done with proper consideration and in the exercise of good judgment. Let us get back to peace-time conditions. Would that we could return as soon as possible to the fundamentals as announced by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, and the founders of this Republic. The war is over and the reconstruction period is at hand. You, our Republican friends, clamored for an extra session to pass reconstruction legislation. The President called the extra session. It met May 19 and adjourned November 19, 1919; but you did not present or pass any reconstruction legislation. We have now been in session since December 1, and none is yet presented or passed. You are in the majority and therefore responsible for legislation to the people. The people are restless. They are tired of so much regulation and the inconveniences and hardships of war-time statutes. They want to be restored to the freedom of peace times in business and otherwise and to be relieved of the restrictions and difficulties of war-time legislation, made necessary by war-time conditions. They were willing to stand them during the war, but they want relief now, and should have it. Bring on real reconstruction legislation and we will help you to pass it. [Applause.]

This indeed is a wonderful country, and as American citizens we are all proud of it. Let me call your attention a moment to our most remarkable balance of trade:

UNITED STATES TRADE BALANCE SHOWS BIG ADVANCE—NEARLY $2,000,000,000 INCREASE OVER GREAT BRITAIN.

WASHINGTON, February 2.

America's trade balance against Europe increased by $4,435,410,566 in 1919, figures issued to-day by the Department of Commerce showing exports from the United States were $5,185,980,350, while imports were $750,569,784.

The trade balance in favor of the United States over the United Kingdom piled up during the year was $1,969,988,783, that over France $769,497,587, and that over Italy $383,628,396. A trade balance of $82,137,085 also was registered over Germany.

Exports to the United Kingdom in 1919 were valued at $2,279,178,048, and imports from the United Kingdom were valued at $309,189,265. The figures for France were $893,368,996 in exports and $123,871,409 in imports, while for Italy they were $442,676,842 in exports and $59,048,446 in imports. Exports to Germany were valued at $92,761,314 and imports were valued at $10,624,229.

Our balance of trade for 1919 is $4,435,410,566. Farm products contributed largely in securing this balance in favor of America. The cotton of the South aided it very materially. The farmer in this as well as in everything else is doing his full duty. A few years ago we were in debt to the nations across the seas. Now they are in debt to us many billions of dollars. The center of finance was over there, now it is over here. They were carrying our commerce, now we carry it largely ourselves. Thank God, the Stars and Stripes are triumphant in war and in peace, and prosperity beams forth from every star and gleams from every stripe, and every true and loyal American citizen rejoices to stand beneath its beautiful folds. May it ever wave triumphant and victorious to bless mankind. [Applause.]

The farmers have helped this country and been loyal to that flag, and when they always show that disposition we, as their Representatives on the floor of the House of Representatives, ought to always help them under all circumstances in order that these great results may be continued.

My friends, I would be glad to discuss other matters, but time forbids. I have already spoken longer than I intended and taxed my present condition too much, but I wanted to present these general ideas and views with reference to this bill and the general agricultural situation in the land for your consideration during the further consideration of the bill when it is read by line, paragraph, and section, to appeal to you to stand by the Agricultural Committee, who propose this measure, and see that it is promptly passed through the House of Representatives. While I believe that there ought to be in some instances increased appropriations in this bill for some of the purposes where decreases have been made, still the bill as a whole is a good measure, and I commend it to you and I trust it will receive your favorable support and your votes to insure its passage. [Applause.] Now, let me say, in conclusion, that I am in favor of economy. My whole record in Congress will prove that I am always for economy. I am opposed, in private and public life, to waste and extravagance. I will join you, my fellow Members, in eliminating all unnecessary appropriations wherever they may be found. I believe no more money should be spent than is necessary to secure good and efficient administration of governmental affairs. I can not state my position too strongly on that subject. I do not, however, believe in false or unnecessary economy being practiced on the farmer or the agricultural interests of America. The appropriations are small considering the great business involved. I do not believe any appropriations we make for other purposes bring anything like the beneficial returns as do those made for agriculture. Therefore do not let us be extravagant at any time, but in these agricultural appropriations let us show a liberal spirit in a great cause. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I read in the memorial submitted to Congress by the several farmers' organizations heretofore referred to by me this language:

This is the best country the sun shines on. Its opportunities are boundless. Its Government is the best in the world. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with it. A people who would injure or destroy it are unfit to live under the protection of its flag.

A beautiful and true statement and one in which I fully agree. All honor to that flag which ever floats above our Speaker as he presides over this House during our deliberations. God bless and preserve this wonderful country and our loyal people, and help us as their Representatives to do our full duty in His fear, and for His glory, and for the benefit of mankind. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman indicate when we are going to rise?

Mr. HAUGEN. I had an idea that we might get through with the general debate this evening. We will not need much time on this side.

Mr. RUBEY. In the language of my old friend from Illinois, it is 5 o'clock, and I think we had better rise.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman pointed out the importance of this bill and asked for time. The gentleman ought to be willing to stay for another hour.

Mr. RUBEY. There are only a few here. We can not finish it to-night. I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. BLAND of Virginia, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MACGREGOR, for five days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LINTHICUM, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3270. An act authorizing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims for damages occasioned by acts for which said survey is responsible in certain cases; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an address delivered by myself last week before the Editorial Association of Indianapolis.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address which he delivered before the Editorial Association of Indianapolis last week. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. FESS. On the state of the country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, February 6, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 6, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thee because we are seekers after truth, and Thou art the center of truth. We come asking Thy guidance and blessing to-day as we discharge the duties of this day. We would establish our Nation in righteousness, and we pray Thee to reveal to us Thy will, that our Nation's laws may be righteous, that the spirit of our Nation may be after the pattern that Thou hast shown to us in the revelation of Thyself. Guide us in the duties of the day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of useless papers on the files of the Department of Commerce devoid of historic interest and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter transmitting a resolution adopted by the first national conference of laymen held under the auspices of the Interchurch World Movement, in Pittsburgh, lately, referring to the League of Nations and other matters.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT OF NORTH AMERICA,
New York City, February 3, 1920.

Hon. GILBERT H. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HITCHCOCK: I am sending you inclosed, by special delivery, copy of resolutions passed by the first national conference of laymen held under the auspices of the Interchurch World Movement, at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa., January 31, February 1 and 2.

This body was perhaps the most distinguished group of its kind ever brought together under the auspices of the Protestant Church. Thirty States were represented and 29 denominations. The individual delegates included governors of States, presidents of the largest industrial concerns in the Nation, and outstanding labor leaders.

Respectfully, yours,

DANIEL A. POLING,
Director Laymen's Activities Department.

"Overwhelmed by the situation overseas, as revealed in the survey and emphasized by the messages of this national laymen's conference, which has brought together representative men from 30 States and 29 Protestant denominations; convinced of our failure to measure up to our opportunities and to meet the high expectations of the distraught peoples who looked to us for leadership and life, we call upon our representatives in Congress, regardless of party affiliation, to act at once on the treaty of peace and the League of Nations. We believe that in prompt and favorable action lies the succor of millions and the peace of the world.

"We further request that the sum of not less than $125,000,000, as recommended by Mr. Hoover and Secretary Glass, be made immediately available for the starving peoples of Europe and the Near East.

"GEORGE BENSON FEREBEE, Chairman, Virginia.
"DANIEL BAKER, Maryland.
"HARRY L. BOND, West Virginia.
"FLEMING REVELL, New York.
"C. M. RODEFER, Ohio."

EMBARGO ON BOX CARS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the United States Railway Administration has ordered an embargo on box cars effective February 8, 1920, forbidding the transportation of building material. In Chicago alone it will cause a suspension of $35,000,000 worth of contracts and put out in idleness 150,000 laborers and tradesmen who are directly connected with this industry.

I have a communication from the Chicago Building Material Exchange, representing the entire industry in Chicago. I present it and ask that it be read by the Secretary, in the hope that the publicity will attract enough attention to modify this order of the Railroad Administration.

There being no objection, the Reading Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 5, 1920.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Railway Administration embargo on box cars effective February 8, forbidding transportation of building materials, will result in complete suspension of $35,000,000 building construction and idleness of over 150,000 tradesmen and laborers in Chicago. Building cessation during war caused most acute housing conditions, resulting in present dissatisfaction, unrest, high cost of living, renting, and home owning. During October embargo all yards and warehouses were emptied of materials otherwise stored for winter deliveries; now receiving less than 30 per cent of material required for work under construction. Urge movement in seaports and local yards now congested with thousands of empty and unloaded cars unmoved for weeks and months. Urge placing embargo on use of cars for all commodities excepting such as are absolutely essential for food, fuel, clothing, and shelter, and pray for immediate revocation of present embargo as to building materials.

CHICAGO BUILDING MATERIAL EXCHANGE,
Representing all Chicago and Cook County Dealers.
LEMUEL F. OWNE, Business Manager.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BECKHAM. I present copies of resolutions adopted by the Senate of the State of Kentucky, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN SENATE,
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

Be it resolved by the Senate of Kentucky, That—

Whereas a discriminatory system of freight rates has been maintained and enforced for many years by the railroads which has hindered and retarded the growth of business and industry in Kentucky, except in the cases where the business or industry appealed exclusively to southern markets; and

Whereas said hindrance is due to the fact that under said system the Ohio River is recognized and treated by the railroad-rate officials, and even by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as an obstacle or barrier to commerce moving north from Kentucky, and a freight rate is added on all such commerce as it crosses the Ohio River, although no added charge is fixed upon any of the commerce originating north of the river and moving into Kentucky or the South; and

Whereas Kentucky having the Ohio River for its northern boundary is, by the above artifice, made a border State in the matter of freight-rate schedules, and is, therefore, the chief sufferer under the above indefensible discrimination, and the effect of which has been to restrict her business and industry to one-half of her natural markets, and at least two-thirds of the people who would otherwise be her customers are deprived of that privilege—

Our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States are therefore requested to use their utmost endeavors to have such laws enacted by the Congress and such rules adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission as will give to the Ohio River like effect on all commerce crossing same without regard to whether it originated north or south thereof.

Adopted January 21, 1920.
A copy.

Chief Clerk of Senate.

IN SENATE,
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

Joint resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Kentucky to use their influence in relieving car shortage in Kentucky, as it affects the production of the Kentucky coal mines.

Be it resolved by the Senate of Kentucky (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That—

Whereas there is a serious shortage in the supply of coal cars to the coal mines of Kentucky and that by reason of such shortage a great many of the mines are unable to operate as much as two days per week on an average. And this lack of shipping facilities is preventing Kentucky from supplying the market with anything like the amount of coal which her large fields and extensive developments entitle her to, and it is also discouraging further development of the mines so that production may be increased and the urgent need of the public for coal be supplied; and

Whereas the foregoing shortage of coal cars is causing severe hardship upon the operator, the miner, and the public as well: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of Kentucky (the House of Representatives concurring therein) respectfully request her Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States to exert all of their power and influence toward the immediate relief of said shortage of coal cars, and take such action as in their opinion is necessary to secure a prompt and adequate supply of cars to take care of the production of Kentucky mines so that they may supply the very pressing demand of consumers everywhere; and be further

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President of the Senate to act jointly with a like committee to be appointed by the House to take this car-shortage question up with the railroads, and, if need be, with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and our Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress.

Adopted in senate January 23, 1920.

Concurred in by house of representatives January 28, 1920.

[SEAL.] W. B. O'CONNELL,
Chief Clerk of Senate.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Washakie County, Wyo., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Marion County; of Post No. 1, World War Veterans, of Topeka; of Local Lodge No. 118, United High Explosives Workers' Union, of Pittsburg; and of Farmers' Union No. 1688, of Groveland, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a resolution adopted by Ernest A. Love Post, No. 6, Arizona Branch, American Legion, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there now exist within the United States organizations which are against our Government and against the forces of law and order, and which seek to overthrow our Government and to destroy the loyal citizens of our land; and

Whereas these organizations and their members carried on their work and propaganda during the time our country was at war, which resulted in the slowing down of the production of munitions and ships and other war materials, and directly resulted in the death of many of our comrades while in the service; and

Whereas on the 11th day of November, 1919, the first anniversary of the signing of the armistice, the I. W. W.'s fired upon and murdered four of our comrades of the American Legion living in Centralia, Wash., while they were peaceably parading in honor of our victorious arms; and

Whereas the I. W. W.'s and all other radical organizations of a similar kind are diametrically opposed to every ideal for which the American Legion stands and for which we fought and for which thousands of our comrades laid down their lives; and

Whereas the I. W. W.'s, in firing upon the American flag and American Legion at Centralia, Wash., November 11, 1919, not only murdered four of our comrades and jeopardized the lives of many others but brought discredit upon the dignity of the United States and challenged the principles of law and order for which the American Legion stands: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Ernest A. Love Post, No. 6, Arizona Branch, American Legion:

1. That the executive committee be authorized, empowered, and directed to take the following steps, as well as any other necessary steps, toward the eradication of the I. W. W.'s, soviets, and all other radical organizations in the State of Arizona as well as in the United States:

2. Communicate with the Attorney General of the United States, the United States district attorney for the district of Arizona, and the governor of the State of Arizona demanding that the full power of the law be exerted to clear out all radical agitators from the State of Arizona either by deportation, execution, or imprisonment, and that the county attorney of Yavapai County be called upon to use every means within his power within this county for the same purposes.

3. Communicate with the President of the United States, Senators MARK SMITH and HENRY F. ASHURST, and Representative CARL HAYDEN, requesting that if the present laws are not adequate or sufficiently stringent to eradicate thoroughly, completely, quickly, and for all time all the radical organizations now seeking to disrupt our Government that laws be passed at once which will be adequate and speedy for that purpose. That this is the gravest issue now facing our people, and the League of Nations and all other matters should be laid aside, if necessary, so that adequate laws may be passed to safeguard our own Government.

4. Communicate with the national headquarters of the American Legion and the Arizona branch thereof, to the end that the whole legion, both National and State, may cooperate with all governmental agencies to enforce the present laws, to secure the passage of more stringent laws, and for the speedy and entire eradication of all organizations, whatever their name, which are against our Government and seek its overthrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of Elmer J. Noble Post, No. 1, American Legion, of the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to each telephone operator who served with the Signal Corps overseas a gratuity equal to that received by any other ex-service man or woman, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a memorial of the Baltimore yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends of Maryland, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Laurel, Jessup, Hyattsville, Muirkirk, Baltimore, Berwyn, and Beltsville, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the passage of the so-called Lehlbach-Sterling bill providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Rosa, Calif., praying that an appropriation be made for the defense of the Pacific coast, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and I submit a report (No. 416) thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill at the earliest moment possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LANGLEY FIELD, VA.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3516) to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to furnish quarters at Langley Field, Va., to the civilian employees of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 417) thereon.

PRINTING OF NATIONAL BANKING ACT.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 298), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,500 copies of the national banking act as amended to date for the use of the Senate Document Room.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. 213).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, to which the subject was referred, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 299), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the number of documents received and distributed by the Treasury Department for the year 1919 be printed as a Senate document.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3813) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain between the towns of Orwell, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y., to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 418) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, on line 3, before "Railroad," to strike out "Rutland" and insert "Addison"; in line 7, after the word "thereto," to insert "across Lake Champlain"; and in line 8, after the words "town of," to strike out "Orwell" and insert "Shoreham," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Addison Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the States of Vermont and New York, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across Lake Champlain at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the town of Shoreham, in the State of Vermont, and the town of Ticonderoga, in the State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain between the towns of Shoreham, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3875) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3876) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3877) to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3878) to amend the "Revenue act of 1918" with respect to credits allowed for dependents; to the Committee on Finance;

A bill (S. 3879) to further amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs;

A bill (S. 3880) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Anne C. Skynner; and

A bill (S. 3881) for the relief of Martha E. Conklin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3882) providing for the recording of mortgages on vessels and notation thereof on certificates of registry or enrollment and license creating jurisdiction in the District Courts of the United States for the foreclosure of mortgages so recorded and noted, and providing procedure in connection therewith; also providing for maritime liens upon vessels for necessaries, and so forth, and their enforcement, and subordinating the same to the liens of mortgages; repealing all conflicting acts; and for other such purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3883) for the relief of the King Coal Co., of San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on Claims.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC IN KANSAS.

Mr. CURTIS. I introduce a joint resolution calling on the Secretary of War to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily to check the present influenza epidemic in that State, and I ask that it may be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 154) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to place at the disposal of the governor of Kansas, for temporary use, such emergency hospital equipment as is not needed by the Government and as may be required to meet the needs of emergency hospitals in the State of Kansas in their efforts to check the present influenza epidemic in that State.

Mr. CURTIS. This is an emergency matter, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to go to the committee under the rule, and the committee can then report it right out.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; let it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be so referred.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the foregoing joint resolution favorably without amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 300), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 104.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is it? May we have the resolution read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Reading Clerk read Senate resolution 104, submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRISON, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XX of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"RULE XX. That all questions of order shall be decided by the presiding officer without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate, without debate; and no question of order shall be entertained after debate on the merits of the proposition has begun. When an appeal is taken, any subsequent question of order which may arise before the decision of such appeal shall be decided by the presiding officer, without debate, and every appeal therefrom shall be decided at once and without debate; and any appeal may be laid on the table without prejudice to the pending proposition, and thereupon shall be held as affirming the decision of the presiding officer.

"The presiding officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand, Mr. President, that the proposition is to take up the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has made a motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a motion to take up the resolution, is it? I thought it was a request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable before 2 o'clock. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I have promised to take care of him during that absence. I will let this announcement with reference to my pair with him stand for the day. I find I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. I will therefore make the transfer and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when the name of Mr. KEYES was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of a death in his family and ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], which I transfer to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Having a pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which I transfer to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). I discover that my pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I notice that my pair, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], is detained at home by illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are absent on official business.

The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] are detained by illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Henderson	McNary	Sheppard
Beckham	Hitchcock	Myers	Trammell
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Williams
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene

So Mr. HARRISON's motion was rejected.

RURAL HOMES.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3477, being Calendar No. 299.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to know what the bill is.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a bill to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes. I am quite sure that the Senate, when it learns of the real purpose of the bill, will be in favor of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read.

Mr. KING. Is unanimous consent asked for its present consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been taken up on motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that this bill has been called up for consideration at this time, as I desired some opportunity to investigate its scope and purposes. In the hasty examination which I have made of its provisions, I am impressed with the thought that the bill possesses dangerous possibilities. I have no doubt that its sponsors have been actuated by the best of motives and regard it as of advantage to our country, but, as I recall its provisions—and I hastily read them a few days ago—it will involve the United States ultimately in expenditures and liabilities, actual and legal, or potential and moral, which will startle the country and bring condemnation upon those who devised this measure and placed it upon the statute books of our country, if the plan so to do succeeds.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions of this measure. The first section provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, is authorized to investigate and determine the feasibility of developing tracts of land in private ownership within any State or Territory, by reclamation and otherwise, for the purpose of subdividing the land and disposing of the same in farms and parcels at reasonable prices.

Mr. President, what is the purpose of that? Does it not mean that the employees of the Government are authorized to investigate and determine the feasibility of developing tracts of land in private ownership? The evident plan is to put the Government into the real estate business. The United States is to take private lands and subdivide them and become a sales agent upon terms that the Interior Department may prescribe. It is paternalism run mad. Where is the authority for the Federal Government to contract with owners of real estate to improve it, and then, with the moral backing of the Government and under the direction of the Government, divide it into lots and farms and find purchasers, prescribing the terms of payment and all conditions connected with the development of the lands and the sale of the same? Why should the Government of the United States furnish engineers and surveyors and investigators to aid individuals in developing and selling their lands?

There are hundreds of millions of acres of privately owned land in the various States not now in cultivation. There are hundreds of thousands of acres which have been cultivated, but now lie idle for lack of labor. It is not so much capital that is now required as labor to produce agricultural crops and develop the agricultural lands in the United States. It will doubtless be claimed that individuals will pay for the work performed by the Reclamation Service and by the Government officials under this bill. That unquestionably is the intention of the supporters of this bill, but in the end this plan will break down and the United States will be burdened with immense liabilities. The Reclamation Service was organized to develop the public lands of the United States and construct reclamation projects upon the public domain in order that the arid lands might be redeemed and the Government find purchasers for the same. The officials of the Reclamation Service are needed there to discharge the duties imposed upon them by law. They are not employed by the Government to perform work for private individuals or to promote the private schemes of real estate speculators. They are employed to perform a public trust, to discharge obligations which are called for in the reclamation of the arid lands belonging to the Government of the United States. If they are to be diverted from the work in which they are engaged, and which, under the law, they are charged with performing for the purpose of making investigations for private individuals and in order to reclaim and sell their lands, it necessarily means a demoralization of the Reclamation Service; and it will be the inevitable result that more and more as the services of the Reclamation Department are invoked by private individuals demands will be made for the increase of the personnel of the service. If individuals having tracts of land which they desire to sell can require officials of the Government to examine their lands and report upon the feasibility of their development, the demands made for such aid will be enormous. There are, of course, hundreds and perhaps thousands of tracts of land in the United States which are susceptible of cultivation. If there were demands pressing and imperative for the reclamation of such lands, capital would be forthcoming. Whenever there are persons seeking farms, there will be farms for them. The abandoned farms of New England and the vast tracts of land in many States which have not been cultivated, but which would yield large agricultural crops at but slight expense, attest the truth of the statement that whenever there are earnest home seekers upon agricultural lands such lands will be developed and capital will be available for their development.

This bill converts the Federal Government into a huge contractor to make surveys of private lands and to divide them and to sell them. It can not hide the danger that it will put the honor and prestige behind private schemes and ventures. It seeks to induce men to invest their money in privately owned lands upon the theory that Government officials have given their stamp of approval to schemes for the development and sale of the same. Under this bill those who loan money to drain swamps and reclaim lands, and those who make contracts with the Government to purchase the same, will regard the enterprises as Government enterprises, and the Government will be held morally liable, if not legally, for all expenditures and all losses and failures. But to return to the demands for the services of reclamation officials, these increasing requests will call for the services of scores if not hundreds of Federal employees for private work. They will go forth clothed with the authority of the United States, and they will transmute a governmental agency into a gigantic machine for the purpose of aiding individuals to find a market for their own properties and for the development of their own enterprises; and the result will be that the Government work will be neglected, or else we will be compelled to make appropriations for additional employees and increase the personnel of the Reclamation Service.

If, under this bill, the Reclamation Service is authorized to furnish employees upon the request of individuals to make surveys of their private lands, then it means that the Reclamation Service will respond to those appeals. It means, of course, that if they respond to such appeals they will have to divert the services of employees of the Government who are engaged in reclamation work to make examinations of private undertakings, and this will compel, as I stated, an increase in the personnel of the Reclamation Service.

I may be wrong, but, as I read this bill, it seems to me that it is merely one of the symptoms and manifestations of the purpose to increase the bureaucratic authority and power of the Federal Government. We built up the Reclamation Service for the purpose of reclaiming the public lands of the United States. Apparently some officials of the Government see an opportunity now to extend the activities of this useful agency of the Government and enter upon a wild and unending plan to develop and sell all unused lands held by private individuals. If the Government of the United States may furnish engineering and other skill to aid individuals in developing their lands, and then take the lands over and sell them and give such guaranties to financial interests that money will be furnished to redeem private lands, why may it not undertake all forms of private enterprise and enter into all sorts of partnerships? Why may it not furnish engineers to develop mines and then secure capital for such purposes and sell the ores and products of the same?

Why should not the Government supply technical skill and aid for all persons in all pursuits? Why not aid those engaged in manufacturing, and give certificates as to the feasibility of all kinds of enterprises, so that capital would be induced to invest because the Government officials were behind the ventures? I repeat, if the Reclamation Service, with its vast personnel which has been built up at the expense of hundreds and thousands if not millions of dollars, may be used for private purposes, why may we not use any organization of the Government and any technical skill of Government employees and Government instrumentalities to aid in any undertaking or enterprise in which private individuals may engage? I can see no reason why we should limit the activity of our departments to this kind of work. I see no reason why we should not give the same technical skill of the Government employees to other private activities.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to suggest some distinction between this particular case and others to which the Senator refers.

The Reclamation Service was built up for the purpose of irrigating Government lands which are sold to purchasers, and the purchasers pay for the irrigation in course of time. My impression is, also, that the payments which they make cover the cost of maintaining the Reclamation Service. Now, the Nation as a whole, and the Government as its representative, are interested in developing these lands; and if there are contiguous lands in private ownership which might be brought under the same reclamation project, is it not reasonable to have these reclamation experts assist the would-be purchasers and do for them what they can not do for themselves except at very great expense?

Mr. KING. Does the Senaor say that this bill is limited in its scope and in its operation to those tracts which are contiguous to reclamation projects which the Government is developing, where there might be a system of cooperation, and when the aid given to private enterprises is only incidental to the development of the Government project?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not advised as to whether the bill is specifically limited in that respect, but I can easily see that that would be the natural conduct of the matter by the Secretary of the Interior. Irrigation is something which we have found can only be carried on effectively under these conditions by the National Government, and the National Government has an interest in the matter because it enables the Government to sell these Government lands at a great advance. While the Government originally furnishes the money, ultimately the money is paid back to the Government by those who purchase the lands; and I can see a great economy in permitting this body of experts to advise incoming purchasers of the nature of irrigation work which might be carried on, the cost of it, and so forth. It seems to me that it is a matter in which the Government, as well as the purchaser, is interested; and it is not quite like the paternalism of the Government going into private business which has no connection with the public interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to yield to my colleague, and to have him make an explanation of the full scope and purpose of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. KING. I shall suspend now for the purpose of permitting that to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. KING. I prefer to follow that course, because the Senator's explanation might abate some of my opposition to this measure. I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires to yield at this time, I should like to have the Senate listen to a statement of the nature and object of this bill. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska in the beginning that this bill not only affects the arid lands of the West but it affects the swamp lands of the South and the cut-over lands of the Northwest, and I think I shall be able to show that the bill will not cost a single, solitary cent to the Government, but it will allow the private owners of lands of the character named, who in the past have undertaken to reclaim their lands, to do so without the payment of an extortionate price either in securing the money necessary or in the sale of the lands. This is the object of the bill, and if the Senator will yield I shall be glad to explain it.

Mr. KING. I yield at this point, and will conclude my remarks later on.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this bill has been drawn to conform to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior in his annual message, and I may say, Mr. President, that it was drawn by the Interior Department. In order that Senators may know just what Secretary Lane thinks of the measure, I am going to take time to read his letter in answer to a request of the Committee on Public Lands for an opinion upon it. His letter is dated December 10, 1919, is addressed to myself as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and reads as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 5, transmitting copy of bill S. 3477 and requesting report thereon.

The bill is entitled "A bill to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes."

The bill authorizes the use of the Reclamation Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the development of reclamation projects to be entirely financed by private capital or by the sale of local district bonds, and is applicable not only to the West but to all parts of the United States.

There can be no doubt that the work of continental conquest, which has very largely made the greatness of America, must go on during the coming year, at least to the extent of increasing the cultivable area in approximately the same ratio to the increase in population.

When the fertile prairies of the West were open to settlement the Nation had no difficulty in keeping its agriculture even in advance of its rapidly growing population. The conditions to-day are such as to require aggressive leadership on the part of the Government, although private initiative and capital are the best dependence for enterprise. The demands upon the National Treasury are now so great that it is not only prudent but essential that private capital should be enlisted so far as possible to meet the needs of the time.

The primary object of the measure is to safeguard and promote the interests of that portion of our people who seek to obtain prosperous homes upon the land and who must often begin with slender resources. A serious factor in the general trend from the farm to the city at the present time is the high cost of small tracts favorably located with respect to markets and transportation, together with the size of initial investment required.

There are millions of acres of potentially rich lands which may be purchased in large tracts at a very low price in their present condition, but nevertheless small parcels suitable for immediate cultivation can seldom be had excepting at greatly increased figures due to large selling expenses, interest accruing until disposition of subdivided areas, and speculative profits. The short period allowed to complete full payments is an added handicap to the settler.

It is clearly in the interest of the Nation that the people should be assisted and encouraged to own rural homes. This can be done by assuring them of thorough and scientific investigation of lands and their improvement by some process of reclamation, such as irrigation, drainage, clearing, or refertilization, made by trained engineers, economists, and administrators in the service of the Government. The extent of wasted effort and human tragedy resulting from settlers buying poor land, badly located, at unreasonable prices, and upon such terms of payment as seriously to jeopardize their ultimate success, has in recent years been appalling.

Under the operations of this bill it is believed settlers will be able to effect savings equaling as much as one-half and more of the prices they ordinarily pay for small rural holdings. This would be the case, first, because landowners would enter into contracts for the sale of their property on a prereclamation basis; second, because the heavy charges of sale agencies and interest accruing until disposition of subdivided areas could be practically eliminated. Settlers would probably save enough on the first cost of the land to pay for all their improvements and live stock. These savings would aggregate tens and possibly millions of dollars, and further, the terms of payment could be made such as to give purchasers at least a reasonable chance of success.

All that has been said applies with equal force to protection of the investor in securities who has often been the victim of avoidable mistakes.

It will be possible also for the Government, under the terms of this measure, to lend substantial assistance in the organization of communities, and this condition should favorably affect both their commercial and social life.

The bill is intended to be country wide in its application, but as the language provides for administration through the Reclamation Service, there is danger of an interpretation that it would apply only to the arid States of the West. It is therefore suggested that on page 1, line 5, there be inserted after the word "ownership" the words "within any State or Territory."

Senators will notice that that amendment has been agreed to by the committee. The letter proceeds:

In line 20, page 2, the expression "lots and farms" is used, while elsewhere in the bill the expression for describing the land is "farms and parcels." To correct this discrepancy and also to make it entirely clear that the purpose of the last sentence of the bill, lines 19 to 21, page 2, is that the United States shall act only in a representative capacity and not as a principal, and that any contracts for the sale of the improved lands are to be made for the benefit of the owner thereof, who has advanced the price of their reclamation or improvement, I suggest that the said last sentence be amended to read: "All contracts for the purchase of farms and parcels shall be made for, and the moneys due thereunder shall be payable to, the owner or owners of the land or their assigns."

With these slight changes, I recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, the changes suggested by the Secretary of the Interior have been made; I want to say that I desire to guard the Treasury of the United States in every possible way; but there is not a question of doubt that this character of legislation is needed.

In the Southern States there are vast areas of swamp land which are in private ownership, and the experience in the past has been that in cases where projects have been started, after some engineer passing upon the project, the owners have gone to the money marts of the country and secured money for the completion of the project. But it has been found that the charges that have been imposed upon the applicant for the loan have been such that they have in many cases reached as high as 25 per cent. In other words, the money that was expected to be received to do the necessary work is reduced 25 per cent. Then, again, the cost of selling the land in subdivisions has been so great that ultimately the purchaser of the land is charged with a price so exorbitant that he can not afford to go on and cultivate it, for it is impossible to make a decent living out of it. In other words, the credit of the owner of the land is gone; he has nothing left to improve the land; and he finds himself ultimately up against a proposition of utter failure because of the burden of debt that is placed upon him.

Mr. OVERMAN. How will this help him? That is what I want to know.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to tell the Senate now. Under this bill the Reclamation Service, when an application is made to them by the private owner or the private owners of, say, swamp land, containing 20,000 acres, or whatever acreage it may be—which is for the applicants to decide—make application to the Secretary of the Interior for a skilled engineer in the employ of the Reclamation Service of the Government to be sent down to make a thorough examination of their proposed project.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not that just what they are doing now with regard to good roads, sending down men to see about it?

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, Senator, but the Government is paying over 50 per cent of the cost, and in this proposition there is not a single cent asked for from the Government of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not talking about cases where the Government contributed, but before we went into that, even, the Public Roads Bureau sent men down to make reports and give plans for the building of the roads.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and in many cases sample roads were laid for the people of the different States to see.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, I believe we are also sending out skilled people to teach people how to grow Irish potatoes and cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under this bill the application is made, the applicants deposit with the Government of the United States money sufficient to pay every dollar of expense of the investigation, and if the project is reported feasible by the skilled engineer of the Reclamation Service, then a report is made to the applicant to that effect. The owners then apply to the money marts of the country for money to carry on the project under the direction of the Government.

Some Senators may say that that examination could be made by private engineers. Mr. President, it could be made by private engineers, but the experience is, so I have been told, that in many projects, not only in the South but in the West, the engineer who can talk the most plausible and show the applicants how easily the work can be done, and name a figure that is so low that any competent engineer will know that it is an error, is generally employed, and such reports are the basis of the failures of so many undertakings by individuals in the past.

I am assured by the bankers of this country, and particularly those, Mr. President, who have advanced money in the past for the development of irrigation projects in the arid West, that if the Government of the United States makes a report, after an investigation made of projects, whether it be swamp lands, cut-over lands in the Northwest, or whether it be arid lands in the West, and that report be favorable, there is not a question but that they would advance the money for the reclamation of these lands upon terms that would justify the individuals making the application for the money to undertake the projects.

Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment or two to the bill to make it beyond a question of doubt that the Government of the United States will never be called upon to assume one dollar of expense, for I say now that the object of the bill is to redeem certain privately owned lands, and that the owners of the lands shall pay every cent of the expense that the Government is put to in assisting in the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will not the effect of the bill be to increase largely the personnel of the Reclamation Service?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think, as a rule, it will. There may be times of a greater call upon the Reclamation Service than others, but we all know that there are no new reclamation projects under way to-day and——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it is increased, the expense of that increase, according to the terms of the bill, must come from the tenderers for consideration by the department.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a provision of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Every cent of expense will be paid by the applicants who desire the investigation to be made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me there might be great activity at some times and a great increase in the personnel and then afterwards a period of idleness, when those men would be upon the Government pay roll drawing pay and doing very little work.

Mr. SMOOT. If a time of activity ever comes, the Government, at least, can select engineers who are known to be competent, and not only that, but there never will be a report made and adopted by the Reclamation Service until the head engineer of that service finally passes upon the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator a question in order to make clear what I think the bill provides? I should like to ask the Senator if under any possible construction of any provision of the bill the Government could enter upon any private landowner's property and take it without his voluntarily agreeing to enter into the contract?

Mr. SMOOT. It is impossible. Not only that, but the initiative must be taken by the owner.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to make that clear, because I found there was some misapprehension about it.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is no objection, I should like to offer several amendments to the bill at this time, as I am quite sure the Senate will agree to them.

I move, on page 2, line 10, after the word "advance," to insert the words "by the owner or owners," so that there will be no question as to those who will have to advance the money.

This was suggested to me by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and I think it is a very wise suggestion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move, after the word "the" and before the word "cost," in the same line, to insert the word "estimated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. After the word "cost," in the same line, and before the words "of such investigation or development," I move to insert the words "and thereafter of sufficient moneys to meet the actual cost." Then there can be no question as to the applicant being compelled to pay every cent of expense from the day of the application until the services rendered by the Government are complete. That will make the clause read—providing for the payment in advance by the owner or owners of sufficient moneys to meet the estimated cost and thereafter of sufficient moneys to meet the actual cost of such investigation or development.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Utah that it perhaps would be more clear if after the word "development," in line 11, he should add the words "and no expense shall be incurred by the Government in excess of moneys already advanced."

Mr. SMOOT. I will be glad to accept the suggested amendment of the Senator from Georgia. I think that covers the case pretty thoroughly.

I will say to my colleague [Mr. KING] that I will take time to look up the report from the Secretary of the Interior recommending legislation along this line and present it to the Senate later.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I rise simply for the purpose of expressing my hearty approval of the bill. I can state from experience, personal experience as well as the experiences of many others which have come to my knowledge, that something of this kind ought to be done.

Of course, the argument can be used that the Federal Government shall not lend its aid to any private enterprise. Generally speaking, I am in hearty accord with that idea, but this is an exceptional situation. The Federal Government itself has deemed the reclamation of lands of such importance that it has gone into the business of reclaiming those lands, especially the arid lands, and much has been said looking toward the reclamation of swamp lands and other classes of lands through Federal agency.

My experience, of course, is confined to the arid lands and their reclamation by irrigation, but anyone who has come in contact with that problem realizes the many difficulties in the way of financing and putting into actual operation an irrigation project. In the first place, you must determine from an engineering point of view as to the feasibility of the project. Anyone who has had any experience knows that engineers may differ upon a question of that sort. There are many ways in which a project may be constructed. There often arises an important question as to whether to construct a reservoir in a stream or whether it is necessary to find reservoir facilities outside; it becomes important to determine what kind of a dam shall be constructed; it is important to determine the reservoir facilities, the quantity of water which may be impounded, the kind of an engineering plant to put into operation, whether your ditch line shall take in a large quantity of land or whether it shall be confined to a much less quantity at a less expense. There are arising continually all sorts of questions along these lines about which engineers may differ.

When you come to finance the project, it is important, of course, that the person who is going to put up the money must have absolute confidence in the report of the engineer. These financiers are not as a rule in touch with the engineers of the country who are engaged in investigating projects of this kind. They are not in touch with engineers in whom they have confidence. All that they know about a firm of engineers is their mere reputation, and they are not willing to invest their dollars upon the judgment of engineers with whom they have not been brought into close contact. Therefore it is almost impossible at the present time to take to financiers of the country an engineer's report which will be acceptable to those financiers; and, although you may have employed the very highest grade of talent, they have not that confidence, and very naturally so—it is human nature—and they insist that before they put in their money their own engineers shall go over the entire project again. It involves a vast expense to go over the engineering work of a large irrigation project.

I may say, moreover, that there are no engineers in the United States to-day engaged in building irrigation projects except those in the employ of the Reclamation Service. There are some who have had some experience. Of course many of them have the ability to do it, but the engineering work of a reclamation project is sui generis, in a sense. It requires experience along that particular line, and there are few engineers in the country outside of the Reclamation Service who have had that experience. So it is essential that you get this work done by those people who have been doing it right along, because they have had the experience.

The engineers in the Government service not only have had the experience as engineers but they have been brought into direct contact with the construction side of these projects. They have a better knowledge of the cost of the project than any outside engineer can possibly have. So, when they make an estimate it can be depended upon. Men will invest their money upon the judgment of those who have been successfully engaged in enterprises of this sort, where they will not do it upon the judgment of those who are less experienced.

This measure will not cost the Government of the United States anything. It will simply be lending at the expense of the private owners these people whose knowledge has grown up under the United States and in connection with this class of work which the Government itself has spent millions to bring about.

So I submit, Mr. President, that there ought not to be any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the objections expressed by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] appeal very forcibly and very naturally to me, not only individually but in a traditional way, almost by inheritance; but they come rather late now. This country has developed and evolutionized, and has gone from one state of evolution to another, until things that I might as original propositions have viewed with absolute disfavor are accomplished facts.

Mr. President, it is too late to talk about the United States Government not lending expert assistance to private enterprise. We have been doing it everywhere. If there be any constitutional authority for the existence of the Department of Agriculture or the Bureau of Education I do not know what it is. If either had been presented to me as an original proposition I would have said that the Federal Government had nothing to do with them, but both Houses of the National Legislature and the courts have differed from me in that regard. There must be at some time an end of debate, as there is in law an end of litigation. It is too late to take up those propositions now. A Government which sends out expert men to teach farmers on their own land how to plant potatoes, how to cultivate cotton, how to make two ears of corn grow where one grew before, in aid of strictly private enterprise, can not now balk at the idea of sending experts out to reclaim land in order to make homes for the children of the Republic, and, amongst others, especially for returned soldiers. The day for that has now passed.

I think it was all wrong; I think the Government would have done a great deal better if it had stuck to the original moorings, had been lashed to those moorings and had remained there. I believe that the people least governed are, as a rule, the best governed, and I have no sort of sympathy with Federalizing everything; but it must be admitted that when the Government goes to work to do away with peach yellows in order to help the farmers in Delaware and New England, and goes to work to do away with boll weevil in order to help cotton planters in Mississippi and Texas, it is rather late to talk about not extending the expert skill at the service of the Government to the aid of the individual in any great industry. We have not only extended such aid in those cases, but we have done it in connection with coal mining; we have done it in connection with nearly everything that can be mentioned, but especially in connection with farming.

If we have a right, at the behest of the farmers of the country for the benefit of agriculture, to put skilled experts upon farms already in existence, it seems to me that we have the same right to extend the same help for the purpose of creating new farms, which are equally as important and perhaps more important.

The Supreme Court once said—I believe in the Colorado-Kansas case, or some similar case—that it could not find any authority under the Constitution for the Government irrigating anybody's land, and yet the Government has kept on irrigating it, and the courts have not found any way to stop it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I recall the case to which the Senator refers, the question was suggested as to the right of the Federal Government to make appropriations for the irrigation of Government land; and the court held, as I remember, that under the clause of the Constitution which permits Congress to make all reasonable rules and regulations with respect to its own territory, it had the right to provide for the irrigation of Government lands, in order that it might find purchasers for those lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it also held that the Government had no right to irrigate private land. That is my recollection of the decision. But, at any rate, the Government has been doing it, and incidental to the irrigation of public lands it has almost necessarily given opportunities for the irrigation of private lands.

A man comes down every now and then in my neighborhood and proceeds to teach the darkies and the white folks how to raise more onions, how to raise more Irish potatoes, how to raise a longer and better staple of cotton, or how to get rid of the various insects that are preying upon each of those products.

I confess that if it had been an original proposition with me, if I had been the judge of the court to decide upon it, or the Congress, I would never have been able to discover any constitutional raison d'être for either the Agricultural Department or the Bureau of Education; it does not seem to me that any power was ever delegated to the Federal Government in connection with either; but, as I said a moment ago, both Houses of Congress have decided the other way; the courts have taken the other position, or, at any rate, they have not nullified the acts of Congress; and at some time there must be a point where a man's private opinion concerning even constitutionality gives way to the beaten path which the Government itself has struck out and has been pursuing.

I merely wanted to say those few words, because I did not want to be regarded as in sympathy with any new assumption of Federal power; we have had enough of it. But this is not new; it is perfectly in line with what we have been doing and are doing every day. It seems to me that it is striking at a higher and more useful purpose than even teaching a man to grow better corn or better Irish potatoes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like to have some enlightenment in regard to one or two provisions of this measure. I notice that section 2 of the bill reads as follows:

That after the Secretary of the Interior has determined the feasibility of a project, he is authorized, through the Reclamation Service, to develop the land to such extent, and dispose of the same in farms and parcels in such manner and upon such terms as to him shall be deemed most feasible and practicable.

Then, going down to section 4, we find this language:

That every contract for development of a project shall provide, among other things, that the developed farms and parcels shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes at the actual cost of the land and the development thereof plus a definite reasonable profit to the owner or owners stated in advance therein.

I was going to inquire of the Senator from Utah if the two clauses in the bill which I have just read do not result in making the Government of the United States the agent of the owner of the land in selling it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going to get the results we anticipate from this bill, we have got to have the Government dictate the terms of the contract, and, if we intend to have the land sold at a reasonable price to the purchaser, it is necessary also that the Government of the United States have the power to state at what price the lands shall be sold; otherwise, we might just as well leave the development of the lands under the present unwise system.

I will say to the Senator frankly that the bill gives that power to the Secretary of the Interior, its purpose being to cut out all of the losses and commissions which have been in the past extremely high, frequently providing that 50 per cent of the amount received for the land go as a commission to the seller, in addition to an immense profit to the original owner of the property. It is true that certain power is given to the Secretary of the Interior, but the bill would not be worth anything without it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that opens up quite a vista. Let me recite again a portion of the language of section 4:

That every contract for development of a project shall provide—

It is mandatory—

among other things, that the developed farms and parcels shall be sold * * * at the actual cost of the land and the development thereof plus a definite reasonable profit.

Supposing they can not be sold at any such price, what is going to happen?

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the private owner, who has advanced the money for all expenses up to that time, will be out the money he has advanced to the Government of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But in the meantime the Government has entered into a contract with the man to sell his land on the terms specified.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides that the land shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy it. Of course, if there is no person who desires to purchase the land for a rural home, it might not be sold at that time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the contract is broken.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the land may be later sold and the contract is not broken, because the contract specifically provides for what the lands shall be sold.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not mean to be captious about this matter, but it seems to me the Government, under this bill, is undertaking quite an obligation. Section 3 provides that a contract shall be entered into by the Secretary of the Interior with the owner or owners of the land, providing for the payment in advance of sufficient money to meet the cost of the development.

Then, section 4 provides that every contract for development of a project—that is the same contract—shall provide, among other things, that the developed lands shall be sold at the actual cost of the land and the cost of the development plus a definite reasonable profit. Does not that obligate the Government to sell the land on those terms, and, if the Government does not do so, does it not break its contract?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not read any other meaning into the language.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it could possibly be construed in compelling the Government to sell the lands, because it says that they "shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes." If nobody desires to occupy the land as a home, there can be no sale made. The Government does not make an unconditional contract that the lands shall be sold. The Government contracts that they shall be sold at a certain figure, and, if the lands are sold at all, they are sold at the price fixed by the Government. That is one of the great advantages of the bill—that the land shall not be sold at unreasonable profits to the owners of the land.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government, under the terms of this bill, enters into a contract with the owner of the land to sell his land for him according to the terms fixed in the contract itself. My question is, Suppose the Government is unable to sell it on those terms after development is finished, what happens?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know what becomes of the land?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same as if I make a contract with the Senator from New York to sell his land at $150 an acre and conditions arise which make it impossible for me to sell the land. The contract would not say that I was compelled to sell the land if there was no market for it.

Mr. LODGE. Does the land go back with the improvements to the original owner?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. Everything is in the hands of the original owner. He advances every dollar of expense to put the lands in shape for sale.

Mr. LODGE. He simply uses the United States funds to develop it?

Mr. SMOOT. He does not use one cent of United States funds, but makes use of the skill of the United States engineers, in order that the project may be presented to the people of the United States as being a worthy one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I think he misunderstood the Senator from Massachusetts when he acquiesced in his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I did.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts said that the Government provided the funds. The Government, as I understand, does not provide any funds.

Mr. SMOOT. Not a cent. I did not so understand the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. No; I said that the property then went back to the original owner with the improvements.

Mr. SMOOT. If there are any improvements, the owner will or has paid for them.

Mr. LODGE. He has not paid for the engineers.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; he has paid for the services of the engineers. Under the terms of the bill he has to make a deposit in advance before an engineer is assigned to the work.

Mr. LODGE. He just employs the Government, then, to develop the lands for him?

Mr. SMOOT. He makes application to the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LODGE. Why should people have the right to have the Government develop their property?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government is not developing their property.

Mr. LODGE. It will.

Mr. SMOOT. The owner of the land is developing it.

Mr. LODGE. He is paying the money to have the Government do it.

Mr. SMOOT. He is paying the money to have the Government make the investigation as to whether or not it is a feasible proposition. It is like the Government sending engineers into a State and showing the State how to build roads, with the exception that in the present case the Government is at no expense.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not mean to be guilty of reiteration to too great an extent, but just let us picture this process. We will say that John Smith owns 20,000 acres of swamp lands in the State of Mississippi.

He asks the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, to send some Government engineers down there to ascertain whether it is possible to drain that land. The engineers report that it is possible to drain it and improve it. Thereupon the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under the terms of this bill, to go ahead and develop that land under the terms of the contract which he is to enter into with John Smith, and the bill provides that no such contract shall be made with John Smith except it contains a provision that the land shall be sold at an amount equal to the value of the land, plus the cost of the improvement, plus a reasonable, definite profit, to be fixed in advance, necessarily.

Now, the Government enters into the contract with John Smith to sell his land, after he has paid for the improvements, at a profit to John Smith. That is an obligation to be assumed by the Government under the very terms of this bill, expressed in the clearest English.

Mr. SMOOT. One of the objects of the bill is that the Government of the United States shall see that the land is sold for a reasonable price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is exactly what the bill provides.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, suppose the Government can not do it? Suppose, when the time comes to do that, the man has put in his money? The Government has been paid back its money, sure enough, potentially, because the owner's money is in the Treasury as a trust fund. Then suppose, when the Government tries to sell the land according to the terms of the contract into which it has entered with the owner, it can not get that amount of money for it?

Mr. SMOOT. Then the land will not be sold.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the Government has broken its contract.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think so, nor do I think the wording of the bill can be construed in any such way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, it says so.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may say it says so, but I can not agree with him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Read it.

Mr. SMOOT. But if I made a contract with the Senator that I would develop a tract of land owned by him, provided he would advance every cent of the expense, and we had entered into or agreed to enter into a contract beforehand that those lands should not be sold for more than a certain price——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, but that is not what this bill says.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what it provides.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no, Mr. President; it does not. It says the lands shall be sold——

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they shall be sold, at what price?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will tell the Senator—at the actual cost of the land and the development thereof, plus a definite, reasonable profit to the owner.

Mr. SMOOT. And they shall not be sold unless——

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not put any limitation on the profit. That is not the object of that section. It is to assure the owner a profit, and the Government undertakes to give him a profit.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to assure the owner that he shall not have an undue profit. That is the object of section 3.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for the purpose of asking the Senator from New York a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to get as much light as possible on the question. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if his construction of that language is that in case the Government did not sell or this man did not sell, after the improvements are made, at the price fixed in the contract, the Government would be liable to the owner under the language of this act?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, I know that an individual would be liable under any such contract. I do not know whether the Government can be sued under the circumstances or not. I am not enough of a lawyer to say.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I am not technical at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. An individual certainly would.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean, morally liable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Morally liable—absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator believe the language means that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely. I can not read any other meaning into it. It says so, in so many words.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess that it does not sound that way to me. Regardless of whether this is a good thing or a bad thing, or whether it is practical or impractical, it seems to me that under the language of this bill the Government, in case a sale can not be made, is in no way liable to the owner of the land, either legally or morally.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, then, we had better put a saving clause in the contract——

Mr. NORRIS. I would not have any objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To the effect that the party of the first part, being the Government of the United States, if it finds out later on that it can not live up to the contract, shall not be held liable.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not be fair, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair. Otherwise, it is difficult for the reporters to get the colloquy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from New York that we ought to put a provision in the bill that the Government shall not live up to its contract, I should like to say that I do not believe the language here implies that the Government is violating its contract. I do not see how the Senator can get that out of these words. It says the land shall be sold. Now, if a condition arises where the land can not be sold for that price—and that may happen; there might be just such a case—then the land will not sell itself. The owner of the land is just as much to blame, if there has been a mistake made in the contract, as the Government is. The owner of the land and the Government have made a contract, and by the terms of that contract the owner of the land agrees to give to the Government a certain amount of money for improvements to be made, and they are made. It is agreed between them that when they are made, this land shall be sold at a given price. The reason why the Government gets into it is to prevent the owner from getting an unreasonable price.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. KING rose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me suggest——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I have the floor, and I merely wanted to continue and say this, in answer to the observation of the Senator from Nebraska:

It is perfectly true that under this bill the owner of the land undertakes to do a certain thing. He undertakes to deposit his money in the Treasury of the United States to cover the cost of the development. The Government also undertakes to do a certain thing, and more than one thing. It undertakes to prosecute the development, and it undertakes to sell on the terms fixed in the contract. Now, that is the obligation of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the owner of the land and the Government are parties to that contract.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And it is found afterwards that it is an impossibility to carry out the contract. Now, why should we say that the Government has to bear the burden and not the owner of the land? It can not be done. Neither one can do it. Hence they are left just where they were at the beginning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government undertakes in the contract to bear the burden. The contract says that the Government shall sell the land.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York and the Senator from Nebraska, too, whether the provisions of section 4 must not be construed in connection with the provisions of section 2?

Section 2 provides:

That after the Secretary of the Interior has determined the feasibility of a project he is authorized, through the Reclamation Service, to develop the land to such extent, and dispose of the same in farms and parcels in such manner and upon such terms as to him shall be deemed most feasible and practical.

Does not that carry out the idea emphasized by the Senator from New York, that it is the Government that must sell?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I concede, to begin with, that section 4 must be construed in connection with section 1, section 2, and every other section. We must construe it as a whole, and there will be no dispute about that on my part; but we must bear in mind all the way through that the Government has entered into a contract with the owner of the land, and that contract specifically says:

This land shall be sold at a certain price named in the contract.

The law states the elements that go in to make up that price. Now, if it happens that nobody buys it, it seems to me that the owner of the land and the Government have both been misled. Their judgment was bad when they made the contract. It can not be sold for the reason that nobody will buy it; and it seems to me it would be perfectly foolish to say that because that condition happens the owner of the land is entitled to payment from the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention to this phase of the matter: Of course, I differ from the construction which he places upon it. This bill makes the Government a selling agent for lands. It is an improper attempt to inject the Federal Government into private affairs; but——

Mr. NORRIS. I am not arguing that. That is a different phase of the matter.

Mr. KING. I was going to ask the Senator this question: Suppose the construction of the Senator is right, and you can not sell the land; the project is a failure. What does the Senator think would be the attitude of the men who have invested their money upon the prestige of the Government's reports and recommendations? Does he not think we would have claims here for hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars against the Government of the United States by men who had lost their money?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to answer that question, if the Senator will permit me.

We might have claims. We have all kinds of claims. Sometimes I think some of them are paid that ought not to be paid. We can not bind the Congress; but as to any moral obligation that the Government would be under to pay those claims, it seems to me there is absolutely nothing to it.

In that connection, while we are construing section 4 in connection with section 2, I want also to construe it in connection with section 3. Section 3 says:

That no moneys of the United States shall be expended for any of the purposes of this act, nor shall either the investigation or development of any project be commenced or any obligation incurred therefor until a contract shall have first been made—

The Government is not, according to that language, going to expend any money. If a man makes a contract to have the Reclamation Service take charge of the development of his land and agrees to put in all the money, then the Government says, "Now, because you have given us charge of it you must agree that the price you shall ask of any man who wants to make a home will be a certain figure that is named in the contract, known in advance."

The owner of the land makes that contract. It is just the same as though he made it with me, if I were an engineer, and if the Senator from Utah had a large tract of land and came to me and said, "Now, I want to make a contract with you. I will furnish the money to develop this land. It is swamp land. We will drain it and divide it up into farms of 40 acres each. You do the work; I will pay the expenses; you get no profit out of it, but I will agree with you, if you will do that, that I shall not charge more than a certain figure that we may agree on and put in the contract when I come to sell it."

That is your judgment. You wanted to sell it. There is a profit in it for you, and I go and survey it and build houses and drain the land, and then something has happened, as has been happening in the last two or three years, or the reverse of what has happened, land has gone down instead of up, and when we get all through we find we can not sell it. Then who holds the sack? The Senator from Utah. All I have done is to do my work for nothing. I was going to do that for nothing anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. No; you are paid, under this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; all my expenses are paid, but the Government gets no profit.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they will not under any circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. The Government furnishes the machinery to do it at cost, in order to help the people who are going to buy the land. That is the idea of the Government. The other man has his land, and he wants to sell it. It is worthless now. He put up the money to get it, and uses this machinery to get it on the market. If it does not sell, he has lost his money, just the same as though he went at it without the Government's assistance. He has run the risk; he has put up the money. He does not need to do it if he does not want to. If he does do it, he does it because he thinks he will make something out of it, and we want to invite him to do that, in order to divide it up. It seems to me that under any possible construction you can put upon this language the Government is not liable to that man. It is simply helping him to sell his land; and for giving that help, at cost, it exacts of him an agreement that he shall not charge more than a certain figure. If there is any doubt about it, I would not have any objection to any kind of a provision being put in the bill to specifically provide that the contract shall state on its face that in case it was not sold, the Government of the United States in no sense, at any time, should be liable for any money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to an amendment that perhaps will clear this up; and I want his opinion upon it. On page 2, line 19, after the word "parcels," insert the words "when sold," so that section 4 would read:

That every contract for the development of a project shall provide, among other things, that the developed farms and parcels when sold shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes at the actual cost of the land—

And so forth.

I think that will cover the thought that the Senator had in mind. I want to say to the Senator that there is no intention that the Government shall be involved in any obligation whatever, other than to simply furnish skilled employees to see that this land, first, is passed upon as a feasible project; and, second, that the land shall not be sold in the future at a profit that is unreasonable to men who want homes. That is the object of this bill, and it seems to me if there is any question about the Government of the United States having to sell it, as the Senator suggests, why not just add the words "when sold"? Would that meet what the Senator has in mind?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask a question first? That will not change the terms of the bill in so far as the bill now provides that the Government shall do the selling?

Mr. SMOOT. That, Mr. President, can not be changed if the Government is going to control the price of the land. If the land is to be sold at an exorbitant figure and the original owner of the land expects to make 300 or 400 per cent out of his land and have the Government of the United States assist him by furnishing the brains to bring it about and assist in every way, I would oppose any such bill. The land has to be sold at a reasonable profit or else there is no reason in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the suggested amendment will quite fit the situation, as I look at it.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator makes any further statement I want to call his attention to amendments that have already been made to section 3. It may be construed, under section 3, that section 3 would not require all the payments of expenses by the owners until the conclusion of the sale of the property. I have offered certain amendments, and I want the Senator to follow them, so I will read the bill as amended. Beginning on page 2, line 9, of section 3, after the word "land," as amended, it reads:

Providing for the payment in advance by the owner or owners of sufficient moneys to meet the estimated cost and thereafter of sufficient moneys to meet the actual cost of such investigation or development.

What words would the Senator suggest to make that stronger than the amendment I have suggested, to insert, after the word "parcels," the words "when sold"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I make the point that there is no quorum present. I do this in order that we may save time when the bill that is the unfinished business comes up at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has to ask the Senator who is speaking to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not ask for anybody to yield. I rose to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has no right to suggest the absence of a quorum when a Senator is speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington made the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a point of order at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harding	New	Smoot
Borah	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Nugent	Sterling
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Underwood
Dillingham	McCormick	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Gronna	McKellar	Sherman
Hale	McNary	Smith, Md.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], on account of official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] on account of death in his family.

I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] on business of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRANCE, Mr. PHELAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. COLT, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. MOSES, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. REED, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. GORE, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1699.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. PHELAN. The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a statement of the policy of the United States with respect to foreign loans. On last Friday a fragmentary report of it, taken from the morning Washington Post, was published in the RECORD. The new Secretary of the Treasury has adopted it also as his policy. I consider it an important public document, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. In connection with the request, I wish to ask if the Senate did not yesterday adopt a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a full report upon this particular subject?

Mr. PHELAN. Not this particular subject. This is the declaration of a policy by the Treasury Department which has been confirmed by the new Secretary. The resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was specifically for information upon the volume of loans and the payment of interest to date and the amount of interest which had accumulated. This is a statement of the policy of the United States so far as the Treasury Department can determine it with respect to foreign loans, and it should be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection if it is not really covering the same ground, except to state that so far as the policy of the United States is concerned I doubt very much whether the Secretary of the Treasury has any right to state it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this is a document which is being published by the Treasury Department, I object to printing it in the RECORD. I am going to see if we can not possibly stop this practice. If it is any kind of a departmental document, I am going to object to it going in the RECORD.

Mr. PHELAN. For the information of the Senator I will state the heading:

Treasury Department.
Following is a copy of a letter which Secretary GLASS has addresed to Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator said it was from the new Secretary?

Mr. PHELAN. It is a letter to the United States Chamber of Commerce by former Secretary GLASS which was published in the newspapers but not in the RECORD. The same policy has been adopted, I read in the press, by the new Secretary; so that it becomes the policy of the Treasury Department, and I think for the information of the Senate it should be printed in our permanent RECORD. It is not a document; it is a letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know whether the Treasury Department have already published it. If they have, let them, rather than the Senate, pay the expense of the circulation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator object to it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I object until I learn more about it.

Mr. PHELAN. I shall endeavor to inform the Senator.

Mr. PHELAN subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Secretary GLASS to the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to state that the Senator from California assured me that the Treasury Department has not printed this letter. If it had, I still would object to its going into the RECORD.

Mr. PHELAN. I have assured the Senator, on the authority of the Secretary's office, that only mimeograph copies have been made of the letter, and it has not been printed.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
January 30, 1920.

Following is copy of a letter which Secretary GLASS has addressed to Homer L. Ferguson, President of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America:

JANUARY 28, 1920.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the letter of January 22, 1920, signed by yourself and Messrs. A. C. Bedford, John H. Fahey, and Harry A. Wheeler, to whom, as a committee designated by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, was referred a communication transmitting a memorandum signed by 44 prominent American citizens addressed to the United States Government, the Reparations Commission, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, recommending that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States designate representatives of commerce and finance to meet with those of other countries for the purpose of examining the situation as set out in the communication, and recommending such action as may be advisable.

In compliance with your request for an expression of opinion from the Treasury in respect to the observations and recommendations contained in the memorial, I may first state that the views and policy of the Treasury in respect to the international financial situation are set forth in the inclosed extracts from my annual report (pp. 11 to 14, inclusive).

With much that is contained in the memorial the Treasury is in hearty accord. Concerning the need of increased production and decreased consumption, the need of balancing governmental budgets and taking effective measures to deflate currency and credit, concerning the need of prompt and proper determinations by the Reparations Commission which will make possible the resumption of industrial life in Germany and the restoration of trade with Germany, there can be no doubt.

The people of the United States are being called upon by taxes and otherwise not only to meet the Government's expenditures but to reduce the war debt. So far as the countries of Europe are concerned the adoption of similar policies is a matter for the Governments of those countries and for the Reparations Commission.

In an effort to alleviate the situation the United States Government has done all that was considered advisable and practicable. Since the armistice, we have extended to foreign governments the following financial assistance:

Direct advances	$2,380,891,179.65
Funds made available to those Governments through the purchase of their currencies to cover our expenditures in Europe	736,481,586.76
Army and other governmental supplies sold on credit (approximately)	685,000,000.00
Relief (approximately)	100,000,000.00
Unpaid accrued interest up to Jan. 1, 1920, on allied Government obligations	324,211,922.00
Total	4,226,584,688.41

The Treasury is opposed to further governmental aid beyond that outlined in my annual report and in my recent communication to the Ways and Means Committee of Congress with respect to the extension of interest on the allied Government obligations held by the Government of the United States and to the supplying of relief to certain portions of Europe. The Governments of the world must now get out of banking and trade. Loans from Government to Government not only involve additional taxes or borrowings by the lending Government, with the inflation attendant thereon, but also a continuance by the borrowing Government of control over private activities, which only postpones sound solutions of the problems.

The Treasury is opposed to governmental control over foreign trade and finance, and even more opposed to private control. It is convinced that the credits required for the economic restoration and revival of trade must be supplied through private channels; that as a necessary contribution to that end the Governments of the world must assist in the restoration of confidence, stability, and freedom of commerce by the adoption of sound fiscal policies; and that the Reparations Commission must adopt promptly a just and constructive policy.

The memorial which was simultaneously circulated in Europe differs in its scope and character from the one presented in the United States. The European memorial contains some passages omitted in the American memorial, which apparently advocate further governmental financial assistance, and also requests the respective Governments to designate representatives to attend the proposed conference, which would give it an official character.

The Treasury has not looked with favor upon certain features of the memorial nor upon the proposed conference, being apprehensive lest the memorial and such a conference should serve to cause confusion and revive hopes—which, I am certain, are doomed to disappointment—that the American people through their Government will be called upon to assume the burdens of Europe by United States Government loans. Such matters as the suggestion of further governmental loans by the United States, the cancellation of some or all of the obligations of European Governments held by the United States Government, as contemplated by a passage contained in the European memorial but omitted from the American memorial, and the deferring of obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States to liens created in favor of loans hereafter made for reconstruction purposes, are clearly not appropriate for consideration in such a conference as is contemplated by the memorial.

The existing world-wide inflation of currency, credit, and prices is a consequence of the fact that for a period of four or five years the peoples of this earth have been consuming and destroying more than they have produced and saved, and against the wealth so destroyed the warring nations have been issuing currency and evidence of indebtedness. The consequence of the world's greatest war is profound and inescapable. It has affected all the nations of the civilized world, as well those who participated actively in the war as those who did not. The inflation exists in the neutral countries of Europe and in the Orient. It exists where there was no war debt, where the war debt was badly handled, and to some degree where the war debt was well handled.

The problems to the cure of which the distinguished gentlemen are directing their attention have been the subject in one form or another of daily study of the Treasury Department since the outbreak of the war and especially since the signing of the armistice. These problems have at all times been complex and difficult, and simple solutions have never been possible because they involve some factors which are not susceptible of solution by any comprehensive plan. The process of healing the wounds inflicted by the war must necessarily be slow and painful, involving as it does not only the physical restoration of industry and agriculture, but as well the restoration to habits of industry of masses of men accustomed by the war to unsettlement. We must necessarily and to a great extent depend upon and encourage the independent activity and resourcefulness of each person affected to repair his own fortunes, with the assistance of his business connections in other countries, and also upon each individual to return to a normal life of industry and economy.

From the moment of the cessation of hostilities the Treasury of the United States has pursued a policy of looking toward the restoration as promptly as possible of normal economic conditions, the removal of governmental controls and interferences, and the restoration of individual initiative and free competition in business. It has insisted upon strict economy in governmental expenditure and upon the maintenance of taxes at a level which, with the salvage of war materials and supplies, and so forth, will insure the prompt retirement of the floating debt of the United States and the establishment of a fund adequate for the retirement of the funded debt in the course of a generation. The Treasury long since, with the cooperation of the Federal Reserve Board, removed the embargo on the export of gold, thus enabling American citizens and, indeed, the nations of the world, to the extent that they find credit here, to finance their purchases throughout the world in cash.

Rightly or wrongly, a different policy has been pursued in Europe. European Governments have maintained since the cessation of hostilities embargoes upon the export of gold. The rectification of the exchanges now adverse to Europe lies primarily in the hands of European Governments. The normal method of meeting an adverse international balance is to ship gold. The refusal to ship gold prevents the rectification of an adverse exchange. The need of gold embargoes lies in the expended currency and credit structure of Europe. Relief would be found in disarmament, resumption of industrial life and activity, and the imposition of adequate taxes and the issue of adequate domestic loans.

The American people should not, in my opinion, be called upon to finance, and would not, in my opinion, respond to a demand that they finance, the requirements of Europe in so far as they result from the failure to take these necessary steps for the rehabilitation of credit.

Such things as international bond issues, international guaranties, and international measures for the stabilization of exchange are utterly impracticable so long as there exist inequalities of taxation and domestic financial policies in the various countries involved, and when these inequalities no long exist such devices will be unnecessary.

It is unthinkable that the people of a country which has been called upon to submit to so drastic a program of taxation as that adopted by the United States, which called for financing from current taxes a full one-third of the war expenditures, including loans to the Allies, should undertake to remedy the inequalities of exchange resulting from a less drastic policy of domestic taxation adopted by the other Governments of the world. The remedy for the situation is to be found not in the manufacture of bank credit in the United States for the movement of exports, a process which has already proceeded too far, but in the movement of goods, of investment securities, and, in default of goods or securities, then of gold in this country from Europe; and in order that such securities may be absorbed by investors our people must consume less and save.

The United States could not, if it would, assume the burdens of all the earth. It can not undertake to finance the requirements of Europe, because it can not shape the fiscal policies of the Governments of Europe. The Government of the United States can not tax the American people to meet the deficiencies arising from the failure of the Governments of Europe to balance their budgets, nor can the Government of the United States tax the American people to subsidize the business of our exporters. It can not do so by direct measures of taxation, nor can it look with composure upon the manufacture of bank credit to finance our exports when the requirements of Europe are for working capital rather than for bank credit. Lamentable as would be the effects upon our industrial life and upon Europe itself of the continued maintenance of an exchange barrier against the importation into Europe of commodities from the United States, this country can not continue to extend credits on a sufficient scale to cover our present swollen trade balance against Europe, while paying cash—gold and silver—to the countries of Central and South America and the Far East, with which it has an adverse balance on its own and international account. The consequence of the maintenance by Europe of this barrier will be to force the United States to do business with those countries with which it is able to do business on a cash basis. The only other policy which the United States could adopt would be the policy of reestablishing embargoes on gold and silver and of inflating its own currency to the same extent that the currencies of Europe are inflated, with a view to lowering its exchange to a parity with theirs. This would involve taxing the whole people for the benefit of our exporters and the benefit of Europe and submitting to have imposed on the United States domestic financial policies adopted by Europe but quite contrary to those heretofore adopted by the United States. It would mean a world-wide inflation, the abandonment of the gold standard, and, ultimately, chaos.

If the peoples and Governments of Europe live within their incomes, increase their production as much as possible, and limit their imports to actual necessities, foreign credits to cover adverse balances would most probably be supplied by private investors and the demand to resort to such impracticable methods as Government loans and bank credits would cease.

There is no more logical or practical step toward solving their own reconstruction problem than for the Allies to give value to their indemnity claims against Germany by reducing those claims to a determinate amount which Germany may be reasonably expected to pay, and then for Germany to issue obligations for such amount and be set free to work it out. This would increase Germany's capacity to pay, restore confidence, and improve the trade and commerce of the world. The maintenance of claims which can not be paid causes apprehension and serves no useful purpose.

Private investors can only make loans to the extent of their savings in excess of domestic capital requirements, and then will only make them to the extent that they have confidence in the securities or obligations offered. The adoption of the measures indicated should add to the confidence of the private investor.

If the Chamber of Commerce of the United States considers it advisable and desirable to designate representatives to attend an unofficial conference, the Treasury does not desire to offer any objection, provided the scope and character and limitations of such a conference, as well as the impossibility of United States Government action, are clearly understood.

Cordially, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

HOMER L. FERGUSON, Esq.,
President Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, Washington, D. C.

[From the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 1919. The international financial situation.]

The international financial situation is one of great importance and in which we are seriously interested. The present position relative to foreign financing and the general policy of the Treasury concerning this vital problem should be fully stated.

Since the armistice the United States has advanced to the Governments of the Allies, as of the close of business October 31, 1919, the sum of $2,329,257,138.55, and there remained on that date an unexpended balance of $593,628,111.45 from the total loans of $10,000,000,000 authorized under the Liberty loan acts.

The Treasury asked and obtained power for the War Finance Corporation to make advances up to the amount of $1,000,000,000 for nonwar purposes, and the War Finance Corporation is prepared to make such advances.

By the act approved September 17, 1919, the Federal Reserve Board is authorized to permit, until January 1, 1921, national banks to invest to a limited extent in the stock of American corporations principally engaged in such phases of international or foreign financial operations as may be necessary to facilitate exports.

The Secretary of War is authorized to sell surplus Army stores on credit.

The United States Wheat Director is authorized to sell wheat to Europe on credit.

The power which at present exists in the Government or governmental agencies to assist in meeting Europe's financial needs is, therefore, considerable. This power must, of course, be exercised with extreme caution and with the most careful regard for the urgent needs of our own people for an ample supply of foodstuffs and other necessities of life at reasonable prices.

The Treasury is considering with representatives of the Governments of the Allies the funding of the demand obligations which the United States holds into long-time obligations, and at the same time the funding during the reconstruction period, or, say, for a period of two or three years, of the interest on the obligations of foreign Governments acquired by the United States under the Liberty loan acts.

The Treasury believes that the need of Europe for financial assistance, very great and very real though it is, has been much exaggerated, both here and abroad. Our hearts have been so touched by the suffering which the war left in its train, and our experience is so recent of the financial conditions which existed during the war (when men were devoting themselves to the business of destruction) that we are prone to overlook the vast recuperative power inherent in any country which, though devastated, has not been depopulated, and the people of which are not starved afterwards. We must all feel deep sympathy for the suffering in Europe to-day, but we must not allow our sympathy to warp our judgment, and, by exaggerating Europe's financial needs, make it more difficult to fill them.

Men must go back to work in Europe, must contribute to increase production. The industries of Europe, of course, can not be set to work without raw materials, machinery, etc., and, to the extent that these are to be secured from the United States, the problem of financing the restoration of Europe belongs primarily to our exporters. Governmental financial assistance in the past and talk of plans for future Government or banking aid to finance exports have apparently led our industrial concerns to the erroneous expectation that their war profits, based so largely on exports, will continue indefinitely without effort or risk on their part. To them will fall the profits of the exports and upon them will fall the consequences of failure to make the exports. So soon as domestic stocks, which were very low at the time of the armistice, have been replenished, those industries which have been developed to meet a demand for great exports, paid for out of Government war loans, will be forced to close plants and forego dividends unless they maintain and develop an outlet abroad.

The industries of the country must be brought to a realization of the gravity of this problem, must go out and seek markets abroad, must reduce prices at home and abroad to a reasonable level, and create or cooperate in creating the means of financial export business. There is no reason for high commodity prices in the specter of European demand nor for high interest rates in the specter of European credits. Our fear must be that the cessation of war exports will result in closed plants, passed dividends, and general depression. The way to avoid those evils is to stimulate production and encourage industrial and commercial activity and not to burden them with high interest rates, which are a deterrent to these things, but, unfortunately, are not a deterrent, except temporarily, in such times as these, to speculation.

Since armistice day the consistent policy of the Treasury has been, as far as possible, to restore private initiative and remove governmental controls and interferences. It has been the view of the Treasury that only thus can the prompt restoration of healthy economic life be gained. The embargoes on gold and silver and control of foreign exchange have been removed, as well as the voluntary and informal control of call money and the stock-exchange loan account. The control exercised by the capital issues committee over capital issues has been discontinued. Thus the financial markets of the United States have been opened to the whole world and all restrictions removed that might have hindered America's capital and credit resources, as well as its great gold reserve, from being available in aid of the world's commerce and Europe's need.

There are those who believe that the dollar should be kept at par—no more, no less—in the market of foreign exchange. If effective action were taken to carry out such a policy, it could only be done by drawing gold out of the United States when the dollar would otherwise be at a discount and by inflating credit when the dollar would otherwise be at a premium.

The dollar is now at a premium almost everywhere in the world. Its artificial reduction and maintenance at the gold par of exchange in all currencies is quite unthinkable unless we propose to level all differences in the relative credit of nations and for our gold reserve substitute a reserve consisting of the promises to pay of any nation that chooses to become our debtor. Inequalities of exchange reflect not only the trade and financial balance between two countries but, particularly after a great war such as that we have been through, the inequalities of domestic finance. The United States has met a greater proportion of the cost of the war from taxes and bond issues than any other country. Largely as a consequence of this policy, the buying power of the dollar at home has been better sustained than has the buying power at home of the currency of any European belligerent. For the United States to determine by governmental action to depress the dollar as measured in terms of foreign exchange and to improve the position of other currencies as measured in terms of dollars would be to shift to the American people the tax and loan burdens of foreign countries. This shifted burden would be measured by the taxes to be imposed and the further loans to be absorbed by our people as a consequence, and by increased domestic prices.

United States Government action at this time to prevent, in respect to foreign exchange, the ordinary operation of the law of supply and demand, which automatically sets in action corrective causes and, to prevent the dollar from going to a premium when its natural tendency is to do so, would artificially stimulate our exports, and, through the competition of export demand with domestic demand, maintain or increase domestic prices.

The view of the Governments of the Allies, I take it, is that had they—after the war control of their imports had been relaxed—attempted to continue to "peg" their exchanges here at an artificial level by Government borrowing, the effect would have been to stimulate their imports and discourage their exports, thus aggravating their already unfavorable international balances.

It is not, of course, to be expected that the breach left by the withdrawal of governmental support of exchange can be filled by private initiative until the ratification of the treaty of peace has given reasonable assurance against the political risk which, rather than any commercial or credit risk, now deters private lenders. Some progress has already been made in placing here, through private channels, the loans of allied and neutral European countries and municipalities. The Treasury favors the making, in our markets, of such loans, which contribute to relieve the exchanges. I am sure that when peace is consummated, and the political risk measurably removed, American exporters and European importers will lay the basis of credit in sound business transactions, and I know that American bankers will not fail then to devise means of financing the needs of the situation nor American investors to respond to Europe's demand for capital on a sound investment basis.

Meanwhile it is well to remember the invisible factors, which are always at work toward a solution of the problem. Immigrants' remittances to Europe are and will continue to be a very large item in rectifying the exchanges. As soon as peace is concluded foreign travel will be a further item. Another very important factor is the purchase of European securities and properties and repurchase of foreign-held American securities by American investors. But the principal factor in Europe's favor is the inevitable curtailment of her imports and expansion of her exports. These processes, of course, are stimulated by the very position of the exchanges which they tend to correct.

Sincerely, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to file a notice for an amendment of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

"Mr. PHELAN. I hereby give notice, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, that on Tuesday, February 10, 1920, I will move to amend Rule XXII by striking out the following language now contained in the last paragraph of said rule, viz:

"'Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time.'

"The reason for the change was suggested by the experience of the Senate in the application of Rule XXII, the cloture rule, when unanimous consent was refused to a request for a verbal and necessary change in the interest of good legislation."

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that the committee amendments may now be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the first committee amendment.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "include," to insert the words "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer, superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and," so as to read:

The provisions of this act shall include American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer, superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and employees under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens, excepting persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and may be extended by Executive order, upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, to include any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States not classified at the time of the passage of this act. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any employee or group of employees in the classified civil service whose tenure of office or employment is intermittent or of uncertain duration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know that what I may say will have any special reference to the pending amendment, but I feel that it will not be inopportune for me to make now whatever observations I may have to make on the merits of the pending legislation.

The distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] discussed the bill on yesterday, and in the earlier part of his remarks he pointed out the necessity for some method of retirement. So far as I now recall, I am in entire accord with what he said in that behalf.

It was my privilege to serve on the committee some years ago, and a part of that time as chairman of the committee. The principal question before the committee during the period when I was chairman related to the retirement of the superannuated clerks and employees of the Government. I gave to the matter a great deal of study, as did other members of the committee, notably the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and whatever differences there may have been among us in the earlier part of the investigation we came practically to the same conclusion, and the result was the bill which I introduced in the Senate and which was later favorably reported to the Senate.

In 1918 the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], being then chairman of the committee, presented the so-called McKellar bill, and after a pretty thorough discussion of the subject the Senate substituted the so-called Pomerene bill for the so-called McKellar bill. At that time it was not pressed further, and except for a few sporadic efforts to take up the bill when there was not a fair representation of the Senate present, nothing has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he is able to inform the Senate why it was, after the substitution of the so-called Pomerene bill for the so-called McKellar bill, as he has just stated, that there was no effort made by those in charge of the bill to pass it? I observed that, I remember it very distinctly, and I wondered then why those who were behind the bill seemed immediately to lose interest in it. Is it true that those interested in the McKellar bill and in charge of it at that time would rather have had no legislation whatever than to have the substituted bill?

Mr. POMERENE. Answering the Senator from Nebraska, I may say that at least one of the Senators in charge of the bill, after the Senate had acted favorably upon the substitute, said to me personally that he would rather have no bill than to have that bill.

Mr. President, I approach this subject with some conflicting emotions. I want to say, in the first place, that there is not a Senator in the Chamber who is more thoroughly convinced than I of the necessity of some legislation bearing upon the subject which will result in the retirement of the superannuated employees of the Government.

Approach the subject from a twofold standpoint, first, the humanitarian standpoint, because I firmly believe that the man who has rendered faithful service for a long period of years for the Government ought to receive some support from that Government in his declining years; and in the second place, looking at the subject from a standpoint of efficiency, I have no doubt that it will be for the best interest of the Government to provide for the retirement of these employees when they become superannuated, for two reasons: First, it eliminates those who are rendering only a moderate service when they ought to render a service which is up to the standard average of the service in the department; and, secondly, because when they are eliminated it gives to the younger employee more zest in his service, and I think he will do better work. In other words, the morale of the Government departments requires that something shall be done.

Again permit me to say that though I took up the subject and had the pleasure of hearing from the committee of the employees who had an interest in the subject an expression of their gratitude for what I had done in their behalf at that time, yet they have not hesitated whenever occasion presented itself to distort and misrepresent the position that I occupy. But that is neither here nor there. I want to say once and for all that so long as I am in the United States Senate I shall render such service as my best judgment suggests and it will make no difference what the consequence may be to me personally. I would rather be out of the service, in private life, with the consciousness that I had done my duty as I saw it than to be in this Chamber truckling to every influence that attempts to exert itself with Senators or Congressmen.

Mr. President, there are three bills to which I wish to advert——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. For a question; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has spoken several times of influence being exerted on Senators in regard to the bill. The Senator is perfectly aware that there are influences for and influence against. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that the Senator himself has been in council with some of the influences that are opposed to the particular bill? I want to be fair and I want the Senator to be fair to his colleagues. The Senator made that statement a number of times at the last session of Congress and he has made it a number of times during this session. I think it is wholly unfair to those who are in favor of the bill, and I beg the Senator to withdraw that statement, because the Senator knows that on his side of the controversy there are those who have been almost in daily conversation with the Senator and who have been furnishing figures for the Senator's use.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I made the statement I did because it was the truth, and, so far as I am concerned, it will stand. It is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. POMERENE. No; not now.

Mr. McKELLAR. In my own time I will undertake to show that the Senator has been in daily conference with those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will possess his soul in peace for a moment, I was about to say that I have been in constant conference with anybody and everybody who I thought could give me any information on this subject, and I shall continue to hold conference with anybody and everybody from whom I can get information so long as the bill remains before the Senate.

Mr. President, the principal features of the bill which I shall offer at the proper time as a substitute for the pending measure are, in brief, these: It provides for an assessment to be made upon the salaries of employees, figured to one-tenth of 1 per cent, sufficient to purchase an annuity equal to one-half of the compensation of the employee, but in no event to exceed $360.

Senators will recognize the fact that as the employees advance in years the amount of the assessment required would be excessive if we sought to compel the employee to pay the entire cost of the annuity; so, after taking counsel upon the subject, it was decided to provide that in no event should the assessment exceed 8 per cent of the salary. I may say frankly to Senators that this is only an incident to the bill. Senators may, if they feel that some plan of this kind should be adopted, reduce that amount. I am interested more particularly in the fundamental principle of the bill, which is to the effect that the system shall be ultimately self-supporting.

The proposed substitute provides further that the retirement age shall be 70 years. We felt that many of the employees of the Government were doing genuinely good service at that age. The McKellar-Keating bill, which was presented in 1918, provided for the retirement of mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and railway mail clerks at 65 years of age, and of all other employees at 68 years. Senators will recognize that a reduction in the age of retirement adds to the expense to the Government. Under the scheme of that bill the employees were divided into several classes. Those in class A would get 50 per cent of their average annual basic salary for the 10 years next preceding the date of retirement, not to exceed $600 for 30 or more years of service; those of class B would receive 40 per cent of their average annual basic salary for the 10 years next preceding the date of retirement, not to exceed $540 for 25 to 30 years' service; class C would receive for 20 to 25 years' service 30 per cent of their average annual basic salary, but not to exceed $480; class D, for 15 to 20 years' service, would receive 25 per cent of their average annual basic salary for the 10 years next preceding retirement.

The bill referred to was the so-called half-and-half plan. It was based upon the thought that it would take 5 per cent of the salaries of all of the employees to provide the annuities to which I have just referred; one-half to be paid by the employees and one-half to be supplied by the Government. If, however, Senators will take the pains to look at the hearings upon that subject they will find that the actuary, Dr. Maddrill, whom they consulted, made the statement that it would cost a few tenths of 1 per cent less than 6 per cent; but that fact was lost sight of in the eagerness to have it appear that it was a half-and-half plan, taking no account of the additional expense which was involved in the difference between 5 per cent and the few tenths of 1 per cent less than 6 per cent.

The pending bill, which was introduced by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, changes the retirement age very materially. The beneficiaries are divided into three classes so far as retirement is concerned. The first class includes mechanics, city and rural carriers, and post-office clerks, who may be retired at 62 years; second, railway postal clerks, who may be retired at 60 years; and, third, all others, who may be retired at 65 years. Again I say that because of the reduction of the age of retirement the expense to the Government will be, by reason of that fact, much greater than when the retirement age is higher.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would tell the Senate, if he can, just what that difference would be. It seems to me that is quite a material matter in passing on the respective plans.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean now as to the expense of the several schemes proposed?

Mr. NORRIS. I mean how much additional expense is to be added by changing the retirement age?

Mr. POMERENE. I will have to get that from deductions which I will make a little later on in the presentation of the question of the expense of the bill; and, if the Senator will indulge me a little further, I will take that subject up.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. POMERENE. It makes, I may say, a very material difference, for two reasons—first, the contributions are cut off for the years intervening; and, second, also, as the Senator is quite aware, when it comes to the compound interest which all of these payments bear it increases very much more rapidly in the later years than it does in the earlier years, so that there will be less of an accumulation for the trust fund out of which to pay that portion of the expense which is chargeable to the employee.

Now, I wish the Senate also to bear in mind as I pass along, while the so-called McKellar bill was called a 50-50 plan, this bill, by reason of the reduced ages, even though the assessment against the employees is 2½ per cent, will cost the Government a very much larger percentage of the total cost than will the McKellar bill. I refer to that particularly as a reply to the statement which was made by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota on yesterday when he said that in his belief ultimately the bill would approach a 50-50 basis.

The pending bill also very substantially increases the annuities which are to be paid. The employees are divided into six different classes. Class A embraces those who have been in the service for 30 years or more, who will be entitled to an annuity equal to 60 per cent of the average annual basic salary during the last 10 years of service, or $720, with a minimum of $360, making the annuity $120 more than it was under either the so-called Pomerene bill or the McKellar bill. Class B embraces those who have been in the service from 27 to 29 years. They are to be paid as an annuity 54 per cent of the average annual basic salary for the last 10 years, or a maximum of $648 and a minimum of $324, or $48 more than the maximum provided in either of the other two bills. Class C embraces those who have been in the service from 24 to 26 years, who are to be paid 48 per cent of the average annual basic salary received by them for the last 10 years. Their maximum will be $576 and the minimum $288. Class D provides for an annuity of 42 per cent of the average annual basic salary for those who are in the service from 21 to 23 years, and their maximum annuity will be $504, with a minimum of $252. Class E provides an annuity of 36 per cent of the average annual basic salary for those who are in the service from 18 to 20 years, making the maximum $432 and the minimum $216. Class F provides an annuity of 32 per cent of the average annual basic salary for those who are in the service from 15 to 17 years, and makes their maximum annuity $360 and their minimum annuity $180 per annum.

I may observe in passing—and I wish to call the chairman's attention especially to this thought—that if the bill which he presents becomes a law, it will be possible for employees to enter the service at 20 years, retire at 35 years, withdraw all of their contributions with the accumulated interest on one day, reenter the service the next day, pay the 2½ per cent from that time on, and still in the computation of length of service they will be entitled to credit for all of their years of service in Government employ before, and at the same time they will have withdrawn their contributions.

Mr. STERLING. No, Mr. President; if the Senator will permit me, I do not think any such thing can happen as a result of this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I call it to the Senator's attention. I am quite sure that he did not intend that, but I think he will find that will be the effect of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no.

Mr. POMERENE. If I am wrong about that I will make a correction later, but that is my present judgment about it.

Mr. President, a good deal of time was expended on yesterday to show the improvement to the service which would arise from the passage of the pending bill. I am quite sure that the distinguished chairman who has charge of the bill will concede that the same benefit will accrue to the service whether one or the other of these bills is adopted. We are all interested in relieving the service of the superannuated and taking care of them in their declining years.

Mr. President, I want to say as I proceed that after I became interested in this subject I had occasion to consult many times with Dr. Herbert D. Brown, the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency. I also had consulted with others, and others appeared before our committee. I am confident that there is no man, either in or out of the Senate, who has given more study to this subject than Dr. Brown, and I very much regret that the committee, when they were hearing the testimony which was presented to them, did not call before them Dr. Brown and have him examine the testimony which had been given by these other experts. It was due the Government, it was due the civil-service employees, it was due to those who had served on the committee theretofore and had given a vast deal of time and attention to this subject, and I am satisfied that if they had had Dr. Brown before them they would not have made some of the statements which are either in the evidence or in the report which has been submitted to the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I want to take up this subject briefly in order to point out what is going to be the cost of the several bills.

When the committee had this subject up before, I had secured from Dr. Brown and his assistants a statement of the cost of this bill to the Government. That statement will be found on page 37 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 3, 1918. Bear in mind that the plan of that bill was to make it ultimately self-supporting. If Senators are interested in the subject, they will find that the first year it would cost the Government, to retire those who were past the age of 70 years, $2,800,500. Of course each succeeding year there will be added to this list other superannuates, and the cost to the Government will increase until it reaches the peak in the twenty-first year, and it will then cost the Government $6,207,600. From that time, by reason of the fact that there are constantly increasing contributions by the employees and constantly increasing accretions from the compound interest, it gradually declines until the sixtieth year, when the total cost to the Government will be only $100; but the sum total of the cost to the Government for the 60 years in order to make this system self-supporting will be $172,351,800, or slightly below $3,000,000 per year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may have stated this, but I was interrupted, and if he did state it I did not hear him. Under what bill would the result which the Senator states be brought about?

Mr. POMERENE. Under the substitute bill which I have offered—the so-called Pomerene bill—which was substituted in 1918 for the so-called McKellar bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask that that entire table be reinserted in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Cost of all pensions, $172,351,800.

Mr. POMERENE. On December 5, 1918, in a discussion of the cost of these several bills, I took up the cost of the pending McKellar bill; and, without attempting to go over the subject as fully as I did at that time, I desire to refer to a few facts. As will appear on page 139 of the RECORD of December 5, 1918, I refer to the report which was made, and on page 7 of that report I read as follows:

> For instance, the estimated receipts from employees during the year 1920 will be $9,000,000.

That is said to be only half the cost of the bill. In other words, the total cost would be $18,000,000, and the total cost for 60 years would be $1,080,000,000, one-half of this to be paid by the Government and one-half of it to be paid by the employees; or, in other words, in 60 years that bill would cost the Government $540,000,000, as against $172,351,800 under the substitute which was adopted for the McKellar bill.

Now, Mr. President, after the distinguished chairman had again presented the bill known as the Sterling-Lehlbach bill, I took up the subject with Dr. Brown—and I may say that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] took up the subject with him at or about the same time, as I am informed—and asked him to determine what the cost of that proposed legislation would be. I have the tables presented; and there is such a tremendous difference in the cost as estimated by these several experts that it seems to me the committee ought to have been interested in having them try to harmonize their differences, if they could be harmonized. I may say also that this estimate is based upon the number of employees under the civil service during the year 1916, and in that respect it is based upon the same number of employees as are included in the estimate of cost presented by Dr. Brown under the so-called Pomerene bill.

This table shows the cost to the Government——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The table from which the Senator is about to read is one that applies to the McKellar bill, is it?

Mr. POMERENE. No. I am not sure I have it with me. I simply presented the totals of the cost as they appear in the table. I will try to get it later on and have it inserted.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not so anxious to get that as to know what particular bill these tables apply to.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator, perhaps, did not hear my statement. I said I was going to present a table showing the cost under the pending Sterling bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That makes it plain.

Mr. POMERENE. It will be borne in mind that there are in this table three classes of employees, according to the age of retirement—60, 62, and 65.

In one column will appear the cost to the Government of the retirement of railway postal clerks; in the next column the cost of retirement of rural and city letter carriers, post-office clerks, and mechanics; and in the third column the cost of retirement of general employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. Then follows the column giving the total cost to the Government for the three classes during each of the years from 1 to 77 years in the future.

The total cost to the Government the first year, immediately upon this bill going into effect, if it does, will be $4,585,000. In 10 years it will mount up to $85,655,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give the expense for the second and third years?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. At the end of the first year it will be $5,261,000; at the end of the second year it will be $5,548,000; at the end of the third year it will be $6,193,000; at the end of the fourth year it will be $6,843,000; at the end of the fifth year it will be $7,553,000. The total for the 10 years will be $85,655,000. At the end of 20 years it will have cost $261,911,000; at the end of 25 years it will have cost $396,230,000; at the end of 30 years it will have cost $555,028,000; at the end of 35 years it will have cost $725,832,000; at the end of the fortieth year it will have cost $896,183,000. I will not read all of the intervening figures, but at the end of the seventieth year it will have cost the Government $1,782,777,000.

Mr. GORE. How much at the end of the sixtieth year?

Mr. POMERENE. At the end of the sixtieth year, $1,500,160,000.

Mr. GORE. Does the Senator mean that it will have cost the Government that, or that it will have cost both the Government and the employees that?

Mr. POMERENE. That means the total cost to the Government and the employees; and I will point out a little later the percentage of the cost.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator give the last figures again, as to the total cost to the Government and the employees together?

Mr. POMERENE. What year?

Mr. STERLING. The one the Senator just gave, and the year also to which it was applied.

Mr. POMERENE. At the end of the sixtieth year, $1,500,160,000.

Mr. STERLING. That it would cost both the Government and the employee?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. These figures are very interesting, as the entire subject is, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Brandegee	Harding	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Harris	Myers	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Spencer
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
France	Kellogg	Page	Underwood
Gerry	King	Phelan	Williams
Gore	Lodge	Pomerene
Gronna	McKellar	Ransdell

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on official business.

I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. WATSON, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. PHIPPS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, at the time the question of a quorum was raised I had made the statement that at the end of the sixtieth year the pending bill would have cost for annuities $1,500,160,000. The table that was prepared and presented to me shows the total cost for 77 years would be $1,980,216,000.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is that based upon the present personnel of the classified service?

Mr. POMERENE. No; it is based on the number of employees in the civil service during the year 1916, and the tables which I present assume that there will be no increase in the number of employees.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the number of employees has more than doubled in the departments here in Washington. I do not know whether there is more than double the number of employees of the Government as a whole. The Senator knows that with the increasing activities of the Federal Government, and with the manifest tendency toward all sorts of socialistic schemes, the employees of the Government may be hundreds of thousands or several millions within 25 years.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly the substance of the Senator's statement is correct, that there not only has been a very substantial increase in the number of employees since 1916, but there will continue to be an increase in the number of employees as the population of the country and the activities of the Government increase. I might say that, in round numbers, this includes something like two hundred and sixty and odd thousand employees. I will a little later on get the exact figures.

I may say that Dr. Brown went into the matter with very great care, and did so under the instructions of the Senate and the suggestion of the committee. He first prepared a card system giving the names, the ages, and the salaries of all the employees in the Government. I want that fact to be borne in mind, because the accuracy of his figures will be questioned and has been questioned.

Then, again, of course, the Senate will remember that it would be next to impossible to determine what would be the increase in the number of employees for each of the succeeding years. I ask that the table to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Estimate of total cost to the Government of retiring employees in the classified civil service (Sterling-Lehlbach bills).

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to direct the Senate's attention particularly to certain fundamental facts as shown by the report. The first year the plan will cost $4,585,000. The twenty-fifth year it will cost $29,145,000. The cost of the system continues to increase until it reaches the peak year, the thirty-fifth year, when it will cose $34,513,000.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator state what, according to the report from which he reads, will be the cost the fifth year and the tenth year?

Mr. POMERENE. The fifth year it will cost $7,573,000.

Mr. STERLING. Is that the cost to the Government or the cost to the Government and the employees?

Mr. POMERENE. That is the total cost.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator what number of annuitants are considered in that estimate?

Mr. POMERENE. I can not now give the Senator that number, but I will have some reference to make to the number of annuitants a little later on. The Senator asked, I believe, for the cost at the end of the tenth year?

Mr. GORE. During the tenth year.

Mr. POMERENE. During the tenth year the cost will be $11,707,000.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator has not the number of annuitants to whom payments will be made at that time?

Mr. POMERENE. I have not that number here now. I think I was furnished with that information a little while ago, but I have not been able to examine it yet. However, I will get it and insert it in the RECORD later.

Mr. STERLING. I shall be glad if the Senator will furnish the number of annuitants to whom payments are to be made during the successive years.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I can do that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator whether the figures he is now giving represent the amount of money paid in the one year.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that one year.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator tell about what proportion of that amount is paid by the Government and what proportion by the employees?

Mr. POMERENE. I will give that in just a moment.

I think I stated a moment ago that the peak year would be the thirty-fifth year, at a cost of $34,513,000. Then it declines until the sixty-third, when it reaches $28,205,000. Then it continues from that year on to cost that same amount each year, so that the total cost to the Government for the 77 years as shown by the table will be $2,080,216,000, or an average cost to the Government per year of $27,015,792.20.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asked me a question a moment ago as to the percentage of the cost to the Government and to the employees. I think I was a little inaccurate when I said I could give the percentage of cost to all the employees. What I have here is the estimated cost of pensioning the railway postal clerks. I think the percentages perhaps will not be very different between the cost to the Government and to the employees of this class and the cost to the Government and to the employees of the total number. I also have and I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an estimate of the cost of pensioning the railway postal clerks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The estimate of cost referred to is as follows:

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to explain this last table briefly. In the table giving the cost of pensioning the railway postal clerks is given the cost for each year. In the first column appear the years, first, second, third, and so forth. The cost to the Government of pensioning the employees is given in the next column, and to the employees in the third column, and the total cost in the fourth column. Then in the fifth column appears the percentage of the total cost each year to the Government and in the next column the percentage of the cost to the employees. Then follow two columns giving a summation of the cost to the Government and to the employees and the total cost. Without taking the time to read all these figures, because it would be very tedious, I desire to submit to the Senate for its consideration certain facts. The first year this plan would cost, all told, $536,324, and 100 per cent of the cost would be paid by the Government. The second year the total cost would be $579,709, of which 99.94 per cent would be paid by the Government and six-tenths of 1 per cent would be paid by the employees.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio why he assumes that for the first year all of the cost of the bill as affecting the railway postal employees will be paid by the Government?

Mr. POMERENE. Because that is the fact.

Mr. STERLING. But is it a fact?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Will there not be contributions made by all of the employees——

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will pardon me, will not there be contributions made by all the employees in that branch of the service, as well as in every other branch of the service?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course the Senator from South Dakota has asked the question in good faith, and I shall try to answer it in the same way. Bear in mind that this proposed act is to go into effect, I think, 90 days after its passage. Am I not right in that?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. Ninety days following its passage, therefore, the then superannuated employees will sever their connection with the Government and their annuity must be paid during that year. However, there will be certain contributions made by the employees, and those are taken into account the next year, at the end of which the cost to the Government will be 99.94 per cent and the cost to the employees will be only six-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in further answer to the Senator from South Dakota, I wish to say that the payments that may be made by the employees who are not separated from the service in the meantime under the bill could be all drawn out with interest; so why should those payments be taken into consideration in arriving at the percentage that the Government pays for the first year?

Mr. POMERENE. That is true; the Senator from Utah has called attention to a very important factor in the consideration of this legislation. I am going to refer to it now, but I shall discuss it further a little bit later.

It must be borne in mind that under this plan the funds which are contributed by the employees are trust funds. A separate account is to be kept with each employee, as it should be. Under the plan which is proposed in the substitute bill which I shall present, and which was the result of the study of the committee when I had the honor to be its chairman, all of these trust funds have to be invested in bonds because they are trust funds.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me a moment. The vice of the system contained in the pending bill is that—I do not say that it was purposely done—in order to make it appear that the cost is going to be merely negligible it is sought to pay all of the annuities out of the trust funds, while they should be held as a reserve fund for the several contributors paying it; and I want to say to you, Senators, if you have not had occasion to study this problem, that has been the scheme that has wrecked many of the life insurance institutions of this country. It is wholly vicious, and I say that with all respect. I shall discuss that subject, perhaps, a little later.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator from Ohio does not have any figures as to any other class except the railway mail employees, I take it that the same rule would apply to the other classes?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. NORRIS. So that, as a matter of fact, the percentage the Senator has given in regard to the expense for the first year would be the same as to other classes of Government employees?

Mr. POMERENE. Practically the same; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And if the rule works out the same, it would be all paid by the Government except six-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes, for the first year; and, as I go on, I am going to give the exact percentages so far as they apply to this particular class.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that when he reaches that point he call the particular attention of the Senate to the provisions of the pending bill which will allow a citizen 20 years of age who enters the Government service to be retired at 65 years of age, but after having served 15 years, when 35 years of age, he can leave the service and withdraw every cent of the annuity which he has paid, with compound interest; and immediately reenter the service and draw the very highest rate of annuity at the end of 65 years.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Ohio has already called attention to that fact.

Mr. POMERENE. I did so while the Senator from Utah was temporarily out of the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not aware that the Senator from Ohio had done so.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, let me go a little further as to the cost of pensioning the railway postal clerks. In the twenty-fifth year the total cost will be $3,496,720; the cost to the Government will be 87.67 per cent of the total, and the cost to the employees will be 12.33 per cent of the total. In the fiftieth year the total cost will be $3,814,473, the percentage of cost to the Government will be 72.87 per cent, and the percentage of cost to the employees will be 27.13 per cent. In the seventy-seventh year the total cost of pensioning the railway postal clerks will be $3,709,213, the percentage of cost to the Government will be 70.98 per cent, and the percentage of cost to the employees will be 29.02 per cent.

The total cost to the Government and to the employees for the 77 years—and these figures relate to the railway postal clerks—will be $247,071,338, the average cost for the 77 years will be $3,208,718.54, and the per cent of cost to the Government during these years will be 78.43, while the percentage of cost to the employees will be 21.57. So there is a very radical difference between the statement made by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who has charge of the pending bill, and myself. In his judgment, as he stated yesterday, after a time—and I am not sure that he mentioned the number of years, but after a certain time—the pending bill would be practically a 50-50 plan. As a matter of fact, it is a 78.43 per cent as against a 21.57 per cent plan; in other words, the Government will be paying in round numbers about four-fifths of the total cost.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Just here and in connection with what the Senator has stated I wish to call attention to the estimates on that very subject made by the Government actuary, Mr. McCoy. He furnishes a table in which he gives the cost to the Government according to the number of years of service of the employee, running from 15 years of service, that being the minimum years of service under which the employee may be able to share in the benefits of this bill, to 44 years. At 44 years the cost to the Government will be 38 per cent; at 40 years, according to Mr. McCoy, it will be 49 per cent; at 35 years it will be 61 per cent; it runs during the years between 44 years of service and 15 years of service from 38 per cent to 79 per cent. So it must follow, I think, from the statements furnished by the Government actuary, that it is about a half-and-half proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there are actuaries and actuaries. The plan which has been submitted in that statement will never stand the test of cross-examination. More than that, the difference between the estimates made by Mr. McCoy and Dr. Brown is such that if the Congress of the United States wants to be square with the Government and square with the people the different estimates will be investigated, so that the Senate may know the truth before we adopt a plan of this kind and fasten it permanently upon the Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Ohio that Senators shall know the truth about this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, sir; I am sure of that.

Mr. STERLING. I assume there will be some honest differences between actuaries in regard to this matter; but, as to the actuary who made the statement to which I have referred, I believe as much confidence can be placed in what he says and in the statements he makes in regard to these matters as in the statements of any other actuary who may be produced. He has been the actuary, it may be said in a sense, for the Senate of the United States in the consideration of financial and revenue bills, the trusted aid of the Committee on Finance at session after session of the Senate.

If the Senator from Ohio will permit a further interruption, the figures I gave a moment ago in regard to the per cent that the Government would have to pay were based on a $1,200 salary. When the salary is larger, because of the larger contribution of the employee under this plan, the percentage paid by the Government is still less. When it comes to the $1,800 salary the Government will be contributing but 8 per cent to the man who has served 44 years, 24 per cent to the man who has served 20 years, 41 per cent to the man who has served 35 years, and so on; and when it comes to the $2,000 salaries the employee's contribution will overpay by one hundred and twenty-six dollars and some cents the amount of his annuity. So, as to other salaries, for instance, the employee who has served 44 years and has drawn a salary of $2,500 would have contributed $1,571.71 more than he receives in annuity.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question in that connection?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is dwelling upon the higher salaries.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. But the vast majority of them are the lower salaries. The Senator has stated that a part of the estimate is based upon a $1,200 salary. The tables which I have presented are based upon an average salary of $1,132. Will the Senator again, because I do not carry the figures in my mind, give me the percentage of cost to the Government and to the employee in the case of a $1,200 salary?

Mr. STERLING. I will do so. The $1,200 salary is what I first called attention to, where the percentage to be paid by the Government ranges all the way from 38 to 79 per cent. Take the $1,800 salary, and the percentage to be paid by the Government for different periods of service, ranging from 15 to 44 years, runs from 8 to 68 per cent. I submit that in all of that, where the salary is $1,800, the percentage paid by the Government is much less than 50 per cent of the annuities. Take the $2,000 salary, and it runs from no per cent, or from $129.60 on the other side of the ledger, to 64 per cent. If the party has served but 15 years, the Government will pay 64 per cent of the annuities. If he has served 18 years, the Government will pay 62 per cent. If he has served 21 years, the Government will pay 59 per cent of the annuity of the man who receives the $2,000 salary, and so on.

I shall in due course ask that this table be printed in the RECORD, but not now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, one of the mistakes which has been made by the actuary, Mr. Beach, I think, will be of interest to the Senate. I read a statement which has been furnished me by Dr. Brown.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, right on the matter that was in dispute between the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from South Dakota, I should like to inquire whether the Senator has anything to show what is the average number of years that the clerks who would be entitled to the benefit of this system serve the Government?

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand the Senator to ask as to the average number of years they will have served when they arrive at retirement age?

Mr. NORRIS. No. All told, what is the average length of service, if the Senator knows, of all the clerks?

Mr. POMERENE. I can not answer that question. I have no information on that subject.

I want to call attention to another apparent discrepancy here, at least.

On yesterday the Senator from South Dakota stated that Mr. McCoy suggested that the cost to the Government after a while would be $9,000,000 a year. I assume that was the result of his actuarial work. Attached to the report filed in support of this bill is a table in which Mr. Beach gives certain statistical information, and I want to call attention to the latter part of this statement. It indicates that the refunds to 20,000 employees separated from the service annually, assuming that they have contributed on the average for 10 years, would be $5,490,000. This gives the total disbursements annually as $22,650,000. This states that the employees will contribute 37.7 per cent and the Government will contribute 62.3 per cent. The contributions by the employees are given in this same table as follows:

Total contributions from 300,000 employees receiving on an average $1,138 annually, at 2½ per cent, $8,535,000.

So that according to the statements of the actuary, Mr. Beach, the Government would be paying annually $14,115,000; but according to the statement made by Mr. McCoy, as I understand, the amount would be about $9,000,000. I do not know which is correct.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. A question was asked in regard to that on yesterday. Mr. Beach informs me that the $22,650,000 is meant to be the maximum of the disbursements upon the part of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. The maximum?

Mr. STERLING. The maximum of the disbursements at any time, and, of course, that will include disbursements for annuities and refunds to those who have separated themselves from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. Then at least one of these actuaries makes the statement in his formal report that the total disbursements annually will be $22,650,000, and now he says it is the maximum.

Mr. STERLING. One is talking, I think, about the cost to the Government at any time, and the other is speaking about the total disbursements, which disbursements include contributions by the employees.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I understand that, and I have so said. I deducted the $8,535,000 which the employees contribute, and that would leave the total disbursements annually by the Government and on account of the Government alone as $14,115,000. It will take an actuary to reconcile those statements.

Let me go a little further with this.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me say a word in that connection——

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. The $5,490,000 referred to there, which is disbursed, has not cost the Government a cent. Those are the refunds to the employees of the money that they have paid in before they separated themselves from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; I understand. When it comes to this matter of refunds, let us see how actuarily correct this Mr. Beach is. I am going to read a statement furnished me by Dr. Brown:

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY,
Washington, February 6, 1920.

I wish to invite your attention to the estimate of separations from the service shown on page 4 of the committee's report. The probable number of employees that will leave the service each year is shown as 20,000 during the first 10 years of the operation of the plan.

The following tabulation shows the number that will leave the service according to the actual statistics for the five years ending June 30, 1916, the number that will leave the service according to Mr. Beach's estimate, and the difference:

All employees (based on 300,000).	Number of refunds (Mr. Beach's estimate).	Difference k—j.
15,290	20,000	4,710
14,678	20,000	5,322
14,222	20,000	5,778
13,838	20,000	6,162
13,552	20,000	6,448
13,247	20,000	6,753
13,113	20,000	6,887
13,036	20,000	6,964
12,806	20,000	7,194
12,702	20,000	7,298

Mr. Beach's overstatement of separations, ranging from 4,710 the first year up to 7,298 the tenth year, results in a great understatement of the cost of the plan.

Very respectfully,
HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief, Bureau of Efficiency.

Now, Mr. President, I want to introduce in the RECORD a statement which Mr. Brown submits to me, explaining these statistics I have given as they apply to the Sterling-Lehlbach bill, under date of February 3, 1920:

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY,
Washington, February 3, 1920.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: I inclose herewith statement showing estimated cost to the Government, by years, of retiring the civil employees under Senate bill 1699, introduced by Senator STERLING on June 16, 1919.

This estimate is based on statistics of employees collected as of July 1, 1916, and includes 263,152 persons.

The Senator from Nebraska asked me a moment ago as to the number of employees being considered at the time these tables were prepared, and that is the number—263,152. The letter proceeds:

The inclosed statement shows that the cost to the Government the first year will be $4,585,000, and that this amount will steadily increase until about the thirty-fifth year, when the cost to the Government will be about $34,500,000. The cost to the Government will then fall gradually to about $28,000,000 a year. These figures make no allowance for any increase in the number of persons in the service over the number employed in 1916. Under this bill the total amount of the retirement allowances the first year will be paid out of the Federal Treasury. With each succeeding year the employees retiring will have provided a larger proportion of their annuities.

I think this letter in part answers the question the Senator from Nebraska asked me a moment ago with regard to the percentage of cost, and if the Senator will do me the kindness to give me his attention, I think I can answer his question now. Mr. Brown continues:

The employees retiring the tenth year will provide about 3 per cent of their annuities, in the twentieth about 9 per cent, and in the thirtieth year about 15 per cent. With each succeeding year the employees' contributions will provide an increasing proportion of the total cost until at the end of about 50 years the employees' contributions will provide about one-fourth of the annual cost. Thereafter the employees will contribute about one-fourth of the annual cost.

The increased cost of this plan over similar plans previously considered is due to the earlier ages of retirement. The earlier ages of retirement reduce the period during which contributions will be made by the employees; they cut off the operation of compound interest at the time the interest accumulations are growing most rapidly, and they increase the number of annuity payments to the employees.

You asked whether the plan provided for by this bill will be self-supporting in the beginning; and if so, for how long.

Note this:

My answer to your question is that it will not require any aid from the Government during the first few years if the Government sees fit to use the contributions of the younger employees to pay the older ones. The contributions are more than sufficient to pay the annuities during the first few years, because the number of eligibles will be few at first; but as the number reaching retirement age will increase at about the same rate that the service has increased during the past 30 or 40 years, it is obvious that in a short time the income will be inadequate to cover the entire cost of the plan. If the contributions of all of the employees are accumulated at interest at 4 per cent compounded annually and are used to pay the annuities of employees retiring during the first few years, the plan will require no aid from the Government during the first 10 years of its operation. Under the terms of the bill, however, money paid in by an employee remains the property of that employee and must ultimately be returned to him with interest at 4 per cent compounded annually in one of the two ways: (a) In one sum in case of his resignation or to his estate in case of his death, or (b) in the form of an annuity upon his retirement. The contributions of the employees therefore clearly constitute a trust fund in the hands of the Government rather than a surplus. It is as inaccurate to designate that fund or any portion of it as surplus, even while it exceeds the amount of the retiring allowances, as it would be for a bank to so designate its deposits. Of course, if the Government wishes to use the contributions of one man to pay another, it can do so, and thus reduce the amount of money to be raised through other sources. Spending the employees' money, however, will simply defer the time when the Government must begin to make appropriations, but it will not reduce the ultimate cost to the Government.

You asked me to state the cost separately of the disability provision contained in section 5 of this bill under which an employee, who has served for 15 years or more, may be retired for total disability due to disease or injury. It is impossible to make any estimate of what this benefit will cost the Government, because of the unreliability of existing disability statistics and of the fact that this benefit overlaps the employees' compensation law at so many points. Since the table of cost by years is based on the assumption that employees will be retired as soon as they are eligible, the omission of any estimate for the cost of the disability provision may offset any overstatement of cost of annuities which the employee will not receive through remaining in the service for short periods beyond retirement age.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator put the entire communication from Mr. Brown in the RECORD?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I so intended. In fact, I read the whole communication, and I am very glad to have it incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator a question in connection with one statement Mr. Brown made, in its application to this particular bill. He states that it would not cost the Government anything if we used the contributions that were paid in at once. But, as I understand the bill, that could not be done, and probably it would be an unsafe thing even if it were provided that it should be done.

Mr. POMERENE. I am disposed to think that under the bill as it is drawn, legally speaking, it can be done; but it is violative of every legal principle in dealing with trust funds.

Mr. President, there is this difference between the bill which I intend to offer as the substitute and the bill now pending before this Chamber: In the bill which was prepared the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and myself, having had, as we thought, good reasons for so doing, expressly provided that those funds should be invested in bonds and held as a trust fund, because we felt that a time might come, if we did not have these funds invested in bonds or other good securities, when the annuitants would simply have a claim against the Government for a given amount of money without any security therefor; and I think I shall at this moment, as bearing upon this very subject, beg the indulgence of the Senate while I call its attention to a letter which was written to me in 1918.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me a word before he proceeds with that with reference to the question he was just discussing and in answer to the Senator from Nebraska? The Senator speaks of this as a trust fund.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Is it a trust fund in any other sense than that the Government is responsible to the employee for the amount of the deductions from his salary? Let me read now the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. The provisions of the bill will show, I think, clearly that there can be no fault found with Mr. Brown's statement to the effect that if annuities are paid out of the funds accumulated it would be perfectly proper. The bill reads:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said deductions to be withheld from all specific appropriations for the particular salaries or compensation from which the deductions are made and from all allotments out of lump-sum appropriations for payments of such salaries or compensation for each fiscal year, and said sums shall be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of a special fund to be known as "the civil-service retirement and disability fund," and said fund is hereby appropriated for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as provided in this act.

The whole fund is appropriated. As annuities become due they may be paid out of that fund, and that fund has been a fund loaned by the employees to the Government at the rate of 4 per cent interest, under the terms of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has made that statement, but I do not think—and I do not want to be misunderstood when I make the statement, because it is made in the utmost kindness—that the Senator has placed quite a fair construction upon that language. I happen to have before me Mr. Beach's statement before the committee. Before reading it I wish to say that the bill provides in one feature that these assessments or contributions shall be kept in separate accounts for each individual contributor, and there is to be added to them the annual accumulation of compound interest, and if at any time he separates himself from the service he has the right to withdraw those funds. That they are regarded as trust funds seems to me is quite evident from the statement made by Mr. Beach, on page 95 of the hearings, in which he says:

> But it is quite certain, I feel confident, that from the figures which I have compiled, in any event, the Government will not be called upon to contribute any amount for the payment of annuities during the first 10 years at least.

Now, note this:

> Of course they are borrowing the amount from the contributions of the employees. We can not disguise that fact. But it is entirely logical that this practice should be done.

I referred a moment ago to a letter which I received and inserted in the RECORD on December 3, 1918, when the subject was up, a letter from Mr. George T. Keyes, secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League of New York, dated November 12, 1918, and addressed to me, reading as follows:

NATIONAL CIVIL SERVICE REFORM LEAGUE,
New York, November 12, 1918.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: With regard to the McKellar retirement bill, which, I understand, is unfinished business, will you be good enough to send me a copy of any bill which you may be planning to propose for a substitute measure?

I have just noticed a "joker" in the pending bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, which raises a new and grave objection to the present form of that bill.

The public and the employees have been led to believe by the debates and the apparent intent of the bill itself that the money withheld from the salaries of employees would be held at interest in each employee's name, in an inviolable retirement fund.

But actually, I have just discovered, the bill only provides for crediting to each employee the amounts of his contributions and the interest thereon. The actual money contributed is to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for the retirement of those already of retirement age. Only "such portions" of the contributions are held in reserve, in the name of the individual contributors, "as in his judgment may not immediately be required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances." (Sec. 8, p. 8, line 18.)

Instead of accumulating a fund, therefore, the Government is accumulating a debt. For a few years the receipts will outbalance the payments, as the report on the bill (No. 574, p. 7) indicates. But after that, or beginning about 1930, there will no longer be any fund from which to pay the then rapidly mounting costs of retirement. It will be necessary for Congress to make annual appropriations to repay the amounts "borrowed" from the employees then to be retired with compound interest, and the amount of these repayments has not even been computed.

The proposed disbursement of reserves is exactly analagous to the systems of the new bankrupt insurance companies and fraternal organizations that failed to maintain their reserve funds intact. There is no escaping the certain Nemesis that overtakes such schemes.

From the employees' point of view the scheme is perilous. The present Congress can not pledge future Congresses to the repayment of these amounts. Appropriations for that purpose may be delayed or even denied. All that the employee will have, instead of the "fund" he believes he is accumulating, is a "claim" against the Government. Anyone familiar with the endless procedure necessary to collect even the most just claim against the Government will readily agree that the position of the employees depending on a claim instead of a fund will be precarious.

The language of the bill is clear on this point once it is called to one's attention. But I am satisfied that neither the Members of Congress nor the public nor the employees have had their attention directed to it. Nobody who reads section 8 attentively can now doubt that the retirement fund proposed in S. 4637 is doomed to certain collapse within, at most, 15 years, unless Congress makes very large extra appropriations.

I hope you will have an opportunity to make the point clear to the Senate.

Sincerely, yours,

GEORGE T. KEYES,
Secretary.

And now, Senators, I think you will find that the provisions of the pending bill do not very materially differ from the provisions of the McKellar bill to which this criticism was addressed. I am confident that when it comes to a plan of retirement, if there are any contributions to be called for to be paid by the employees, if we are going to adopt the system whereby upon their retirement these funds are to be returned, then we ought to treasure them as trust funds for that specific purpose.

To say that this is not going to cost the Government anything, because it receives trust funds in the form of contributions for each of the separate contributors and then diverts that money from that specific purpose to pay the legal liabilities of the Government to some one else, is a shocking proposition to anyone who has had to deal with trust funds. It is as if I, as an individual, had certain private funds and some Senator would intrust me with funds to be kept sacredly for some cestui que trust. If I would divert those funds from the purpose for which they were intended and use them to pay off some legal liability of my own, lawyers know what would be the consequence to me. Under those circumstances I would go to the penitentiary.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose it is a question, in the last analysis, of the safety of the employee and the safety of the fund that has been deducted from his salary from time to time. Now, let me ask the Senator from Ohio if this does not fix the responsibility of the Government, and that it is a question as to whether or not the employee is safe:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to invest from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States, such portions of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" hereby created as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as herein provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 11 of this act.

Mr. POMERENE. My good friend—and he is a good lawyer, too—can hardly be serious in putting that question to me in that way. There is a provision for the investment of a part of these funds; but let us analyze it, and I refer to his own report.

On page 6, when Mr. Beach gave an estimate as to the account, he said that the first year there will be contributions from 300,000 employees, aggregating $8,535,000; that the annuities to be paid to 6,400 annuitants, at $610 each, would be $3,904,000; refunds to 20,000 employees separated from the service would be $274,500, making a total of $4,178,500. That would leave a balance. It is called here a surplus. It should be stated as the amount of these contributions which the Government does not borrow. That balance of $4,356,500 would be invested in securities under the provisions of the bill to which my friend the Senator from South Dakota has referred, but there is $4,178,500 that belongs to 300,000 employees, that belongs to them in severalty in proportion to the amount they have paid as contributions, which has been absorbed to pay claims owed by the Government to somebody else, and there is no security for it. It is only a claim which each contributor would have against the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any doubt about the responsibility of the Government when these persons interested in the funds get the money from the Government, but the question in my mind is if the Government pays these annuities out of the principal of the fund rather than from its income, it seems to me that it would apply to the Government like it would to any business proposition, that they would very soon be in a state of bankruptcy, unless they had, as they would have in this case, the Government from which to get the money, which, of course, would mean that after all the Government would have to pay it all just the same.

But I rose to ask the Senator about this investment. He told about the number of annuitants that would get the money the first year, and he estimated in the illustration that he just gave that the Government could invest all the balance of the money in securities. If they invested in United States bonds, which I presume would be the investment principally, it would be bonds that would not mature for a great many years.

Mr. POMERENE. Not necessarily so. It might or might not be.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true; but it is at least fair to assume that it would be invested in securities that would not mature within a year or so. The next year the list of annuitants would greatly increase, and the next year afterwards still further increase. It would soon reach the point within a very few years where the securities would mature very largely, when the amount paid into the fund would not be enough to pay the annuitants and those that resigned and left the service. So that they would be under the necessity of selling on the market these securities in which funds were invested unless Congress directly appropriated the money. Would not that happen?

Mr. POMERENE. That might be so. I assume that the trustee who would have charge of it would be the Treasury Department.

Mr. NORRIS. They would very likely take that fact into consideration and would not invest, as the Senator has suggested they might, the entire surplus.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, they might. There is in the substitute bill I have presented a provision which covers the very point the Senator from Nebraska has in mind. I think the Senator will agree with me, if he has read that bill, that it takes care of it in the very best possible form.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Sheppard
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sherman
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Dillingham	King	Page	Sutherland
Fernald	Lodge	Phelan	Townsend
Glass	McCumber	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Harris	McNary	Pomerene	Watson
Harrison	Moses	Ransdell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. HALE, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names.

Mr. HARDING entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. GERRY, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. WILLIAMS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KING. I understand that a number of Senators are absent on account of illness. It will be quite difficult to secure a quorum this afternoon, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As heretofore stated, I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I understand that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], which I do, and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I do not notice the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] among the very few Democrats who have been in the Chamber to-day. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I congratulate the Republican side upon the presence of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LODGE and Mr. TOWNSEND. Regular order!

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). Noticing the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WATSON. I discover that my pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], is absent. I therefore transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES. I transfer my pair previously announced to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I notice the absence of the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], with whom I am paired. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I observe that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is not present. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I am obliged to withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is detained on official business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I notice that he has not voted. Therefore I withhold my vote. I simply make this announcement so that I may be counted for a quorum.

Mr. RANSDELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—6.

Harrison	Phelan	Sheppard	Williams
King	Ransdell

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	Hale	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sterling
Chamberlain	Lodge	Page	Townsend
Curtis	McKellar	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	McNary	Pomerene	Watson
France	Moses	Sherman
Glass	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—60.

Ball	Gay	Knox	Shields
Bankhead	Gerry	La Follette	Simmons
Beckham	Gore	Lenroot	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Gronna	McCormick	Smith, Md.
Calder	Harding	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Henderson	McLean	Stanley
Culberson	Hitchcock	Myers	Sutherland
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Swanson
Dial	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Thomas
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Trammell
Elkins	Kellogg	Penrose	Underwood
Fall	Kendrick	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Kenyon	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Keyes	Reed	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Robinson	Wolcott

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. JONES of New Mexico entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be rescinded.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another inequitable provision of this bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is scarcely audible in this crowded Chamber. The murmur of voices here among all the Senators who throng the floor chokes the sound.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Illinois is seldom here and reserves his voice, whereas the Senator from Ohio is diligently serving his country, so that his voice is not so loud and potential to-day.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from Utah, often here, seldom reserves his voice.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, these distinguished Senators are always more amiable than they seem to be just at this moment.

I said a moment ago that there was another inequitable feature about this bill which it seems to me ought to receive attention at the hands of the Senate, and I can state it perhaps in a very few words.

First, the higher paid employees pay more than the lower paid employees for the same protection.

Secondly, the young boy and the young girl, ambitious, eager to succeed and to serve their country, pay more, in the aggregate, than the old employees in the service who have been receiving their monthly stipend for years; and they receive only the same annuity.

During the course of this debate it has been suggested that the employees of the country were all a unit behind this bill. It has been suggested that the higher paid employees are so altruistic that they are anxious to pay for the annuities in part for the lower paid employees; and if there is any evidence about it, save and except the mere naked statement by a few of the men who have been interested in pressing this legislation in season and out of season, I have not come in contact with it. In 1918, when I was discussing this feature of the bill, I challenged the statement that these men had given their consent to pay more than their fellow workers paid. The challenge does not seem to have been accepted.

In my humble judgment we have a right to require the Government to pay for any excess over and above a reasonable amount for the good of the service; but I deny the right of the Government to say to the young boy and the young girl, "You shall pay more than your share."

Let me state this in another way, so as to present the thought to the Senate as clearly as I can: The contributions by the employees and the benefits granted them under the pending bill are entirely unrelated. All employees are required to contribute 2½ per cent of their salaries. This means that an employee receiving $1,200 a year would pay into the fund $30 a year, while an employee receiving $5,000 a year would pay in $125 a year, or over four times as much, if the two employees serve the same length of time, while the benefits in these two cases would be the same.

Under the proposed substitute which I have presented, and the cost of which to the Government I discussed a few minutes ago, I have a memorandum showing what would be the cost to the employees of the system therein devised. I am not clear what the average salary of the employee is, but it is either $1,132 or $1,138 per annum.

Mr. STERLING. Eleven hundred thirty-eight dollars, I will say to the Senator, is given by Mr. Beach. He estimates the average salary in 1916 at that figure.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator; but, for the purpose I have in mind, it will not make any material difference whether it is $1,132 or $1,138. If a young boy or girl enters the service at 20 years of age, the $600 annuity will cost 2.9 per cent of the average salary. Under that plan the annuitant is to be retired at 70 years of age.

At 25 years of age it will cost 3.7 per cent; at 30 years of age it will cost 4.7; at 35 years of age it will cost 6 per cent; at 40 years of age it will cost 7.9 per cent.

But the limitation under the bill is made 8 per cent of the salary.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator just pardon me a moment? That is assuming that the salary remains the same. But if the salary is doubled at any time, then the per cent of the salary which is required to pay the annuity will be cut in two; if it is trebled, it will be cut in three; if it is quadrupled, it will be cut in four. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the estimate made by Mr. Brown on the whole contributory plan, as to the per cent paid in contributions according to ages. Of course, at the age of 20 years he has it 3 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. I gave it as 2.9 per cent.

Mr. STERLING. At 25, 4 per cent; at 30, 5 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the date of that estimate?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know at what time Mr. Brown made the statement, but I quote from the report, and from the statement of Mr. Beach:

> He then gives the estimate of Mr. Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, as to the assessments necessary to purchase annuities under the wholly contributory plan. These would be approximately as follows.

Then, I suppose, of course, that he gives Mr. Brown's figures.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, although I have not gone over my files fully about it, I think I recall that there was one statement made by Mr. Brown at one time, and later on a revised statement was made. The latter statement varied somewhat in perhaps tenths of a per cent from the first statement which was made to me, and the statement which I have here I think was the last revision, given as of January 15, 1917. I think he had more complete returns at that time than he had when the first estimate was made. I may have those figures reversed in my own mind.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit, and simply for the sake of the RECORD, I would like to finish out my statement. At 35 years he gives 6½ per cent, and at the age of 40 years the contribution will be 8 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. There is a slight difference. It is only a matter of a few tenths of a per cent.

Mr. President, I wanted to make a further statement, a very brief statement, as to the plan provided in the substitute bill. As we proposed, for those who would be retired at 70 years of age on the passage of the legislation—and this is based, as I now recall, on the figures furnished in 1916 as to the number of employees—the total salaries paid would be $5,800,000. The pensions, in round numbers, would be $2,750,000. It is somewhat less than the $600 each; that is, it is based on the average salary of somewhat less than $1,200.

Under the plan we have adopted, 10 per cent of the salaries is to be turned back into the Treasury, amounting to $580,000. This sum, together with the sum to be paid out in pensions, would amount to $3,330,000. Deducting this sum from the total salaries paid to these superannuated employees would leave a balance of $2,470,000 for the appointment of young employees in the lower grades. This sum would amount to sufficient to employ about 2,500 persons at salaries from $900 to $1,000 per annum. That is important for us to consider as bearing upon the cost of the system. It is true that these superannuates do a considerable service. It is varying in amount. I have some figures here bearing upon that subject, which I may give at a later time. But there must be new employees to take their places.

We have estimated that perhaps one-half of the number of superannuates, as new employees—young employees—could do this service, and we must take into consideration the salaries we are going to pay to the new employees if we are going to be at all accurate in our statement as to the cost of the system.

Mr. President, I do not feel that I care to discuss this matter further to-night. There are some other branches of the subject that I shall be glad to discuss if opportunity presents itself later. But I want to make this observation: I know that I am at one with the distinguished chairman of this committee in the belief that there ought to be a system of retirement. His plan and the plan contained in the substitute I propose will have the same effect, so far as the improvement of the service is concerned. There are radical differences between his estimate of the cost of this system and mine. They are so different that it almost staggers the belief of Senators.

I know, at least I believe, that he has had to depend for his judgment upon the expert opinions which have been given to him by actuaries. I likewise have been dependent for my conclusions upon the expert knowledge of an actuary, one whom I believe to be the best in the employ of the Government.

I submit that the Senate should not take final action upon the bill without knowing of a certainty that either he is right or I am right or that the truth lies some place midway between us. It is to my mind almost a shocking proposition for the Congress of the United States to attempt to adopt a plan of retirement here when we do not know whether the total cost to the Government in 60 years is going to be $172,000,000, as I believe, under my plan, or whether it is going to be at the end of 60 years, in round numbers, $1,500,000,000 under the plan embraced in the bill of the Senator from South Dakota.

It does seem to me, as a business proposition, assuming that the actuaries are of equal reliability and equally skilled in their profession, that we ought to determine who is right before we fasten upon the Government of the United States a system so expensive as I believe this is going to be, and particularly at this time, when you and I know that the American people are weighted down with a great Government debt which was contracted during the late war. The name of the committee is Civil Service and Retrenchment. If the adoption of this system, with its extreme cost, is retrenchment, then I have failed to conceive what the word means.

I yield the floor for the day.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 9, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 6, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

In the absence of the Chaplain, the Clerk of the House, Mr. William Tyler Page, offered the following prayer:

Direct us, O Lord, in all our doings with Thy most gracious favor, and further us with Thy continual help, that in all our works, begun, continued, and ended in Thee, we may glorify Thy holy name and finally, by Thy mercy, obtain everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that February 5 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 1761. An act for the relief of the Farmers' National Bank of Wilkinson, Ind.;

H. R. 1812. An act making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States;

H. R. 2950. An act to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8028. An act to add to the Oregon, Siuslaw, and Crater National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8598. An act restoring to Amy E. Hall her homestead rights and providing that on any homestead entry made by her she shall be given credit for all compliance with the law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made on same;

H. R. 348. An act to add certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.;

H. R. 9112. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion; and

H. R. 4382. An act to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States.

OIL LEASING BILL.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphates, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, for printing under the rules.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3722) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, a similar House bill having been reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3722, a similar House bill having been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Alfords Bridge Co., a partnership, to be composed of the following members, namely: A. N. Alford, H. I. Alford, and H. B. Alford, of Hart County, Ga., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Haileys Ferry, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the west, and the county of Anderson, State of South Carolina, on the east, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this bill has been passed by the Senate?

Mr. BRAND. Yes.

Mr. GARD. It would seem to me that the bill as passed establishes rather a dangerous precedent, since it provides not alone for granting this privilege to the Alfords Bridge Co. of building a bridge across the Savannah River, to which I suspect no one objects—and surely I do not—but, as I understand it, it creates a corporation.

Mr. BRAND. No; it recites that the Alfords Bridge Co. is a copartnership.

Mr. GARD. I understood that it created a corporation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRAND. Mr Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10922, a similar House bill, do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill. Pending that motion, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], I would like to know if we can not agree upon time for closing general debate?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I think so. Yesterday we used 2 hours and 13 minutes on this side, and I would like to have 1 hour and 20 minutes more.

Mr. HAUGEN. That seems pretty much time to be consumed to-day after having consumed a whole day yesterday.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Let me correct the gentleman. We did not consume the whole day in debate, because we did not start until nearly 2 o'clock.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest that we take one hour on a side. The gentleman had more time than I had yesterday.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. One hour on this side?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; and that half the time be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia and the other half by myself.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one half to be consumed by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish some one in authority would tell us what has become of the regular order of business for February 6. This is claims day or war-claims day.

The SPEAKER. The chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CRAGO. I am reserving the right to object to his request for unanimous consent in order that I might ask this question. Does anyone know when there is any likelihood of the Private Calendar being called up?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Everyone knows that there is no likelihood of its being called up to-day.

Mr. CRAGO. I am asking to find out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Everyone except my friend from Pennsylvania, and he may know now.

Mr. CRAGO. I am very glad to get that information from the gentleman. That was the purpose I had in mind when I reserved the right to object. I had no intention of objecting to the gentleman's request, but I would like to get some definite opinion as to when the Private Calendar is likely to be called.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman looks at me as though I knew something about it.

Mr. CRAGO. The gentleman should know.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope we may reach the Private Calendar within a reasonable time, but the gentleman realizes that with these important appropriation bills pending right now it is very difficult to give any definite assurance when we will take up the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRAGO. That is not very definite. However, I have no intention of objecting to the gentleman's request.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will tell him how to get it up. Let the gentleman ask unanimous consent to set some day or night for the consideration of the Private Calendar. That is the only way he would ever get it considered.

Mr. CRAGO. One unanimous-consent request is already pending.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That does not make any difference.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would not reach it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must know that at this stage of the proceedings it has never been the practice to take up the Private Calendar on Friday. The Private Calendar has had more consideration already at this session of Congress than at any other session of Congress for a long time and will later undoubtedly be given due consideration.

Mr. CRAGO. It was passed over on the last day it was in order at the request of the majority leader.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that general debate be limited to two hours?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to make my debut into the aristocratical farmer club as a member of the great Agricultural Committee in this House by making a speech on the League of Nations, but I listened yesterday to the eloquent and ebullient speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and was carried away with his imagery and flights of oratory.

I could not, indeed, remember that Washington ever raised his eyes to the "sky spaces and plucked out the stars and set them in the American flag," but I do remember that Washington set the American flag among the stars as the incomparable emblem of free government [applause], where it still floats over men that are free, free with such ability and capacity as God has given them to work out their own fortunes unbuttressed and undeterred by "class," "rank," or privilege. [Applause.] And I remember what the distinguished gentleman from Alabama seems to forget, that Washington repeatedly admonished his countrymen to beware of foreign alliances and entanglements. [Applause.] Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, McKinley, Roosevelt, all those great Americans, even Woodrow Wilson as late as 1916, warned the country against entanglements in European politics. [Applause.]

But Mr. Wilson saw an iridescent vision. He saw a Moses that would lead the world out of the wilderness. He saw a glorious League of Nations that would abolish war.

Of course, everybody with any sense at all is in favor of such a splendid consummation.

In pitiless secrecy three men sat down behind guarded doors and carved the map of the world up to suit their views. And a score of wars are now going on because the people affected are fighting mad about it.

And the league, when set down in cold type, is found not to be an inspired plan to abolish war, which the people were led to believe it would be, but if ratified as written, will deliver America's destinies into the control of European politicians. [Applause.] And when the President, in all the honesty of his purpose, met the adroit Old World politicians, who were banded together by secret treaties of which the President knew nothing, they put one over on him.

Yet I am heartily in favor of a league to prevent war, and I believe the proposed league should be ratified, but with such reservations as will protect America from involuntary embroilment in European quarrels, and I do not see how anything less than the Lodge reservations will do this. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I sought this opportunity to state my position on certain public questions so that the House, and all persons who care to know where I stand, may know.

I do not favor paternalism in Government, but favor the return of the railroads to their owners under such control as will preserve private initiative and protect the public from overcapitalization, unjust discriminations, and rascally railroad wrecking and pay wages on the American scale of living. [Applause.]

As I have said heretofore in this House, for many years I have been in favor of the organization of labor and collective bargaining, which I regard as the only defense under the competitive system of wages the workingman has against the tendency of wages to the point of bare subsistence.

But alongside of one man's right to strike is the other man's right to work, if he chooses.

I believe that when employer and employee can not agree, and the paralysis of industry and great loss to the public are threatened, it is the right of the public to interpose, and its duty is to exact a "square deal." [Applause.]

I have an unbounded faith that when the American workingman gets a "square deal," public opinion, that is stronger than courts and sheriffs, will make a strike unnecessary and impossible. [Applause.]

I loath and detest the doctrines that excite and stir up "class hatred."

The foundations of American liberty stand four square to every wind that blows.

Americanism is devotion to great social ideals that are founded upon the brotherhood of man. The people have the right to alter, amend, or abolish their form of government, and our Constitution provides the methods by which desired changes may be lawfully made.

Americanism is a passion for freedom, for justice. Free speech, free press, freedom of opportunity are the sacred muniments of American liberty, but free speech and free press and free assembly give no right to incite to rapine, murder, and destruction of the Government that of all governments is dedicated to freedom.

The American Revolution was a protest against class rule.

The Civil War was fought against an oligarchy that enslaved labor.

The Spanish War freed Cuba from the oppressions of class rule.

The World War destroyed the Hohenzollern and the Hapsburg that claimed the right of their class to rule by divine right.

The genius of American liberty is an eternal protest against class rule, and the men who stir up class against class and encourage class hatred in this land—dedicated to the equality of all men before the law—are traitors to American liberty and public enemies. [Applause.]

I believe in free speech and a free press, and I am opposed to giving the Postmaster General or any other person whatever the right of censorship of the press, and I have grave doubts of the wisdom of the proposed sedition law.

In these days of unrest, when all sorts of foolish and dangerous doctrines are preached, we are apt to become hysterical. But do we need more law? Mr. Debs threw no bombs, but he is retired to the penitentiary, the brainiest and ablest radical of them all. Haywood was in jail until admitted to bail. Goldman and Berkman and a shipload of aliens have been deported. Some 45 I. W. W.'s are roaring their anathemas in the penitentiary. Several thousand alien enemies are rounded up awaiting deportation. These people have run afoul of the laws we already have.

All sorts of half-baked schemes are advocated. Wild-eyed fanatics who have no concept of American liberty are inciting the ignorant and the discontented to destroy the Government.

Other men, far more dangerous, glib-tongued, ambitious, thirsting for prominence, pretending a great love for the workingman, would inspire him with "class hatred." They would pull down the temple of American liberty; they dream bloody dreams and see themselves in the rôles of Lenins and Trotskis; they tell their dupes that the only way to cure the failures in our laws is to abolish all laws, and that no such thing as honor, duty, or religion should stand in any man's way to take what he wants.

But it seems to me that if we could drag these doctrines out of the back rooms, where, behind the passwords and the locked doors, with suspirated breath, these hellish doctrines are preached that are to give every man wealth and make every man's quart hold three pints; rob them of their secrecy and mystery and drag them out of their holes and dens into the light, where they would be free to do their ravings and threatenings in the open and where the public would be bound to take note, the sound common sense and the derision and contempt of the American people would laugh them to scorn. Many a poor fellow who is impressed by the stealthy conclave, with its dim lights and grips and secrecy, would laugh in your face if you told him in the open that he ought help to destroy the Government.

It is not more law that we need but more Americanism. These aliens amongst us, and our people who are nibbling at these radical doctrines, are not fools. Give them to see both sides of the case, teach them what Americanism really is, and they will abandon radicalism and Bolshevism. The people who are impressed by this "red stuff" hear only the one side. We fail in our duty to them and to ourselves that we make no effort to show them the other side and make them to understand what American liberty is.

Mr. Chairman, no party ever was confronted with so difficult a task as that now before the Republican Party.

A great war has laid enormous burdens upon the people, and the country is filled with unrest, disturbance, and search for relief.

New ideas, strange doctrines, and all sorts of theories and experiments find advocates that see in their theories infallible remedies for every ill.

In the excitement and enthusiasms and the determination to put the war through, common prudence, common business sagacity, was lost sight of, and we now see that billions of treasure were needlessly squandered.

A Democratic administration was in control. The Congress clothed it with autocratic power. All parties joined together to vote all the power and all the money that the administration demanded.

Now the bills are coming in, and the Republican Party must provide for the payment of them. The Republican Party has inherited a big job that was not of its contriving.

Every dollar to which the faith of the Government is pledged must be paid, though the mind staggers in contemplation of the billions of dollars that must be paid.

The American people will "stand the gaff" to pay the honest debts, but they will insist that they be honest.

I commend and heartily approve the announced policy that every appropriation of public money will be "pared to the bone."

But besides honest debts that have been incurred and must be paid there are a great number of claims being made that are extravagant and unjust. Some of these claims have already been paid and the claimants should be made to disgorge and then sent to jail.

Shortly after the armistice was signed it was announced by the administration that we should have a standing Army of 596,000 men—six times as many as we ever had in peace—and a Navy incomparably the greatest in the world.

These absurd recommendations have been laughed to scorn by the country and have been greatly reduced. Still the Secretary of War wants a Regular Army at least twice as big as there is any necessity for, and in addition to that proposes "universal military training," that will impose about $700,000,000 more on top of the cost of the Regular Army, and the Secretary of the Navy still insists that "we ought to have the biggest Navy in the world."

No one will more readily than I admit the advantage to the growing youth of discipline and athletic training.

The economic and moral value to the individual and to the Nation can hardly be overstated.

But as to the expediency for the Federal Government in these days of stress I am firmly of the opinion that at no time have we had less need of military training than just now.

There is no probability that for years to come will we need a large Army; and if we should, we have 4,000,000 of the best soldiers in the world trained to war, ready for any call that the public sentiment of the American people will make. Besides, universal military training would be an additional unnecessary tax at this time, but is absurd at any time. Why give the tubercular, flat-footed, and yellow hearted training as soldiers?

Therefore I am opposed to this scheme of compulsory universal military training. The place to give our youth proper training is in the State public schools.

The ancient Greeks had the right idea. Proceeding upon the doctrine that a sound mind could only lodge in a sound body, the Greek youth from 14 to 18 were trained in grammar, music, and gymnasia, with two-thirds of the time devoted to gymnastics; and Greek statuary and Greek literature yet demonstrate the physical beauty and trained intellect of the ancient Greek.

The training of our youth should be the care of the State. It is not the business of the Federal Government. There are too many Federal bureaus now, and they are too far removed from the people to be much good. There are too many soft jobs.

Our high schools during the plastic years can turn out, if they would set about it, far better trained youth, with sounder bodies, more intelligent respect for constituted authority and for Americanism, and the making of better soldiers in the time of need than the Federal Government can do in the three or four months of military training.

I might say also that I am opposed to the Regular Army swallowing up the National Guard. The National Guard was the backbone of the Army in France. It is true that there were 21 divisions of Regulars, but only 7 of them went overseas, and 2 of those did not get to the front; and, in the gallant fighting those 5 divisions did, probably one-half of the enlisted force were men who volunteered or were drafted after the war was declared. There were 11 divisions of National Guardsmen and 17 of selected draft men, but the medals seem to have gone to the Regulars mostly.

The supercilious, arrogant, and contemptuous treatment of the National Guard officers by the Regulars was not justified by the lack of training of the National Guard in modern warfare, for the Regulars knew no more about it and had no more experience than they. The military "junta" that is trying to run this country into a great scheme of militarism and expense ought to be suppressed.

I am in favor of a small Regular Army of highly trained professional soldiers that will set the pattern for the National Guard.

But let the Regulars give over the attempt to swallow the National Guard, and let it be organized in each State, subject to call, to Army regulations, and to Federal inspection.

And we are still spending millions for more camps. There is a place for the knife. During the war we had camps enough, with paved streets, electric lights, hot and cold water, and great hospital facilities, sufficient for the great epidemic of influenza last year, for 2,000,000 men. Yet since the war more land has been bought, millions upon millions have been spent by the Secretary of War for additional camps and hospitals and military expenditures without warrant of law.

The statements made by my colleague [Mr. GARLAND] in the House recently, that he had bought a box of taps and dies from the Government for $23.50, which was marked as the price the Government had paid the manufacturer for them, and then had gone to a retailer in this city and bought a box of precisely the same tools, made by the same manufacturer, for $7.25, if true—and I have no doubt of its truth—ought to put somebody in jail after he has disgorged his "war profits."

The War Department wants another whack at the aeroplane business.

After spending a billion of dollars for aeroplanes and getting nothing worth while—a few that got to France were piled up and burned, presumably because they were worthless—the War Department has the nerve to ask Congress to give it $65,000,000 more. Here is another place for the knife. [Applause.]

The Navy, of which every American is justly proud, unfortunately was managed on this side of the water by a set of longshoremen, and claims are now made for a great lot of naval stations, some of which, according to the public press, have been started since the armistice—one at Coddington Point, one at Great Lakes, another at Hampton Roads, where the land has been bought since the war and without authority of law—and the Government saddled with debts of millions of dollars. These accounts must be closely scrutinized and some of the savings applied to increasing the pay of the junior officers in the Navy, who now find it very difficult or impossible to live on the present pay.

It is a common scandal that thousands of useless clerks and bench warmers are employed by the Government. A well-known Senator has put the number at 40,000, and it is the duty of Congress to weed them out to make room so that the balance can get a chance to do a fair day's work.

Of course, a frightful roar will go up from the departments, but a great roar of approval will come up from the people who "pay the freight."

Strict economy is the only policy that can win through for the simple reason "we are getting to the bottom of the barrel." The people are taxed to the limit. Our revenues are fixed, which absolutely limits our appropriations unless we borrow more money.

But there is another question that involves many others and which more than all others affects the people, and that is the high cost of living.

Of course, this is partly due to the heavy burden of taxes, which are unavoidable, and partly due to the great inflation of the currency and commercial credits, which reduces the purchasing power of the dollar, and largely due to the withdrawal from productive industries of fully one-half of our man power to engage in war and war industries.

Intelligent people understand this, but they do not understand why they have to pay 80 cents to $1 a pound for butter when the farmer who makes it only gets 46 cents unless he sells direct to the consumer.

They do not understand why the farmer, the producer, only gets on the average 40 cents out of every dollar's worth of stuff he produces, the transporter and the middleman taking the balance. They do not understand why coal should sell at $8 per ton within 60 miles of the mines. Shoes at $16 a pair; rents, clothing, everything in the line of necessities, rising higher and higher.

Whatever the cause may be, the people are groaning under the burden.

The Republican Party can not shield itself under the plea that Congress has done all the administration has asked for, and that the administration is responsible, as the executive power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. HULINGS. The distinguished gentleman will. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Why, we can not at all say that we have passed all the laws that the administration asked for, because we have never yet begun to do what the President asked us to do here in respect to the high cost of living. He marked out the kind of law he wanted, and we turned him down.

Mr. HULINGS. Let me say one thing the administration did do, and it was the greatest bone-head play I ever heard of. When the refiners of sugar in this country could not under the law charge more than 9 cents per pound for sugar the Department of Justice announced to the Louisiana refiners, "We will not prosecute you if you sell at anything less than 18 cents," and the effect was to double the price of sugar all over the United States and run the price up to 20 and 25 cents per pound. I can not help but think that sugar is on all fours with the canned goods, the automobiles, the aeroplanes, lumber, and other surplus Government supplies that have been held at prices to "stabilize the markets" in the interests of the manufacturers. The sugar refiners got up a big scare about the shortage of sugar. Nobody could get more than 2 pounds at a time, but just as soon as the price went up suddenly to 20 and 25 cents, by reason of the Government's absurd policy, then sugar became plenty. It was a fine deal, truly.

Eight dollars per ton for bituminous coal within 60 miles of the mines; twelve to twenty dollars per pair for shoes; and everything in proportion. Such prices are only to be explained by the spirit of greed that has spread throughout the country. Everybody has been on the "make."

This spirit was encouraged and developed by the Government's heedless imprudence in throwing out to everybody who cared to grab Government contracts on the cost-plus basis, and compelling all business men to enter into competition with the Government in the purchase of labor and materials, and to the unwise policy of the Government in arranging so that industry might make great profit in order that the tax collector could levy heavy taxes on incomes and excess profits.

The only explanation is rank conscienceless profiteering, for which the Government dealt the cards.

The people will not split hairs; they will hold the party in power responsible.

They are saying "We were not satisfied with the Democrats, and we threw them out and put you Republicans in, and now we are looking to you."

They are interested in a way in the League of Nations, if that league does not mean a surrender of American interests to a bunch of European politicians. They are interested in the return of the railroads to the owners. They are interested in what is to be done for our soldier boys. And they are interested not at all in war medals and compulsory military training and big Army and Navy developments and all the tittle-tattle that fills the reports from Washington; but they do want this profiteering stopped.

An embargo on the exports of sugar and sale under Government control will cut the price in two.

A law to license all dealers in the necessaries of life under Government regulations of profits can be framed which, inquisitorial and ugly as it would be, would meet an ugly situation.

A law that would confiscate all profits beyond a reasonable return for labor and capital invested, in the production and sale of the necessaries of life, would remove all inducements to profiteer. Such remedies would be open to great objections, but it would seem that unless Congress should do something of this kind it can do nothing. Probably as far as Congress should go in this direction it has already done, in clothing the President with great authority. At best not Congress but the administration is responsible for the execution of the laws.

I know the extravagance of war has spread extravagance in living in all classes. I know that it is urged that the workingman wants to wear $10 shirts, that the shop girl is only satisfied with silk stockings; but who is better entitled to fine things than the people who do the work?

The point I make is that the $10 shirts and the $5 stockings are 50 per cent profiteering.

The day has gone by in this country when the employer can dole out of the joint product of labor and capital what he thinks the workingman can manage to live on. Every essential human element in production is entitled to an equitable share of the joint product of labor and capital.

I am in favor of legislation which will wisely provide for setting our soldiers boys on their feet. Whilst they were in the trenches at $30 a month the boys at home were getting such wages as were never heard of before. It is said that 2,000 millionaires were made out of war profits while the boys were gone.

I do not know what form this legislation will take, and the cost of it would not deter me one moment. I believe that some such legislation as has been proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], which proposes a Government corporation that shall somewhat, after the fashion of farm-loan legislation, undertake to enable a soldier boy to buy a little farm or a home in the town where he might set himself up in some business, and for which he can repay the Government through a long term of years. Some such proposition that will promote home building and set the boys to work, many of whom are wandering about the country hunting for a job, would be an economic expenditure of money of the greatest value to the country, and the people who remained at home, getting great wages, the people who raked down billions of war profits while these boys were serving their country at $30 a month, could mighty well afford to pay the necessary taxes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY].

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD, with the remarks which I am about to make relative to our hero dead in Europe, some correspondence and articles from magazines.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, The Chicago Undertakers' Association have directed my attention to statements made in debate on the floor of this House January 14, 1920, at which time Hon. CHARLES POPE CALDWELL, of New York, inserted an article from a magazine devoted to the profession of undertaking, which reads:

[From the Casket, Sept. 1, 1919. (A magazine of expensive make-up, published in New York.)]

BETWEEN YOU AND ME.

(By S. G. Q.)

Suppose, Mr. Funeral Director, that upon one of the few bright, sunshiny mornings we have vouchsafed to us in this year of peace, strikers, and high prices, some one were to come into your office and tell you that he had a scheme for increasing the number of funerals this year by more than 50,000; what would you do about it?

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

Most likely you would rush out wildly into the street and shout that you had a dangerous lunatic in your place and wouldn't somebody please send the police in a hurry before he murdered everyone in sight. Or maybe you would invite your visitor to go to the country asylum, or possibly you would ask him where he got it with prohibition so prominent in our midst and the Anti-Saloon League tracking even poor, inoffensive 2.75 per cent to its lair.

Anyhow, you would think that the plan for creating all this extra business must necessarily be mixed up with plague, pestilence, and famines, battle, murder, and sudden death, and would refuse to have anything to do with it.

But, Mr. Funeral Director, with your neatly appointed office and your not entirely paid for motor equipment, this offer is being made you in all seriousness and without the killing of a single heart. What are you going to do about it?

Between you and me, this is a plain business talk, a matter of dollars and sense, plus sentiment.

In alien soil there lie more than 50,000 American men who died in battle or of disease during their tour of duty abroad.

* * * * * * *

For nearly every American soldier returned some funeral director will be called upon to perform the necessary duties of reception and burial.

Extra business, gentlemen, legitimate, patriotic; kindly sympathetic, remunerative extra business. No increased death rate, no additional number of widows and orphans. Only the final laying away of America's sons in the bosom of their dear motherland.

The Congress pauses in its votes to hear the expression of the public's wishes. What are you going to do about it?

I am also in receipt of a letter from Lee S. Arthur, editor of the Embalmers' Monthly, printed in Chicago and devoted to the profession, which reads:

THE EMBALMERS' MONTHLY,
Chicago, January 27, 1920.

Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By to-day's mail we are sending to you copy of the current (January) number of the Embalmers' Monthly. In so doing we ask your attention to the article appearing on page 10, headed "Paris director in league with Purple Cross?" which will throw light in a measure as to the cause of reputable funeral directors of this country being unjustly subjected to such terms of opprobrium as "ghoul," "disreputable," and "mercenary."

This propaganda is, in our belief, an outgrowth of or inspired by that of an organization which had its birth in Philadelphia, and has been refused indorsement by the National Funeral Directors' Association, the representative body of 30,000 or more men and women engaged in the profession in the United States.

This overindustriousness of the few comprising this Philadelphia organization in meddling with affairs which are those of the Government and of the Government alone has brought odium upon thousands of members of a profession who are entirely innocent of any participation and are not deserving of the uncomplimentary statements which have been made concerning them.

The Embalmers' Monthly stands now and always has stood for decency and dignity in the profession of which it is a representative organ, firmly frowning upon spectacular methods adopted for evident selfish ends and derogatory to good business.

We trust you will accept this missive in the spirit in which it is written, not one of criticism, but a sincere effort to assist in relieving a situation, which is not of their own making, into which funeral directors have been drawn.

Yours, very truly,

THE EMBALMERS' MONTHLY,
LEE S. ARTHUR, Editor.

And for the information of those interested the article referred to as being on page 10 reads:

[From the Embalmers' Monthly.]

PARIS DIRECTOR IN LEAGUE WITH PURPLE CROSS (?)—SENDS LETTERS TO PROFESSION IN THE UNITED STATES, BUT THESE LETTERS WERE MAILED IN PHILADELPHIA—SAYS THROUGH HIS CONNECTION WITH OFFICIALS HE CAN SECURE PROMPTLY THE RETURN OF ANY BODY NOT IN THE ARMY ZONE.

Several months ago E. Tesseyre, a Paris funeral director, visited the United States, and incidentally called upon prominent morticians in several of the more important cities.

Mr. Tesseyre is now being heard from in a different way, funeral directors throughout the country having received filled-in form letters from him soliciting business, particularly as to the return of the soldier dead, and intimating connections which apparently give him an advantage. These letters bear this heading:

"E. Tesseyre, undertaker, 59 Rue de Chaillot, Champs-Elysees, Paris."

There is nothing so strange about this, the peculiarity existing in the fact that, while from the pen of a French funeral director, the letters were mailed under 1-cent postage of the United States and the envelopes carry a Philadelphia, Pa., postmark. This, together with the fact that the writer mentions the Purple Cross, an organization which was refused the indorsement of the National Funeral Directors' Association at the convention held in Atlantic City, makes it evident that he has had an understanding with the Purple Cross and is working in conjunction with that organization.

Not many months since much in the way of undesirable criticism was published in newspapers of various cities and editorially commented upon, because of a report that funeral directors of the country wanted the bodies of the American soldier dead returned from France, and explanations were necessary in order to overcome the effects of the story. Now comes along Mr. Tesseyre's letter, commercialized in every syllable, and with reference to the Purple Cross, which would hardly have been made without express permission to do this, the whole looking like a concerted plan to realize what it is possible to do by arranging with bereaved families to have their relatives brought back to the United States.

Mr. Tesseyre's letter, without the name of the funeral director to whom this was addressed, follows:

"Throughout France I have been known for many years as the American undertaker; this is so generally understood that if a cablegram were received in Paris addressed simply 'Undertaker, Paris,' it would be delivered to me. I have been in America on account of my having been commissioned to return to that country the bodies of some of the men who died in France.

"While here, being a member of the American Purple Cross Association, I naturally called on Mr. H. S. Eckels, director general of that organization. He has been good enough to offer to assist me in any way he can in establishing contact with all responsible American undertakers who are likely to be consulted by families who wish to have bodies returned from France.

"Mr. Eckels is inclined to believe that the Government of the United States eventually will return at its own expense the bodies of its soldier dead. Nevertheless there will be cases where the family would wish, at its own expense, to have this done immediately.

"Through my connection with the French officials I can secure promptly the return of any body which is not buried in the relatively small zone of the armies. The average cost for disinterment and transportation to New York will be about $605, made up of the following items:

"Interchangeable zinc lining, with oak shipping case and outside box	$115.00
"(All such caskets in Paris, and to a large degree in other municipalities of France, are furnished by the municipal authorities only, and at above cost. This is the minimum casket which can be used for transportation.)
"Average cost of labor involved, transportation of employees, payment of legal fees, etc	120.00
"Own transportation and expenses on journey	112.00
"Steamship charges from Le Havre to New York (about)	160.00
"Average transportation of body in France	47.50
"(Paris is 228 kilometers (140 miles) from the port of Le Havre. The average distance of cemeteries from Paris is 300 kilometers (180 miles). Railroad transportation of a corpse costs about 9 cents per kilometer.
"Personal supervision and services	50.00

"The necessary papers for the family to fill out and further information may be obtained from the office of the Purple Cross, 1922 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"I will furnish you freely any information that may be useful to you on any subject concerning France. When you have a body to transport from America to France I beg you to consign same to me and to inform me of said consignment. I will act as your representative to our mutual advantage.

"Yours, very truly, TESSEYRE."

Next I call attention to a letter from the secretary of the Chicago Undertakers' Association, which reads:

CHICAGO UNDERTAKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., January 27, 1920.

The Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At a recent get-together meeting of the undertakers of the 16 northern counties of the State of Illinois, held January 13 and 14, 1920, in this city, resolutions were adopted (a copy of which we herewith inclose) requesting that you bring to the attention of the War Department the action of the last convention of the National Funeral Directors' Association, at which time the indorsement of the Purple Cross was almost unanimously defeated. Also the fact that the appointment of Robert D. Dripps, executive secretary of the said Purple Cross, by President John Maas to represent the undertakers of the country in Washington was wholly unauthorized and unwarranted.

Delay in promptly forwarding them to you was caused by the illness of the writer.

We trust that we are not presumptuous in asking this accommodation at your hands. It will be our endeavor to reciprocate the favor at some future time.

Thanking you in advance, we are,

Yours, very truly,

CHICAGO UNDERTAKERS' ASSOCIATION,
J. H. GAVIN, Secretary.

In addition I desire to call to your notice the resolutions adopted by the National Funeral Directors' Association, in convention, which read:

Whereas the thirty-eighth annual convention of the National Funeral Directors' Association, held at Atlantic City, N. J., September 10, 11, and 12, 1919, by an almost unanimous vote defeated the indorsement of the Purple Cross, whose object and policy is to force Congress to enact legislation compelling the Government to return the bodies of all of the soldier dead; and

Whereas we believe any such action to be a direct and flagrant violation of the rights and prerogatives of the parents to determine whether or not their boys shall forever rest under the soil of France, made sacred by their blood; and

Whereas the National Funeral Directors' Association by its action manifested in no uncertain terms the opinion that only from the Gold Star Mothers' Association and the relatives of the dead can any appeal be made with good grace bearing upon the disposition of our soldier dead; and

Whereas this action of the convention repudiated the unauthorized and unwarranted action of President John Maas in appointing Robert D. Dripps, of Philadelphia, executive secretary of the Purple Cross, as the official representative in Washington for the National Funeral Directors' Association in all matters affecting the interests of the profession of the country; and

Whereas since the adjournment of the said convention of the National Funeral Directors' Association the officers thereof have failed to advise the War Department of the will of the delegates: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting, comprising the 16 northern counties of the State of Illinois, held in Chicago January 13 and 14, 1920, that the secretary of the Chicago Undertakers' Association be, and is hereby, directed to communicate with the Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY, Representative of the fourth Illinois congressional district, and an honored member of the Chicago Undertakers' Association, informing him of the will of this body and requesting that he bring to the attention of the proper officials in Washington the action of the last national convention rejecting the Purple Cross and repudiating the said Robert D. Dripps as the representative of the profession in Washington; and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and copies forwarded to the Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and the Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY.

Also, the correspondence between the secretary of the Chicago Undertakers' Association and Congressman CALDWELL, a copy of his letter to the secretary of the association, and Mr. CALDWELL's letter to me:

CHICAGO UNDERTAKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., January 27, 1920.

The Hon. CHARLES POPE CALDWELL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We note in the press dispatches covering the doings of the congressional committee hearing the petitions of the relatives of the soldier dead for their return to this country that you read into the records of that meeting a certain editorial from the "Casket." You also stated that this publication was the mouthpiece and organ of the undertakers of the country. In this you are wholly mistaken, as it is but one of the seven organs identified with the profession.

We entertain now, and so made manifest our opinion at the last national convention of the funeral directors of the United States, the fact that any agitation on the part of the undertaker influencing legislation for the return of the soldier dead was not only unbecoming to the profession, but would place it in an unenviable light before the public.

We are satisfied that if the national officers had performed their duty by advising the War Department of the action of the last national convention the situation would have been clarified and you would have had no occasion to use the editorial or to comment upon the profession.

We are confident that after you have perused these resolutions and have become acquainted with the real situation you will use your best efforts to place the profession before the public in a proper light.

Thanking you in advance, we beg to remain,

Yours, very sincerely,

CHICAGO UNDERTAKERS' ASSOCIATION,
J. H. GAVIN, Secretary.

JANUARY 29, 1920.

CHICAGO UNDERTAKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Suite 601-604, 127 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

GENTLEMEN: I am glad to know that the Casket, from which I read an article on the floor of the House, is not the official organ of the undertakers, as I believed. I am sending you herewith a copy of my remarks, so that you may see exactly what I said, as the public press has, in many instances, extended my remarks without leave.

A number of my best friends are in your profession, and I would never think of criticizing it as a whole. My remarks, as you will note, were directed only against those who were engaged in a wrongful propaganda. You will note my statement that the good men of the vocation would resent the Casket article. I am glad that you do.

Sincerely, yours,

——— ———, M. C.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1920.

Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JOHN: I inclose herewith the letter I mentioned this morning and my reply thereto. I am entirely willing that the matter be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Certainly there was no intention on my part to reflect upon the good men of the profession, and if my referring to the Casket as an official organ caused any misapprehension, I would be glad to have it corrected.

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. POPE CALDWELL, M. C.

The exhibits which I have just inserted in the RECORD are self-explanatory.

Now, a few words in relation to what would naturally happen in the event that the bodies of the American soldiers now in Europe were brought back to this country for reinterment. In passing, let me say that I speak from practical experience gained as an undertaker, and I might state also that I am a member of the Chicago Undertakers' Association.

Our Government will retain jurisdiction over the bodies of the deceased until they are delivered to the homes of the relatives in this country or to a national cemetery designated by the relatives. By this I mean that this Government will disinter the body from its present resting place in Europe, giving it such professional attention as the individual case requires, place it in a hermetically sealed casket, which in turn is placed in an outside box, and shipped to the place designated by the relatives of the deceased.

The war-risk insurance law provides for an allowance of $100 to defray funeral expenses from the time of the delivery of the body to the home of the relatives until the same is reinterred in the cemetery. This amount is obtained from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance on the presentation of an itemized statement of expenses incurred.

In many instances no doubt relatives will request the remains be sent to their homes, where, as is commonly known amongst the people and the profession, "a wake" is held. Friends and relatives assemble to pay their respect to the dead, and a great number of them will find consolation in feeling they have had for a last time permission to mourn with their dead. Others bringing their dead to their homes are prompted by a desire to hold religious services either at their homes or their respective places of worship. In these cases the remuneration for the undertaker would be negligible.

Where public funerals are held and the bodies brought to the homes and religious services are held either at the home or the church the undertaker could not profit in any way except through a commission of 10 per cent allowed him by the owners of motor vehicles used in funeral work. To illustrate, usually the undertaker does not own the vehicles used by relatives and friends of the deceased, so he hires them from people in that business at an average cost of $15, in Chicago, and the average funeral has five vehicles, costing the family of the deceased $75, on which the undertaker's commission would amount to $7.50. In common with others in the various callings in life, undertakers have their share of bad debts on which they never realize a penny. Often when they allow these debts to be contracted with them they do so with their eyes wide open, for they, too, have hearts, and their sympathy for the afflicted not infrequently impels them to take action that can not be justified on any principle of business, but it is above all rules of trade and is known as the love of one's fellow man—charity in its broadest and best sense. Hence, the undertaker takes his risk, and if eventually he gets something on account, well and good; otherwise he charges it to profit and loss, and I have known undertakers who not only buried the dead when there was no hope or prospect of their receiving any pay, but those same undertakers have gone down in their pockets to give the widow and fatherless children money with which to buy food and clothing and to pay house rent. [Applause.]

I am anxious that Congress and the people of the country know that the undertakers of Chicago—and I enjoy the acquaintance of most of them—are proud of their profession and are doing everything they can to elevate the same, and what I claim for Chicago I believe to be true of the great majority of the profession throughout this great country of ours.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think I am as much interested in this matter as any other gentleman in Congress. I have noted the propaganda that has been circulated, and I quite agree with the statement of the gentleman. I have not been spoken to directly or indirectly by any person interested, nor have I found any Member of Congress who has ever been talked to directly or indirectly on the subject. If they have been, I would be glad if they would say so.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. In answer to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], I wish to say that over a year ago I had as many as 20 or 25 letters from undertakers in different parts of the country appealing to me to help promote this legislation, saying that it was a patriotic duty that we owed to our dead to bring the bodies home.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. At that time it was a question of policy to determine whether we should bring the bodies home or not. The policy was determined. The War Department has announced it. Since that time there has been some wavering. Since the statement of the Secretary of War and of Gen. Pershing I have never heard, directly or indirectly, any undertaker adding his voice in any way to the question.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I think the gentleman is correct, and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] there may be some exceptional and remote instances where members violate the ethics of the profession, but all are not perfect. This is an imperfect world. You may apply this rule to all professions and you must necessarily find some objectionable characters in all of them.

In the recent war thousands of members of the profession served "our country" in the ranks, their organizations contributed large amounts generously and willingly to the various organizations charged with caring for the boys' comfort, and all purchased liberally the bonds offered to assist in successively concluding this hell through which we have just come, and I am before you to say that they most vigorously resent unjust implications and criticism reflecting on their profession.

Let me suggest you will discover in practically all cases when our dead are returned from Europe wherever the services of an undertaker is required a quick response to serve, not for the financial gain but a sincere desire to help assuage the grief of those who will mourn their hero dead. [Applause.]

Mr. ROSE and Mr. KING rose.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

Mr. ROSE. While we are on the question of propaganda being spread throughout the country, I wish to say that not long since I had a communication from a very distinguished gentleman in the district that I have the honor to represent, who makes complaint against the undertakers for developing this propaganda throughout the country, and in order to satisfy myself I submitted that letter to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], who is familiar with all the details, and he informed me at that time that he could not lay his fingers upon the people who are interested in charging that a propaganda had been sent all over the country for the return of the soldiers. And I am glad the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] has given us the benefit of his investigations, so that the public may know that the undertakers have been charged with something that is not warranted by the facts and that the Government will redeem all pledges made with regard to the return of the soldier dead.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] and wish to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

Mr. KING. I wondered if the gentleman would not state to us who it is in this country really who wants the boys brought back; that is, the parents and relatives and friends. I would like to know if he is familiar with these features of it. I think myself that the bringing in of the undertaking question is propaganda designed to keep the bodies of the boys in France, and is part of a well-defined movement to keep those bodies in France, propagated by the French Government and, I think, at the instance of our officials in charge there, so that the Government of France can build up automobile lines in order that visitors can visit the graves, and thereby turn a lot of money into the pockets of the French people.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Just in a moment. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] that in part of my remarks I intend to include his suggestion with reference to the desire of the French Government—building motor roads so the American people, those who can afford to visit the graves of their dead, may go to France.

But if you want to know who I think are back of this propaganda, as you call it, I believe it is the relatives of our heroic dead who died abroad who are anxious to bring back the remains of their loved ones, so that they may have them here in the United States, and I join with those who have expressed this desire.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. If I may be permitted, in answer to the question which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] just propounded to the gentleman who has the floor, this morning I received a letter from a mother in my district who had lost her only son in France, and she pleaded with me to do all in my power to help her bring the remains of that boy back home, so that his remains could be buried in the community in which he was born and reared. It is only the mothers and fathers of a boy lost in France who can appreciate their heartfelt desire to have the boy's remains brought back home. I do not believe it is the propaganda of the undertakers, but that it is the earnest desire of the fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters and other relatives to have the bodies brought back home and buried in the communities in which they lived.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. The Government has arranged and is doing everything in its power and is now working on the problem, and in the very near future the remains will be returned from Europe to the United States.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Inasmuch as I made the statement which I did awhile ago, I want to state that I believe the Government itself will bring back the body of every dead soldier whose parents or wife or relatives desire the remains brought home. I made the statement which I did not for the purpose of making any attack on the undertakers or reflecting on them; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] stated, in substance, that he had not heard of any Member who had received these communications, and I made the statement to show they had been received.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. The question is frequently asked, and was suggested in the debate referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] when he inquired, "Why is it that France objects to the return of our soldier dead to this country?" Mr. KING, of Illinois, answered as follows:

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Oklahoma has asked a very pertinent question. I think one of the reasons why the French people insist upon holding these bodies over there is one of the most mercenary reasons I ever heard of. I have heard it several times when I happened to be across. They are constructing great automobile tourist routes through that section of the country. I do not know how many American dead there are there, but the French people expect that every American family who can raise the money, who have relatives buried in France, will come over there and visit the graves of their dead. I think it is one of the greatest national outrages that was ever perpetrated against us, and it seems to me that if the State Department would move, and move effectively, the French Government would not insist upon these orders that have been issued.

But I am more inclined to the reasoning of Mr. CALDWELL when he said:

I am in favor of the return of every body where the families want the bodies returned, and I am satisfied, from all I have been able to learn from the Secretary of War, that he and the other people in the War Department are as anxious as we are.

And—

The first reason, and a very proper one, is that in a great many instances American boys were with French boys. Many of them were killed by high-explosive shells, and in making the interment they picked up such of the remains as were left and put them in the ground, marking part of the ground as the grave of the American soldier and part of the ground as the grave of the French soldier, and in many instances the bodies of animals killed at the same time were buried with the bodies of the men, and under such circumstances it is only right and proper that no attempt should be made to disturb the remains.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. With pleasure.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say to the gentleman and others in reference to this matter that the War Department and the Department of State have had this matter up with foreign countries for a long while. This morning we were informed in the Committee on Foreign Affairs that this matter had been arranged, that the difficulties would probably be removed right away, and there would be no further objection or hindrance to the Government's bringing back the remains of American soldiers from France.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. If the Chairman will bear with me for a moment, I will conclude my remarks.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] has most courteously done everything in his power to remove any unjust criticism of undertakers in general that he may have unintentionally been responsible for, and I have no doubt but the other Members of Congress and the American people from their personal knowledge of undertakers in their respective communities, reenforced by the resolutions of the Chicago Undertakers' Association and the National Association at its Atlantic City convention, will conclude that the undertakers, in common with the rest of the people of this country, want the bodies returned from Europe in instances only where the relatives so desire, and not otherwise; that where the family wish "to let the tree lie where it fell," their wishes should be respected; that, finally, no set of men or individuals condemn the article that appeared in the Casket on September 1, 1919, or similar propaganda more emphatically than do the undertakers of Chicago and the undertakers of these United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill, if nobody else wants to occupy the floor.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, no measure to be considered by the present Congress is of greater interest to the entire country or directly affects a larger number of people than does the bill now pending.

The problem of the farmer is the problem of all the people. To those of you who have a city constituency I would say this is your problem quite as much as it is mine, for if something is not done to turn the tide now flowing from country to city, I warn you that the day will come when want, grim-visaged and fear-impelling, will walk among your workers and hunger will threaten the employees of every factory. The census of 1910 disclosed a startling drift from country to city, revealed the fact that in many of the agricultural communities out in the heart of the corn-belt country there had been an actual falling off in population. I predict that the census figures soon to be reported will show a still further drift to the city.

The recently reported findings of Hon. James I. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, come as no surprise to farmers or those who have been close students of agricultural conditions. They reveal nothing new; rather do they confirm a fact with which most of us were familiar. However, the people as a whole are deeply indebted to this official who has made possible such publicity. There is need, urgent need, that the city should Christopher Columbus the country. That there has been a lamentable lack of understanding as to country conditions is apparent. This lack of understanding has resulted in a lack of sympathy for those who wrest a living from the soil. I shall not charge that there has been malicious misrepresentation, but that injustice has been done the farmer no one familiar with the facts can doubt. A few mornings ago a Washington paper said editorially:

> There is a rather general impression in the thickly populated districts of the East that the farmers of the agricultural States are reaping rich profits from existing high prices. It is currently reported that they have junked their flivvers and taken to high-powered, six-cylinder touring cars; that a farm mortgage is a curiosity, and that farmers and their families dwell in luxury.

Such statements would be amusing were they not fraught with danger, did they not add to the unrest of the hour. Apparently, though, they are not taken seriously. Certainly not to an extent sufficient to cause any large number of city folk to leave their homes, perhaps provided with steam heat, electric lights and running water, to go to the country and enjoy a seven-hour day—seven hours before dinner and seven hours after—with longer hours for planting and harvest seasons.

The delineator of country life has changed. The farmer is no longer represented as a rube. Just because he now grows his alfalfa in his fields instead of on his chin, he is portrayed as rolling in riches. The old picture was a slander, the new one an exaggeration.

True, there are some rich farmers. Some have modern homes and comfortable cars. If so, they have worked hard and deserved them. Generally, these things have been made possible through good management, strict economy, intelligent farming methods, and the breeding and feeding of good live stock. But the average farmer is not rich. His lot is hard, his hours long, and his profits small. Because he has not been able to modernize his home, to provide the creature comforts for his loved ones, it has sometimes happened that well-meaning but mistaken lecturers, so-called "experts," and a few high-brow periodicals have accused this farmer of thinking more of his hogs than of his children. They forget that in the care of his live stock he hopes to realize returns which will make possible the modern home and the college education.

Would that I had time to picture the average farm home in the corn belt country. Would that I might outline the duties of the farmer as, with lantern in hand, he goes forth in the early morning to feed his stock and to look after a multitude of duties which are attended to before day. Then I would follow him in work, whatever it might be, until darkness came, and again we would see him quitting his tasks only when he could no longer see. The doubter has only to go to the country and put in a few days at actual work to learn that this picture is not overdrawn.

Referring again to the editorial just quoted, the suggestion is made that the public would like to know whether or not they are being exploited by the farmers and whether food should be cheaper. Is the farmer holding up the consumer? Hogs are now six or seven dollars per hundred lower than at the high time. If the farmer has the power to fix prices, and if he voluntarily submitted to this drop in prices, he must be a patriot indeed. According to the Monthly Crop Reporter for January, 1920, the prices of meat animals—hogs, cattle, sheep, and chickens—to producers of the United States decreased 2.9 per cent from November 15 to December 15. On December 15 the index figure of prices for these meat animals was about 13.9 per cent lower than a year ago, 9.4 per cent lower than two years ago.

Those of you who were Members of the last Congress will recall the statement that for the Government to continue the guaranty of $2.26 per bushel, Chicago basic price for wheat, would cost a billion dollars. We now know that it cost the Government nothing, but I am not so sure that the cost to the growers was not very great. The farmer with hogs and cattle in his feed lots sees the prices fluctuate from day to day as the markets are manipulated. Just here I would suggest the need of some system that will stabilize these markets. To-day the advantage is too much with the man who waters stocks and too little with the man who feeds and waters stock. We need more growers and fewer gamblers.

The farmer is the man with a stiff upper lip. Despite failure, despite drouth or deluge, he continues to plant and sow. Day after day, when no clouds appear in the ominous "copper cast" skies, he persists until finally the hot winds take their toll, or it may be that frost cuts down the early planted corn. Does he give up? No. Optimist that he is, he redoubles his energy and tries again. He hopes on, fights on, plows on. Then when his crops are ready to market he—what does he do? Price his output from field and feed lot so as to guarantee a fair profit? Oh, no; he sells at the price the other fellow fixes.

It is quite popular to picture the farmer as a profiteer. The metropolitan press, with its lack of intimate knowledge of rural conditions, and with a large advertising patronage from manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers, has presented the question from a city viewpoint, and, perhaps, in a manner most palatable to its patrons. Somebody had to be made "the goat," and the farmer, his interests publicly championed only by the country papers—heaven increase their power!—and the agricultural press, has been fixed upon as the guilty party. It is true that a few of the metropolitan dailies with large vision and real insight into country conditions, have quite fairly presented the problem. A perusal of the pages of the country weekly shows that less attention is being given to pink teas and more to red barns; that there are not so many items about Alfonse and William who went to the city to accept so-called "lucrative positions," but more concerning "Al" and "Bill" who stayed on the farm and grew the prize corn or fed the grand champion carload of cattle. It is largely within the power of the press properly to present this great, pressing problem.

I say that it is popular to find fault with the farmer. Women wearing costly fur coats have ridden in luxurious cars to splendidly appointed homes or clubs, and there advocated boycotts against the purchase of butter or eggs. One hears no suggestion as to a boycott on gasoline, on automobiles, or on furs. There is no serious complaint as to the price of wearing apparel. Why, it would almost be in order to award a medal to the young woman who in this day of extravagance is brave enough to wear cotton stockings.

I have referred to expenditures. Do you doubt my statements? Then stand on F Street in the city of Washington almost any Saturday afternoon and you will see in an hour's time $100,000 worth of fur coats worn by women, mostly girls who work. Take your place on Sixteenth Street in this same city on a fair Sunday afternoon and you will see in a single hour a million dollars' worth of autos. There is no let-up on luxury. There is little or no complaint except as to price of what the farmer and his family produces.

One day just before Christmas I saw in Washington City a line, three or four persons wide and extending far into the street, made up of people who were waiting their turn to buy candy at $1 or more per pound. Some of the women in that line wore shoes that cost more than the price of sufficient flour to meet the wants of the average man for an entire year. Oh, consistency, thou art a circus.

There are so many phases of this farm problem that no one suggestion will solve it, if indeed a solution is possible. I would, though, dare to make one or two suggestions.

Whatever will bring about true cooperation in the country—and by this I do not mean the cooperation of the wolf pack, but cooperation that will benefit alike city and country—will be of material assistance. Then there has been in the country a lamentable lack of leadership. The country needs to develop its own leaders.

My own State, Missouri, has been honored by having had the first Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, Hon. Norman J. Colman, as well as Hon. David F. Houston, who until last week filled the same position in the Wilson administration. The present Secretary is my neighbor on the north. So I mean no criticism of incumbents, past or present, when I make a suggestion to the farmers of America. The suggestion is this: That a demand be made upon the platform committees of both parties—or shall I say all parties?—that the Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of the next President be an honest-to-goodness farmer. Men absorb environment, so I would have as the directing head of the farmers of America one whose life has been spent on a farm and whose living has come from the land.

I would, if I could, have called in each State an agricultural conference to be attended by actual farm men and women. Then I would have delegates chosen by these State conferences meet here in Washington for a national conference. Out of these meetings great good should come. In such a conference I would hope to have men and women large of vision and liberal in views, so that such action as might be taken would redound to the benefit of both country and city.

But I would not have the conference to which I have referred take the place of Congress. The farmers of the country have a right to feel and ought to feel that they can look to Congress for justice. The farmer is not a confidence man, but a man of confidence. He has shown his confidence in Congress by failing to send bodies of paid representatives here to make demands upon Congress. This being true, we are traitors indeed if we are not true to the trust. [Applause.]

There is great need of closer cooperation between city and country. The country needs and must have the city, just as the city must of necessity rely upon the country. So long as there is a fair division of returns the prosperity of the one adds to the well-being of the other. To vitalize the village is to add to the efficiency of the farm.

As revealed by answers to questions sent out by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, the biggest problem before the farmer is that of labor. It is not a new problem. It has been with us for years, the only difference being that it is now more pressing than ever before. How the farmer, single handed and alone, is to secure sufficient help in competition with the shorter hours and higher wages in the cities, is beyond me to say. My thought is that it must come largely in decreased cost of marketing, in better market methods, in cooperation on the part of the consumer as well as producer.

There is no disposition on the part of the farmer, as has been intimated, looking to abandonment of effort. He will continue to do his best to feed the world. He has always done so. But without laborers in the fields—and there is also dire need for help in farm homes where the women are overworked—he can not meet the demands of the day.

From my own State—Missouri—comes the statement from the United States Bureau of Crop Estimates and the secretary of the State board of agriculture, that there is "not a single county but has an actual shortage of farm labor." The report says, in part:

> Investigations made in December indicate that pay of farm labor by the month has increased 80 per cent over that of 1914; day harvest wages, 125 per cent; day wages for other farm work, 100 per cent. For instance, the average rate per month, with board, in 1914 was $21, and $37 in 1919; without board in 1914, $29, and $50 in 1919. The average rate per day for harvest labor, with board, in 1914 was $1.55, and $3.45 in 1919; for harvest labor, without board, $1.93 in 1914, and $4.35 in 1919. The average rate per day for other labor, with board, $1.05 in 1914, and $2.15 in 1919; without board, $1.35 in 1914, and $2.75 in 1919. Added to these wages, in many instances, is use of house, garden, cow, place for pigs, chickens, and fuel supplied where the man is married and lives on the farm.

That there has been a decided rise in wages paid for farm labor is also shown by reports of the United States Department of Agriculture. In 1919, taking the United States as a whole, the farm laborer, who also received his board, was paid $39.82 per month, as compared with $19.21 in 1910. Without board the wages were $56.29, as compared with $27.50. In harvest, workers received $3.15 per day and board in 1919, as against $1.45 in 1910. In other harvest work the pay was $2.45 per day and board in 1919, as against $1.06 in 1910. While these wages show an advance of more than 100 per cent, on the face of them they appear much lower than in the cities. Consequently, the worker is attracted to the city. Nor do we blame him. There is no law to prevent workers going from farms to cities. What is more, they are going. What is still more, they are going to keep on going so long as they find it more pleasant and profitable to do so. Willingly would the farmer pay higher wages were the returns from his farm such as to make it possible. The outstanding truth, however, is that, regardless of wages offered, sufficient help can not be secured. If there is an abandonment of effort on the part of the farmer, it will come not through choice but of necessity.

Time does not permit me to dwell at length upon the various items contained in this bill. In the main, I approve the measure. While a stickler for economy, this is one case in which I would support a larger appropriation. I am glad that the committee has seen fit to reduce the number of clerks, many of whom and in various departments could, I believe, be let out. On the other hand, I would favor for those in responsible positions salaries commensurate with the importance of their work. I advocate living salaries and liberal appropriations for large projects with a corresponding saving in minor places.

As an illustration of what I have just said, I believe that we should look with favor upon any reasonable appropriation having for its object the development of better trade relations with the South American countries. Especially have I in mind the great opportunities for the sale of pure-bred live stock to the farmers of Brazil, Uruguay, and other countries. This is a virgin field.

The market demands are sure to be great and the United States, with its hundreds of thousands of pure-bred cattle, hogs, and other animals, is prepared to meet the demand. Some conception of the extent of the pure-bred business in America may be gained when it is known that we have more than 60 pure breeds of live stock, each with one or more record associations, and that last year the estimated sales of pure-bred animals in the United States amounted to more than one-third of a billion dollars. No one can at this time estimate the extent and value of the business such as it is possible for our live-stock breeders to build up in South America. A recent shipment of more than 200 head of breeding cattle to Brazil has paved the way, and even now a larger order is being filled. With personal contact established, and with view herds in Brazil and other countries, our live-stock breeders are sure to enjoy an immense business. I strongly urge a liberal appropriation to develop this southern market. Either America or Great Britain will soon have captured the field.

I also urge liberal appropriations for the Bureau of Crop Estimates. Uncle Sam must have a bookkeeper. The American farmer must not only keep books himself, but there must be one great bookkeeper for all. Speculators and commercial interests have been quick to appreciate the value of having a definite line on agricultural production. Were such information not made available to the farmer, he would fall easy prey to those better informed. Not only are we interested in the output of our own country, but we are directly concerned with agriculture everywhere, with the wool clip of Australia, the beef of the Argentine, and the wheat of Canada. The American farmer must not be handicapped for lack of information dealing with crops and live stock.

We have heard much, and rightly so, of how our boys went "over the top"; but not alone on the battle fields of France did Americans go over the top. I have seen them go over the top here at home. At half a dozen or more places in my district in 1918 I saw the young men—50, 75, or 100 at a time—assemble in answer to the call. With these boys came fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, and sweethearts. I saw the leave-takings, saw the smiles through the tears, heard the songs and shouts that hid the heartaches. Then, after the train had passed from sight, I saw the ones who had been left behind start back to their homes, some to the southern counties in the Ozark foothills, where dwell as patriotic a people as live under the flag of the free. Others I saw go to the rolling prairies of northern Boone or to the Missouri River border counties, from which had gone splendid, stalwart sons. Then, in the days that followed, days that tried men's souls, I saw fathers, some of them old and bent—yes, and I saw mothers and sisters, too—go into the fields, there to replace as best they could the strong and sturdy sons who had been called into the service. The hours were long and the labor heavy.

Heavy, too, was the harvest. That year Missouri farms, short many thousands of workers, produced crops worth $462,000,000, the result of the harvest from 14,870,000 acres, the State advancing from fourteenth to fourth place in combined farm-crop and live-stock production. What that accomplishment meant only those who made it possible can ever know. And what Missouri did the farmers of every State did in greater or less degree. That same year the farmers of the United States, without thought of self or threat of strike, made available a war crop which included 2,582,000,000 bushels of corn, 917,100,000 bushels of wheat, and 1,538,000,000 bushels of oats.

Who is there that would not now deal liberally with those who unselfishly and untiringly worked to produce the food required to win the war? This was genuine patriotism, a patriotism not confined to the country. Even in hamlets, towns, and cities, where the flag was kept flying in the front yard, the dirt was kept flying in the back yard. But wherever this work was in progress the only flag was the banner of red, white, and blue. No red flag ever floated from a farm.

The farm home, most of all, represents the strength of the Nation. [Applause.]

May I illustrate? One beautiful Sunday morning in the autumn of 1917 I stood with a few others and witnessed the memorable review of that noble aggregation of fighting men, the Rainbow Division, at Camp Mills, on the historic Hempstead Plains on Long Island. The men were soon to leave for France, and as I watched them pass in review, saw the waving flags, and listened to the martial music, I was moved as never before. Then did it seem to me that America had not only a new mission but a new meaning. In my enthusiasm I said, "This is the strength of the Nation." A few days later I was on the water front near New York City, and I saw our convoyed transports loaded with the flower of our land, saw the mighty floating forts, and again in my enthusiasm I said, "This is the strength of the Nation." But it so happened that a little later I went back to the interior and to a farm home far removed from the busier activities of war. It was an old-fashioned farm home, a big white house with green blinds and a rambler rose winding its way over the front porch. It was a real home, the sort of a house that seems to have a soul. As the day died and as the shadows lengthened, as they were lengthening in the lives of the father and mother in that home, we talked long on commonplace things, of the war, and of the boy "over there" doing his bit in order that civilization and Christianity might not perish from the earth. Bedtime came, and I saw the old father take from a table a well-worn book and read a chapter, after which there was an earnest prayer for the coming of peace, peace born of victory. Shown to my bedroom, my attention was attracted to two pillows, such perhaps as were in your home and mine. On one of these pillows a mother's hands had worked "I slept and dreamed life was beauty," while on the other were the words "I woke and found life was duty." I lay awake a long time, lulled by the gentle tinkle of sheep bells. Then it was that this thought came to me: The abiding strength of the Nation is, after all, not in armies nor in navies, necessary as they may be, but in peaceful, prosperous, Christian homes like this.

Support of this measure, gentlemen of the committee, is to lend strength to these homes and, through them, to the Nation as a whole. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS].

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we have heard a great deal of discussion during this session of Congress on the subject of economy, and a beautiful sentiment has been expressed in every statement made; but beautiful sentiments, gentlemen of the House, will not reduce appropriations. It is one thing to preach economy and quite another and a different thing to practice it. I had hoped that the heads of the departments had caught the drift of sentiment throughout this country with reference to the appropriations that have been made during the past two and a half years, and especially since the armistice was signed on the 11th of November, 1918.

It is my purpose in addressing you to deal strictly with the facts, and not to indulge in generalities or presumptions.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1921, submitted to this House through the Speaker, requests Congress to make the following appropriations for the expenses of the various departments of Government, to wit:

Legislative establishment	$9,025,297.25
Executive establishment	111,583,361.77
Judicial establishment	1,634,190.00
Department of Agriculture	37,528,102.00
Foreign intercourse	11,243,250.91
Military Establishment	989,578,657.20
Naval Establishment	542,031,804.80
Indian Affairs	12,994,494.27
Pensions	215,030,000.00
Panama Canal	18,245,391.00
Public works	265,676,419.17
Postal Service	391,713,673.00
Miscellaneous	833,717,637.96
Permanent annual appropriation	1,425,407,752.29
Total	4,865,410,031.62

Now, remember that these are estimates on a peace-time basis.

In this same Book of Estimates the Secretary of the Treasury urges economy. At page 22 of his report he uses this language:

> Accepting a warning from the innumerable requests that are constantly being pressed upon the Congress for grants from the general fund, it becomes the clear duty of this department to point out that there appears to be grave danger that the extraordinary success of the Treasury in financing the stupendous war expenditures may lead to a riot of public expenditure after the war, the consequences of which could only be disastrous. It can not be too often repeated or too strongly urged that the optimistic outlook of the future of the Government's finances, as presented in the beginning of this report, is based upon the practice of the most rigid economy and the continuance of ample revenues from taxation. Any other policy means a calamitous upsetting of the entire program.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1916, a normal peace year, submitted to this House through the Speaker, requested Congress to make the following appropriations, to wit:

Legislative	$13,680,562.52
Executive	668,550.00
State Department	5,171,762.66
Treasury	136,833,740.00
Territorial governments	180,600,000.00
Independent offices	3,866,020.00
District of Columbia	13,668,734.23
War Department	186,675,373.81
Panama Canal	18,931,865.58
Navy Department	147,764,086.88
Interior Department	206,282,343.20
Post Office Department	1,820,695.00
Postal Service, payable from postal revenues	297,355,164.00
Department of Agriculture	25,800,413.00
Department of Commerce	16,774,095.00
Department of Labor	4,443,210.00
Department of Justice	10,857,918.50
Total	1,090,175,134.38

The difference between the estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 and for the fiscal year 1921, both peace-time years, is $3,775,234,897.24.

This difference in the estimates is astounding. It is amazing when we consider its meaning under the financial stress that prevails. Are the taxpayers to be required to carry this additional load in peace time?

Remember, gentlemen, that the loyal and patriotic citizens of this Nation purchased Liberty bonds and Victory notes to the amount of $19,580,010,555 during the World War and since the armistice was signed.

The estimates submitted at this time of crisis will not bear the searchlight of investigation.

There is a widespread and almost universal prevailing sentiment throughout the country on the part of the taxpayers that war-time appropriations should no longer be made but should cease and determine, and, on the contrary, that the appropriations should be reduced in amount to a peace-time basis. There is a prevailing opinion broadcast in the land that the people's money is being wasted and recklessly spent through extravagant appropriations and enormous expenditures, and there is a general demand on the part of the taxpayers that Congress adopt a strict policy of economy and that appropriations be greatly and materially reduced.

The taxpayers of the country are sorely burdened and distressingly oppressed with the enormous burden of taxation. They feel, and rightfully so, that the war is over and that the burden of taxation should be lightened. I regret to say that many of them have lost faith in the business ability of the various departments of Government, in the control, management, and disbursement of the financial affairs of this Nation. They are aware that this Government, through faulty, reckless, and careless business methods upon the part of those who had charge of affairs during the progress of the late war, lost more than $2,000,000,000 of the people's hard-earned money through graft and wanton and reckless extravagance and willful waste.

Not only so, but they are aware that millions of dollars have been and are being wasted in the numerous departments of government on account of inefficiency, lack of faithfulness to duty, and indifference on the part of the great and unnecessary army of employees in these various departments, who are being retained, without performing any apparent service necessary or required by the Government, 15 months after the armistice was signed and after hostilities have ceased.

They know that millions of dollars of property, in the nature of war materials and war equipment and war supplies, is scattered broadcast through this country and is exposed to the influence of the elements, and is actually being allowed to rot.

They know that this property should have been converted into money long since and covered into the Treasury of the United States, so that the same might have been applied to the payment of interest on our $34,000,000,000 war debt, and in this way appropriations might have been curtailed or reduced.

They know that thousands of employees in the various departments of Government and throughout the country have been living off of Uncle Sam since the armistice was signed, with nothing to do but draw their breath and their salary, and that the department heads are aiding them, in the estimates submitted for appropriations and in many other ways, to retain their places at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

They know that the department heads in submitting their estimates for fiscal appropriations seldom, if ever, recommend a reduction of appropriations on account of a reduction of expenses or a reduction of the number of employees in their respective departments.

On the contrary, they know that the historic policy of department heads is to increase the estimates for appropriations and to increase the personnel of their departments, and to increase the number of bureaus and subordinate organizations under their control.

They know that the heads of departments have no concern as to how the money is to be raised which is expended through these departments or who is required to pay it.

They know that what the departments want is money, and plenty of it, with the right to disburse it in any manner which meets with their approval under the guise of law.

They know that Uncle Sam has been pursuing a weak and destructive business policy, which must eventually, if continued, lead ultimately to ruin and bankruptcy.

The taxpayer is a loyal and patriotic citizen. He does not shirk any duty which may be enjoined upon him, nor does he fail to answer every call his country may make of him. He is always ready, willing, and anxious to uphold, support, and maintain his Government by reason of his means, but he demands now that Uncle Sam conduct his business on a business basis and through strict business methods. Why is he not right in making this demand and requiring that the business of this country be conducted along business lines? [Applause.]

We have heard a great deal of talk about economy during this session. It is one thing to proclaim economy and quite another and different thing to practice it.

Nearly every bill brought into this House carrying appropriations for the fiscal year is less in the aggregate than the estimates. Not infrequently have I heard the chairman, in answer to the question as to why the bill carried such and such appropriations, say that the appropriations carried were very much less than the estimates. Who makes up these estimates? Department heads, of course. With a view to economy? No. With the express view and purpose of obtaining from Congress the highest appropriation possible for their department. By what rule are they governed in making up these estimates? By the independent opinion of the heads of the departments. They want to hold on to their Army and war-time organizations, and the only way to insure economy is to break up these organizations by refusing to make the appropriations to continue them. [Applause.]

I regret, gentlemen of the House, to say that if this Congress should carry the estimates made by the heads of departments into appropriations, bankruptcy would be our fate. We must get down to a system of economy. Congress in the last three years has made such enormous appropriations, under the emergency, that I fear sometimes it has formed the habit of making appropriations without regard to the ultimate result. I do not mean to criticize the membership of this House by that statement. I am simply suggesting to the House and trying my level best to impress upon the mind of each and every Member of this great legislative body the necessity of adopting a policy of strict economy. Economy is the word above all others for Congress to heed just now. The Republican Members of this House are charged with the responsibility of reducing appropriations. We are in the majority. We have that majority because the taxpayers of this country in a day changed the political complexion of Congress as if by magic.

Why? Because the voters of the country were dissatisfied with the management of financial affairs of this Government and decided by their votes to have such changes as they deemed prudent in order to conserve the finances of the country, but the Republicans are not required to bear this responsibility alone. The Members on the Democratic side of this House have some obligations, some responsibilities, as well; and let me predict now that unless the membership of this House, both Republicans and Democrats, carry out a strict policy of economy in curtailing appropriations there will be some strange faces on both sides of this House in the next Congress. I have noticed during the consideration of appropriation bills that Members have offered numerous amendments carrying additional appropriations. We can not reduce the appropriations by cutting down the estimates in committee and then on the floor of the House increase the amount of the bill by adopting amendments to the bill carrying additional appropriations.

The people of this country read for themselves. There never was a time in the history of Congress when the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was so in demand and so widely read as at the present time. From the 6th day of April, 1917, the date of the declaration of war against Germany by Congress, the American citizens have been reading events closely, both from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and from the press of the country. They have kept in touch with the proceedings. They know of the enormity of the appropriations that were made. They know now that the appropriations of the Sixty-sixth Congress must be greatly reduced or this country will face a deficit in the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, of something like $3,906,000,000.

The people of America are not asleep. They are wide-awake and alert to every action of Congress, and the Republican or Democrat who seeks to increase appropriations on the floor of this House by amendment or in committee where the bills are being considered may depend upon it that he will be held to a strict account to his constituency when he seeks to succeed himself as the Representative of that constituency. There was a time in the history of national affairs when a Member of Congress might deceive his constituency as to his activities and his faithfulness to duty, but that day has passed into oblivion, and I am thankful to the Almighty that that day has gone, for I believe that the constituency of every Member of this House should be fully advised of his attendance, of his application to duty, and of his sincerity in the discharge of the trust which has been reposed in him. [Applause.]

The folks at home have their eyes riveted on Congress; they are watching the proceedings closely, especially the appropriations, and they will not need a copy of our record to advise them as to what we have done here. They will have it, and any man who depends upon party loyalty for reelection will be fooled, unless his record is satisfactory. It used to be that when a voter refused to support the nominee of his party he was called a "bolter," a term synonymous with "deserter," and many times, in order to avoid this imputation and resultant political annihilation, he was whipped into line and supported the ticket. Nowadays, however, when he bolts he is regarded as an independent voter, a sort of political giant, and both the old parties play for his vote. This only goes to illustrate that the voters read and keep in touch with what is being done by all legislative bodies to which is intrusted the transaction of public business. They know who they want to represent them, and vote accordingly. This is the principal reason why there are so many independent voters in this country to-day.

WHAT THE WAR COST.

No loyal and patriotic American citizen objects to a single dollar that was spent legitimately, in order to support and maintain the Army at home and abroad, in winning the great World War. We are proud of our soldiers; proud of their achievements; proud of their bravery and heroism. These red-blooded American soldiers were entitled to every dollar they needed and to our help in every possible way, and we all helped them to the limit of our ability, and are proud of it, but the war is over now and war-time appropriations should cease. We have other obligations to meet. We must pay our war debt. We must arrange for a bonus for the soldier boys who bore the burden in the heat of battle, and in order to do that and carry out our obligations to these boys we must economize where economy can be invoked without impairing the efficiency of any department of government.

What the war actually cost in dollars has been, and still is, a mooted question. A half-dozen approximations have been given as to what the war actually cost, ranging from $20,000,000,000 to $60,000,000,000. I have taken the pains to investigate this matter somewhat.

Secretary of the Treasury Glass, in a letter dated July 9, 1919, to the House Committee on Ways and Means, has discussed the United States war expenditures, and estimates the same by adding total expenditures of the United States for the war period and subtracting therefrom what he estimates the United States would have spent on a normal peace basis. This he places at $1,000,000,000 annually. If, therefore, from the total annual appropriations there be subtracted $1,000,000,000 for each year, the remainder will approximate what, according to the method of the calculations of the Secretary of the Treasury, may be considered as appropriations chargeable to the war.

Total appropriations by Congress for fiscal years 1917–1920.

Year.	Source of information.	Amount.
1917	United States Treasury Department, Digest of Appropriations, 1917, p. 542	$1,628,411,644.81
1918	United States Treasury Department, Digest of Appropriations, 1918, p. 603	18,881,940,243.79
1919	Statement of Mr. WARREN, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 10, 1919, p. 2398	27,092,094,720.75
1920	Statement of Mr. GOOD, chairman Appropriations Committee of House, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 16, 1919, p. 5539	7,345,617,283.58
	Total	54,948,063,892.93

The item of $27,092,094,720.75 includes $3,000,000,000 loaned to the Allies.

In round numbers, the total of the above is $55,000,000,000, to which should be added $3,000,000,000 more for the war expenses of the present fiscal year and from which should be taken $4,000,000,000 for normal expenses for the four fiscal years (1917, 1918, 1919, 1920) and $3,000,000,000 loaned to the Allies. The net total cost of our participation in the war will be seen to be $51,000,000,000, which is $510 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. And if we add to this the amount which we have loaned to the Allies, which is, in round numbers, $10,000,000,000, the net total cost will be $61,000,000,000, which is $610 for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

This, too, represents only the direct cost of the World War in dollars and cents. It does not include the indirect cost caused by the enormous increase in the cost of living since we entered the war 2 years and 10 months ago.

In addition to the above we may add $475,000,000 which is due as interest from the Allies and which the Allies are not able to pay, for that is our money, and we need it now badly. The House Ways and Means Committee agreed that the Treasury should not demand the interest on American loans to the Allies now, but to fund it over a period of years until the European finances are normal again. The question is, When will they be normal? How long will the United States have to wait for this interest, to say nothing of the principal? Congress realizes that the payment of the interest now is impossible.

Our loans to Europe up to December, 1919, aggregated $9,647,419,494, as shown by the following statement:

Great Britain	$4,277,000,000
France	3,047,974,777
Italy	1,620,922,872
Belgium	343,445,000
Russia	187,720,750
Czechoslovakia	55,330,000
Greece	48,236,629
Serbia	26,780,465
Roumania	25,000,000
Cuba	10,000,000
Liberia	5,000,000
Total	9,647,419,494

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

According to the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the state of the finances, for the fiscal year, the gross public debt, on the basis of the daily Treasury statements, amounted to $26,210,530,000 on October 31, 1919, without any deduction for loans to the Allies, or other investments.

Note, if you please, the phrase "or other investments." What are they? This report does not show. Of course, if you add to this the $10,009,000,000 principal and the $475,000,000 interest that the Allies owe to the United States we will have a total of $36,685,530,000.

The interest charge alone on the public debt for this fiscal year is $1,017,500,000, and is more than the total appropriations for all governmental purposes for the fiscal year 1913, amounting to $1,010,812,449.

The United States Government appropriated and spent more money in the two years covering the war period, by several billions of dollars, than the entire cost of the Government of the United States from George Washington's day as President—1789 to April 6, 1917—and that includes the cost of the Civil War, the War of 1812, the War with Mexico, and the War with Spain. The figures are so staggering that even the experts are confused. From the day that George Washington took his seat as President, in 1789, to April 6, 1917, the total cost of running the Government amounted, in round numbers, to $40,000,000,000. The truth is that no man living within the boundaries of the United States knows the exact cost of the war. Congress has been considering during the past week deficiency appropriations necessary to carry out contracts entered during the war period, and no one knows just when these estimates for deficiencies will end.

GOVERNMENT REVENUE FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1919.

TAXES.

The collections of income and profits taxes for the year ending June 30, 1919, amounted to $2,600,783,902.70.

The inheritance tax collected during the year aggregated $22,029,983.13.

Taxes collected on distilled spirits and alcoholic beverages for the year amounted to $483,050,854.17.

Taxes collected on tobacco and tobacco manufactures, for the year, amounted to $206,003,091.83.

Taxes collected on oleomargarine, adulterated, and process or renovated butter, and mixed flour, for the year was $2,926,414.21.

Taxes collected on bonds, capital-stock issues, conveyances, capital-stock transfers, and sales of produce for future delivery amounted to $33,551,873.53.

Transportation taxes collected during the year amounted to $237,839,572.30.

Taxes collected on insurance during the year aggregated $14,508,881.31.

Excise taxes collected for the year—sales by manufacturers, producers, and importers—including automobiles, motor cycles, and so forth, amounted to $82,424,873.83.

Excise taxes—sales by dealers of certain works of art, carpets, picture frames, and wearing apparel; perfumes and cosmetics; soft drinks, ice cream, and so forth—amounted to $6,147,269.45.

Taxes collected from corporations on capital stock for the year amounted to $28,775,749.66.

Taxes collected from brokers, theaters, museums, bowling alleys, billiard and pool tables, shooting galleries, riding academies, passenger automobiles for hire, and so forth, amounted to $4,721,298.16.

Taxes collected on admissions to places of amusement and entertainment and club dues for the year amounted to $54,992,157.01.

Taxes collected on narcotics from importers, manufacturers, compounders, dealers, and so forth, for the year amounted to $693,686.30.

Sales of condemned Government property, receipts under repealed laws, other miscellaneous collections, and so forth, for the year amounted to $1,501,004.15.

Sales of internal-revenue stamps affixed to parcel-post packages, and so forth, reported by the Postmaster General for the year amounted to $10,199,466.51.

Total receipts of the Internal-Revenue Bureau from all sources during the year amounted to $3,850,150,078.56.

Gentlemen of the House, you will notice from the above figures that property of every kind and description, whether tangible or intangible, or whether real, personal, or mixed, is taxed to the limit. Is it any wonder that there is a universal demand on the part of the taxpayers of the country that appropriations should be reduced? Do you blame them for criticizing Congress for being extravagant in the appropriations made since the armistice was signed, 15 months ago? Certainly not. No sane man will contend for a minute that Congress has any right whatever, in time of peace, to waste the money of the taxpayers of this Nation, or at any other time, so far as that is concerned. [Applause.]

EXAMPLES OF EXTRAVAGANCE AND WASTE.

I deem it important that I should give to the membership of the House a few examples of profligate waste and extravagance since the armistice was signed on November 11, 1918.

1. More than $35,000,000 worth of automobile tires were ruined through exposure to the weather at the Motor Transport Corps Base at Verneuil, France.

2. Three thousand five hundred motor cycles became junk through similar exposure, as well as automobiles and hundreds of trucks.

3. Explosives plant at Nitro, W. Va., sold by the War Department for $8,551,000. It cost the Government $75,000,000.

4. War food supplies and other articles, of the value of nearly $2,000,000,000, owned by this Government and in France, have been sold to the French Government for $400,000,000, or less than 25 per cent of their value.

5. Five million dollars was wasted by the Government on a nitrate plant out of Cincinnati.

The excuse offered for these amazing transactions is the claim that to place these supplies on sale here at home "might disturb the market."

On the other hand, no reason at all is assigned for the wanton destruction of some $700,000,000 worth of automobiles and motor trucks purchased by the Government and now parked in the open and rusting out at various points over the country.

While Americans are being forced to submit to the rationing of sugar, as during the war days, our War Department is busy with the details of forwarding 27,000,000 pounds of sugar, a left-over morsel of war supplies, to France, where it is being sold for less than wholesale rates.

Thirty-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-three motor vehicles were shipped to France after the signing of the armistice and included in the sale to the French Government.

Included also in the sale to France were 89,199 motor vehicles, costing the United States $310,739,694.

The War Department submitted estimates for $42,841,565 for rivers and harbors improvements to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The House passed the bill for $12,000,000, thus saving the taxpayers $30,841,565 that would have been unnecessarily spent.

The present second deficiency bill for this fiscal year carries an appropriation of $88,000,000. The estimates submitted were $108,000,000, a saving of $20,000,000 to the taxpayers.

The total cost of administering internal-revenue laws for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, was $20,573,771.52, nearly $8,000,000 more than the expenses for the previous year.

I have indicated just a few items that show clearly the reckless manner in which the taxpayers' money is being squandered.

Gentlemen of the House, it is perfectly plain to me that our Government has resorted to drastic taxation, and yet her income now does not equal her current expenses. We should stop and consider where we are drifting. This is no time for idle thought. We must hesitate. Yes; we must stop. Stop and listen and consider. Consider carefully each and every item that may be contained in the appropriation bills submitted to this House, and see to it that only such appropriations are made as are actually necessary, and let us be sure that these appropriations are necessary. Let us not indulge in conjecture or probabilities or possibilities, but let us sincerely deal with the facts as they are presented to us. Oh, you say we are a rich Nation. Yes; that is true; we are.

Our total wealth is estimated at $250,000,000,000. We are without doubt the richest Nation in the world. We are a credit Nation; the balance of trade is on our side of the ledger. Let us keep it on our side of the ledger, but let us not do so at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

With only 6 per cent of the world's population and only 7 per cent of the land, the United States produces—

Twenty-five per cent of the world's gold.
Twenty-five per cent of the world's wheat.
Forty per cent of the world's iron and steel.
Forty per cent of the world's lead,
Fifty per cent of the world's silver.
Fifty-two per cent of the world's zinc.
Sixty per cent of the world's aluminum.
Sixty per cent of the world's copper.
Sixty per cent of the world's cotton.
Sixty-six per cent of the world's oil.
Seventy-five per cent of the world's corn.
Eighty-five per cent of the world's automobiles.

We also refine 80 per cent of the copper and operate 40 per cent of the railroads. But why waste our wealth through extravagance? Why impoverish our people? Why not exemplify the lesson of thrift?

No good business man allows his expenditures to exceed in amount his receipts, nor can the Government of the United States, through its agencies, spend money in excess of its revenues. This Government has been doing that very thing, since the armistice was signed, without any reason or justifiable excuse. If we expect the people of this Nation to practice economy and thrift, Congress must set the example. [Applause.]

With business having gathered great forward momentum in 1919, the movement may conceivably carry some distance farther, but its duration will be largely dependent upon conditions which have not, as yet, assumed concrete form, and it is significant that there are signs of increased caution among conservative interests. The problem of high prices, becoming more complex as some markets tend steadily upward, is plainly one which is not devoid of disquieting possibilities, as has been frequently reiterated. And the continued evidences of extravagance in personal and governmental expenditures are the reverse of reassuring. That the inflation of prices and of buying has been carried beyond the limits of prudence and safety is the contention in not a few quarters; and the question as to how soon, and in just what way, the inevitable readjustment will manifest itself is one of no little importance or concern.

Gentlemen of the House, suppose a panic should overtake us within the next year, what would be the result? How would it affect the financial status of this Nation? How would this Government meet its obligations? What effect would it have upon our revenues? And how under heaven could we lessen our necessary and current expenditures?

These are matters to be considered in peace times, when commercial, industrial, and social conditions are abnormal and unsettled. Such a panic is not impossible, but, judging from past history and experience, it is altogether probable in the readjustment of affairs. Why not begin the practice of economy now? Why not commence now to liquidate our funded indebtedness?

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

A major stroke in the direction of economy was made by this House when it passed the budget bill, regulating the expenditures of the National Government, during the special session of this Congress.

I gladly supported this bill, because after having considered it, I made up my mind that it was very much better to have one committee make the appropriations for governmental expenditures than to have the same made by a number of committees. I think this system, if it becomes a law, will save the taxpayers of the country an enormous sum of money annually. Under the present system of making appropriations many duplications naturally result. Under the budget system this can and will be avoided. Aside from that, it will make the committee on the budget responsible for the appropriations made, and this responsibility should be centered somewhere in one special committee of this House.

A flood of appropriation bills are introduced in each session of Congress, and are considered by many committees, which know but little about the facts relating to the demands therein made, or of the real requirements of the occasion, and have but slight opportunity to ascertain the facts in relation to these matters, even by extensive hearings. The Budget Committee, under the budget system, will have the jurisdiction, authority, and time to scan all these various appropriation bills closely, and to determine the appropriations that are essential, and discard those items in these bills that are nonessential.

THE TAXPAYER.

I have referred repeatedly to the taxpayers, in discussing this matter, and it would be well for us to consider who are the taxpayers of the United States. They are not alone those who are rich and have money, but the tax burden is forced upon the poor as well. Every man, woman, and child in the United States have to bear their proportionate share of the taxes. The poor and laboring class pay it in the purchase of the necessities of life; in rent, in railroad fares, in shoes and clothing, and in everything that they are required to purchase in order to live.

The rich pay it on excess profits, on incomes, in inheritance tax, and in National, State, and local taxes, but, after all, the major portion of the taxes are finally paid by the poor people of this Nation. They are the ones who have suffered, and, as a Member of this great legislative body, I propose to work and vote for a reduction of these taxes, which are forced upon the people by waste, extravagance, and unnecessary appropriations.

Our distinguished floor leader, the gentleman from Wyoming, on the initial day of this session, and on numerous occasions since, has repeatedly insisted and urged, with all his great ability, and his broad conception of public and governmental affairs, that we follow a strict policy of economy in making appropriations, because of the depleted condition of the Treasury. His logic is sound, and his reasoning is amply supported by the facts. Why not heed his advice and counsel? As one Member of this House, I have done so up to this good hour, and I intend to do so during the rest of this session and so long as I may have the honor to occupy a seat in this great legislative chamber, and I earnestly appeal to the Members on both sides of this aisle to do likewise. It will prove profitable in the end, and, besides, we will all be rendering a great service both to our constituency and to the country as well.

Gentlemen of the House, I assure you that the financial affairs of this Government and the depletion of our Treasury have given me no little concern, and in discussing this matter, in my humble way, if I have been able to clarify the situation, or if I have been able to assist you in comprehending more clearly the duty devolving upon us to conserve the finances of this Nation and to adopt a business policy of economy, I will have accomplished that which prompted me to address you on this occasion. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in general debate on the Agricultural appropriation bill, I think that it is very appropriate to have something to say concerning the attitude of the farmers of the Nation toward some of the important political and economic problems which are now at the forefront in our national discussion. Of course, I am well aware that the farmers are not a unit in their opinions on these questions, because there are differences among them just as there are differences among other classes and groups of our people. But I think it may be fairly stated that on certain important questions there is an existing preponderance of opinion which may well be taken as representative of their attitude.

I think that these views were very ably stated in a joint memorial to Congress of date January 30, 1920, by the executive heads of six national farmers' organizations in conference at the headquarters of the National Board of Farm Organizations here in Washington. These organizations were: International Farm Congress, American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, National Farmers' Union, Farmers' National Congress, and National Milk Producers' Federation. I have read that memorial very carefully, and there is so much of wisdom and sound common sense in it that I shall use the time allotted to me in this debate in discussing briefly some of its observations.

Among the first things stated in this memorial is this:

The great world need of to-day is production. Production is dependent on labor. The solidarity of labor is such that the wages and hours of labor prevailing in other industries are reflected upon the farm. Prices of food products will be determined accordingly. Under present conditions agricultural production must materially decline and thus react against the entire industrial system. In view of this recognized economic law, we submit that it will be wise to consider the farm in any industrial plan adopted.

There is much wisdom in that paragraph. Of course, the truth which it emphasizes is not new, and most well-informed men will admit the truth of it, regardless of the business or occupation in which they may be engaged. But the trouble is, having admitted it, we shrug our shoulders as if we would like to forget the unpleasant truth which it emphasizes and go on encouraging and fostering the conditions which have brought it about.

In 1880, 70.5 per cent of our population lived in the rural districts and 29.5 per cent lived in the cities. In 1890 the percentage was 63.9 in rural districts and 36.1 urban. In 1900 it had changed to 59.5 rural and 40.5 per cent urban, and in 1910 the figures were 53.7 per cent in rural districts and 46.3 in the cities. And the 1920 census will very probably show at least 55 per cent of our population in the cities, as against 45 per cent in the rural districts. I will not comment on the figures. Of course, they are not new, and some will say they are a threadbare tale, and we may indeed continue to refuse to heed their lesson, but we will learn it and pay for it in the long run just the same. We are learning some of it now, though we are very much disposed to attribute most of it to other causes.

The laboring man in the factory and the wage earner in the bank or store and the employee of the railroads and other workers of the towns and cities are wondering why it is that, notwithstanding their earnings are much greater, measured in dollars and cents, than they used to be, they do not find themselves able to purchase what they think they ought to and proceed to jump on the profiteer to relieve their pent-up feelings. Of course, no one will deny that the inflation of the currency and the scarcity of commodities occasioned by large export trade have given unusual opportunities for making profits, and many business concerns have not been slow to seize upon the opportunity; but making all due allowance for this condition of trade and commerce, the one big fact remains that increased production is the only real permanent solution of the problem. Especially must production in Europe start up so that there can be an exchange of commodities to keep down the balance of trade. The abnormal credit balances which have been piling up in our favor for the past five years can not possibly continue indefinitely. Their correction is one of the great world problems which must be solved or grim disaster threatens.

Of course, I am very well aware that we have a very large number of people in this country, and unfortunately their number seems to be on the increase rather than diminishing, who think that all that has to be done to correct these economic conditions is for Congress or some State legislative body to pass a law and then everything will be well and everybody happy. But as a matter of fact, gentlemen can orate until their oratorical powers are exhausted and hang the "profiteer" to a dozen "apple trees," and resurrect him and hang him again, but it takes the great wheels of production to turn out the stuff that feeds folks' stomachs. And I know of no means that will make these great wheels of production go round and round and start the people back from the city to the farm any better than a continuation of high prices for farm products.

Therefore any policy of government which would try to bring about a reduction of the price of farm products, except by lessening, in whatever proper way can be devised, the cost and expense of distribution, would be suicidal in the long run and would weaken the Nation at the very vital spot where it is absolutely necessary that it be strong. And this brings me to a discussion of price fixing by law under ordinary conditions of trade and commerce.

PRICE FIXING BY LAW.

The farmers' memorial to which I have referred says on this subject of price fixing by law:

To attempt to thwart national economic laws by legislation is useless. The law of supply and demand should have full sway. Government price fixing interferes with the operation of the law of supply and demand and disturbs the equilibrium established by such laws.

Now, I do not wish to be understood as opposing Government price fixing on certain essential commodities during the war. The dislocation of industry and the abnormal world conditions made it necessary, perhaps, to the full extent it was exercised, but as soon as the treaty of peace is ratified, if it ever is, and the nations of Europe get back on their feet again, I think the nearer we get back to the old-fashioned doctrine of letting supply and demand regulate prices the quicker the equilibrium of the world's production will be restored. In this connection I would digress long enough to say that of course if any commodity is controlled by a monopoly, then the Government is fully justified in regulating the prices of the articles it sells, for only in that way can the rights of the public be protected; but the Democratic doctrine is that there should be no monopolies, except those of public utilities, and I think the old doctrine is still as sound as when Mr. Jefferson gave it utterance, and that the interests of the people will be best served in having monopolies, except in public utilities, rigidly suppressed.

The railroads, of course, are by their very nature monopolies and public utilities and must be in all of their essential activities under the control and regulation of public regulatory bodies. What I want to emphasize just now is that the difficulties attendant upon Government price fixing are very much greater than are commonly assumed by those who advocate the policy. The purpose generally is to keep prices down, and officials charged with administration are likely to think that is their duty; but it may be unwise to keep prices down. Prices have a direct influence upon the rate of consumption and the volume of production, and unless the Government undertakes to put the entire population on fixed rations and assumes control of production, reliance must be placed upon prices to bring supply and demand into proper relations with each other.

For instance, suppose the Government should decide to embark upon the policy of price fixing of cotton and should fix a price too high. The result would be that every available acre suitable to cotton cultivation would be planted in that crop, and we would soon find ourselves with more on hand than we could profitably consume. On the other hand, suppose the price should be fixed too low; then the farmer would very naturally turn from raising it and plant his acres in some crop which would promise a greater remuneration. I think it would be very difficult to devise any scheme that would fix prices more nearly equitable than the law of supply and demand fixes them when the channels of trade are kept open and free and are not allowed to pass under monopolistic control.

I think the farmer very properly views with alarm present-day price-fixing agitation, especially in view of the fact that the pendulum of population is swinging steadily to the cities, and the consumers are becoming more numerous all the time than the producers. Well, some gentleman will say, you have outlined a condition which we will admit does exist, but how is the city consumer going to get relief from the costly and wasteful system of distribution which now exists, and the cost of which he has to pay? Well, in the first place, I will say that if he gets every measure of relief to which he is entitled he is going to still find himself in an uncomfortable position as long as the drift of population is always to the cities. There has been a great deal of exaggeration about our so-called costly and wasteful system of distribution. I will admit that usually in every town or city there are places of business where the scale of profits is high, but generally they have a special clientele to which they cater and are not a very large factor in the sum and total of business transacted.

On the other hand, there are other shops and stores which generally have a more moderate scale of profits and to which the consumer can resort for his protection. The cooperative stores have been tried out to a large extent in England, I understand, and have produced very good results. I think no doubt in some cases they would be profitable here and would work a considerable economy to consumers. Undoubtedly some method of that kind would be much more constructive and productive of results than would be an effort to fix prices by law. I have no doubt but that these cooperative stores will be tried out here in the United States to a much greater extent in the future than in the past, and, of course, to the extent that they afford the consumer relief it will be very desirable. We might as well awake to the fact that the only practical method of bringing consumer and producer together so as to eliminate the middle man is through cooperative organizations of consumers dealing with cooperative organizations of producers, and even then making a very liberal prediction as to the result of that expedient, we will still find it a very long while before the middle man is eliminated, because in a very real sense he is the product of economic law.

PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Another very significant statement in this memorial from the farmers' organizations is this:

It is only in the safeguarding and protection of every right of private property that there can be perpetuated the full measure of individual initiative and emulation upon which a democracy is based and by which its future is assured.

Mr. Chairman, the very essence of our Constitution is found in that provision which guarantees to every citizen the protection of the law in his life, liberty, and property. That is within itself the very end and purpose of government, and any government which does not do it is a tyranny and intolerable to freemen, whether it operates under the dictatorship of the proletariat or of emperors, kings, and potentates. Of course, of these three natural rights the right of private property is the less sacred, and if any of them had to be surrendered it would naturally come first, but the fact should never be lost sight of that if the citizen does not receive the protection of the Government in the accumulation of the fruits of his labor then he will not accumulate and one of the greatest of all civilizing influences would be lost. The right of private property is one of the oldest and most highly prized rights of the Anglo-Saxon race and its observance has been one of the greatest factors in advancing the English-speaking races to the position of leadership in the world's affairs. Capital for the most part is but the accumulation of the wages of yesterday, and the wages of yesterday must be as safe from confiscation and unlawful seizure as the wages of to-day. Poverty can not be abolished by destroying wealth, and any government which bases its economic policy on that fallacious doctrine will presently find itself in the throes of anarchy and chaos, and the greatest sufferers from the catastrophe will be the indigent and poor, whom it pretends it is designed to help.

Therefore, the capitalistic system with all of its imperfections is infinitely better than the communistic system, which would destroy the whole fabric of our modern civilization, which has been built up by the evolution of centuries, and build a new one in its stead on the theory that the citizen should be a mere ward of the State and have his most intimate domestic affairs supervised and directed by political satraps selected under the directorship of the proletariat. When I speak of our modern capitalistic system I do not mean to indorse all of its imperfections. I am quite well aware that under it there has been too large a concentration of wealth in the hands of a comparatively small percentage of our population and that the correction of this condition is one of the real problems of the statesmanship of this age, but it would be very foolish to undertake that constructive achievement by destroying the whole structure of private property. So when I voice my approval of the capitalistic system I mean to say that I am in favor of preserving inviolable the rights of private property and the recognition by the Government of its obligations to protect the citizen in the accumulation of the fruits of his labor.

What we need is more capitalists, not less of them, and by that I mean more of those who by industry and thrift accumulate a part of their earnings and invest them in homes, farms, factories, railroads, and other industrial enterprises. It will never do to discourage thrift and economy and put a premium on the man who spends his substances in "riotous living." The wrecking of our whole industrial fabric could easily be brought about in that way. If you say that capital has received a larger share of the earnings of many industries in the past than that to which it was entitled I will agree with you, and I am one who earnestly believes in working out some constructive profit-sharing plan by which labor will receive a more generous division of the profits of industry, and arrange it in such a manner as to accomplish also the contribution of a fair share of these earnings to capital investment.

Some forward-looking business men have already constructed systems along these lines which I think possess great merit, and I believe the trend will be more and more in that direction until much of labor's grievance on that score will be remedied.

Of course, I am not looking for the millennium in industrial conditions in this generation, nor am I predicting it. I realize that Mr. Jefferson was right when he said in a letter to Mr. C. C. Blatchley in 1822:

> That every man shall be made virtuous by any process whatever is, indeed, no more to be expected than that every tree shall be made to bear fruit and every plant nourishment. The brier and the bramble can never become the vine and the olive, but their asperities may be softened by culture and their properties improved to usefulness in the order and economy of the world.

Let our task, therefore, be to swing open the door of opportunity so that every man may have his chance to enter, and if he will not, then his exclusion may not be justly charged to the wrongs and injustice of society. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are about to take up for consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I am very glad, indeed, to be able to say that the careful consideration and practice of intelligent economy which has characterized the preparation of all of the appropriation bills that have been presented to the House up to this time has prevailed in the consideration of this bill. The bill carries a little over $30,000,000, which is approximately 10 per cent below the appropriation for the current fiscal year and 20 per cent below the estimates.

The reduction of upward of a billion below the estimates carried in the Book of Estimates, which we hope to accomplish, necessitates an average reduction of about 28 per cent in all the bills reported. We can not make reductions in the Post Office bill or the pension bill, so that the average must be, in fact, more than 28 per cent to accomplish the object we have in mind. This bill does not provide for the average reduction, but it was scarcely to be expected that it should. A large part of the work carried on under the Department of Agriculture is of a character that is intended, at least, to increase production of foodstuffs in the country and, so far as appropriations accomplish that desirable result, it would be very unwise to reduce them.

The fact is, however, that during the period of war there has been a very great and more or less questionable increase in a wide variety of the appropriations under this bill, on the theory that special stimulation was not only advisable but absolutely essential during the war period, and I am of the opinion that the committee might properly have further reduced a number of the items carried in this bill not only without injury to the agricultural interests, production, and development of the country, but actually to the benefit of agriculture and its relief from certain classes of departmental activity that are of more than doubtful value.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement on economy. I would like the gentleman's idea in regard to the States Relation Service carried in this bill. We have not only all the stimulation we had during the war, but as a matter of fact there is $500,000 more carried in this bill under that item than was carried during the war. What does the gentleman think about reducing that item $500,000?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the same amount is carried in the bill as in the bill during the current year, but the gross amount available will be increased as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. SNELL. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no sort of doubt that the service would be benefited rather than injured, that agriculture would be benefited, by a reduction of that appropriation by half a million dollars.

I feel it my duty to take advantage of this opportunity to again emphasize not only the virtue but the absolute necessity of a sharp reduction in the estimates and in governmental expenditures. The shadow of the deplorable financial conditions of Europe is thrown across our country with ever-increasing and ominous portent of danger. Ours is the only great commercial Nation that remains on a specie basis, and the constantly decreasing values of European currencies, reflected in the rate of exchange, curtailing exports and rendering daily more doubtful the value of enormous volumes of European securities and credits held by our people, warn us to trim sails—to economize, to save—and it is essential that the Federal Government set a good example in this regard.

Notwithstanding the financial situation at home and abroad, and the fact that the estimates of expenditure already made far outrun the estimated revenues, the pressure on Congress for vast expenditures outside of and beyond the estimates still continues, and bills are introduced with rather alarming regularity proposing large appropriations or vast bond issues. These things make it evident that some folks are either utterly indifferent to the consequences of certain lines of action or they still remain ignorant of the fact that we must not appropriate any considerable sum outside of the estimates already made, and that we must save more than a billion dollars in the estimates, in order to avoid increasing our already enormous floating and unbonded indebtedness.

We have had solemn warning from the highest financial sources that any increase of indebtedness, necessitating the issue of additional certificates, will be attended by the most serious financial consequences; that an attempt to issue bonds to cover increased and additional expenditures would probably necessitate an interest rate of 6 per cent, would greatly reduce the market value of present Federal securities and endanger the specie basis of our currency. The issuance of bonds of small denominations, widely distributed through the country, would not only have the disastrous effect just referred to, but, in addition, through the use of such bonds in the making of purchases, would produce an inflation of the circulating medium, which would inevitably enhance the cost of commodities and tremendously increase the present high cost of living.

There are certain constructive measures which this Congress should and will pass, but equally important as these is the practice of the most rigid economy. Every proposal of expenditure in increasing amounts or for new purposes must be subjected to the acid test of necessity. The essential character of such expenditure must be proven beyond question, and if any considerable expenditures beyond the estimates or for new purposes shall be deemed essential, there is only one honest and defendable way to meet them, and that is to couple the proposal with a tax adequate to meet the increased drain upon the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentlemen who represent the rural districts bring to this Congress the report that the farmers are not being sufficiently remunerated to enable them to hold on the farms the necessary labor to produce the Nation's foodstuff. They bring to this Congress a correct report. There is to-day in progress the greatest residential and vocational immigration toward the city that has ever been in the history of the ages, and just as certain as the sun shines, behind the problem of the high cost of living is coming the graver and more sinister problem in the footsteps of the high cost of living—widespread hunger.

No man who has any common sense can look the situation in the face without coming to that conclusion. Gentlemen of the city bring to us a report that the people of the cities in many instances are not able to buy the food proper and necessary to nourish their children. I believe the statement. That is our situation. As a horse-sense proposition we know that agriculture must pay to those engaged in its pursuit as much net profit as any other business, or we can not hold in the country enough people to produce our meat and bread and clothing material.

Now, let us see. That leads to this situation: You can not reduce the price to the farmer. He does not have to farm. When any vocation bids for a country boy a greater price than the farm offers, he leaves. It is absurd for town orators and poets to go out singing to the country boy about the superior advantages and privileges of country life. You might as well go down the Potomac River and sing of the beauties of the hills from which its waters came and ask them to turn back. It moves under the operation of the irresistible law of gravitation, and population moves under a law of economics and toward the center of better business opportunities as irresistible as is the law of gravitation.

I have been reading a lot of stuff—I have not read it, but I see where it is being written—by doctors and professors and others who undertake to go into details and accumulate figures to show why it is that people are moving from the country to the city and to show that they are making a mistake. Individuals make mistakes, but mass movements among free people are under the operation of a law, and that is all there is to it. Let us see where we are. If you reduce the cost of the table and if you hold in the country the necessary people to produce your bread and mine and our clothing material, we must somewhere, in some way, reduce the cost and food waste intervening between the farm and the table. If we could get to the tables in the cities the food that rots after production, there would be a very material reduction in the cost of the table. We pay for that food that rots in the price which we give for the things that we eat. There is where a part of the high cost of living in the city comes from. You have got to pay for it when you go to the grocery stores, because farmers have to get the net profit. It is a pity that in a great measure like this we do not have time to show you gentlemen of the cities who represent hungry constituencies the enormous food waste, and to show you the unnecessary freight charges in the long, haphazard movements of these commodities from the farm to the city, and to show you the unnecessary charges and profits. Here is our difficulty: We come in here, as my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] says, and ask the Government to do bureaucratic things, dangerous things, price fixing, and so forth. By main strength and awkwardness we propose to regulate profits. I want to tell you that every one of those items of legislation ought to have on it the label which the druggist puts on medicines which are sometimes necessary but which are mighty dangerous to administer.

We must recognize that when the great economic change came with the use of steam and electricity, when the spinning wheel and the family loom and the country mill were done away with, when the great business organizations organized the producing and selling ends of their businesses, that agriculture was not able to adjust itself to the change, was never able to organize the selling end of its business. This department ought to recognize that profit is now the nerve center of agriculture. We do not want all of these fellows chasing around over the country telling farmers how to produce. We need some of them, but we could cut them down a great deal if we would put our finger on the nerve center of agriculture and help the farmer to make more money. He is not producing just to raise quantity, but he is producing to make money. How are we going to stimulate production? I speak with assurance, and I hope I may not be considered egotistical. There is but one way under heaven or among men to do it, and that is this: First, as rapidly and thoroughly as possible we must complete, as far as practicable, the standardization of agricultural products, so that their description may be translated into trade terms that can be universally understood. What would be the result of that? When we do that we give these agricultural products a commercial status at the point of first concentration. Then it would be essential to establish a produce-exchange system, real exchanges where these commodities could be listed for sale by grade. I wish I had the time to discuss the so-called exchanges that we have now.

When you provide under the contract of a cotton exchange, for instance, that this commodity moving in a large area along many avenues must, in order to be delivered on the contract, be diverted from the avenue of natural movement and carried to the place where the exchange is located for delivery, you create an economic differential against the movement through that exchange which makes it impossible for it to function as an exchange. The same thing is true of the basic grade feature; but I can not discuss that further. When we shall have established this exchange system, and thereby made it possible for these commodities, at the point of first concentration, to be listed on these exchanges, we will have put them where they will be in trading relationship with every market in the world and make it possible——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended for 10 minutes, not to be counted in the time fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that request could be acted upon in the committee, the time having been fixed in the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I will say that I hope to continue this discussion under the five-minute rule, and if gentlemen are interested I will ask to have them present at that time. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have been listening with interest to these various expressions of the attitude of the farmers of this country toward the great problems which confront us. There seem to be conflicting interests between the farmers and the workers in mill and mine and factory. More of these conflicts are imagined than real, in my estimation, and in the last analysis the producers, whether in country or in city, have interests which are identical.

One thing is certain, in any case, and that is that the real farmers and the real city workers agree on fundamental Americanism. Their record in the war just ended, the essential materials they produced, the boys they sent to the front prove their devotion to American institutions.

One great principle on which they agree is the right of the majority to rule through honest and orderly expression of their will on the day of election.

Another common principle upon which they will unite, in my opinion, is the American doctrine that public opinion shall finally determine action and that free speech, free press, and free assembly shall be maintained as sacred rights, in order that public opinion may be enlightened and just.

Mr. Chairman, there are grave problems confronting America and there are forces at work which make for disorder and violence. These problems will not be solved by rash action, based on fearful forebodings. Nor will these sinister forces within be overcome by launching menacing attacks upon the American Constitution and our time-tested system of government.

This is a time for sanity, not hysterics. We have just come through a war, true, but the fathers of the Nation had just come through a war when they wrote into the Bill of Rights the declaration that "Congress shall have no power to abridge freedom of speech and press and the right of the people peaceably to assemble."

Just now this Congress is considering measures which, in my judgment, are dangerous attacks upon the fundamentals of Americanism.

The Committee on the Judiciary has reported favorably and placed upon the calendar the measure known as the Graham sedition bill. Hearings are also being held to-day on the so-called Davey bill, which is said to meet the desires of the Attorney General of the United States.

After reading these bills carefully I am convinced that they are well termed "sedition" bills, for if either was enacted it would occasion more sedition in this country than all the "reds" that have polluted this land since the foundation of the Government.

Let me read a sentence or two from the so-called Davey bill and then pass to the Graham sedition bill, which is on the calendar of the House.

The Davey bill provides that—

Whoever * * * commits or attempts to commit any act of terrorism, hate, revenge, or injury against the person or property of any officer, agent, or employee of the United States shall be deemed guilty of sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding 20 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Could anything be more suicidal folly than to include in a statute dealing with the grave crime of sedition such language as that? It would make any kind of criticism in which a feeling of hate could be construed against any one of the several hundred thousand employees and officials of the United States a felony, with possible imprisonment of 20 years.

I can not believe that a single Member of this body would favor such legislation. I am sure that if it were passed it would be calculated to drive a free people to revolution sooner than all the anarchist and bolshevist propaganda that could be circulated.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Davey bill has not been reported, while the Graham sedition bill has a place on the calendar, and it should be given the most earnest attention by every Member of this body. Every good American desires adequate penalties for sedition and insurrection and rebellion against the Government, because these crimes are treason to the people in a government where the majority rules. I believe that every native, naturalized, and alien anarchist, whose argument against the Government is the dagger and dynamite, should be dealt with as traitors.

But, believing that, I also believe that if this so-called Graham sedition bill, as reported from the committee, should be enacted into law, the great war with Prussia, apparently victorious for America, would have had the result of Prussianizing America.

This bill turns its back on Americanism and extends the handclasp of fellowship to kaiserism. It renounces the inspiration and leadership of Washington and Lincoln and accepts instead the ideas and ideals of the house of Hohenzollern and the house of Romanoff.

I would advise all those who are so vigorous and vociferous in urging this transformation to remember what happened to these two despots in the last few years.

There have always been two opposing ideas as to the way in which society can be governed. America said it must be by public opinion. Prussia said it must be by the mailed fist.

In the providence of Almighty God those two ideas came face to face in a trial by combat on bloody battle field. From the testing of Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry and the Argonne Prussia came forth beaten and conquered. But if this measure is to be made the new creed of this country, that verdict of battle is reversed and America will be compelled to say, "Oh, Prussia, thou hast conquered!"

During a trip through the battle regions of Europe last year I visited Maragne Chateau, near the Franco-German frontier. This castle was headquarters for the kaiser and the German general staff during the longest battle in the world's history, the attack on Verdun, unconquerable city on the Meuse.

The chateau was held by the Prussians until after the armistice, and when they went back to Germany its contents remained about the same as they had been during the occupation. In that chateau I saw two things whose memory always comes to my mind when I hear the word "Prussianism."

One was a cat-o'-nine-tails, a brutal whip, with heavy stock and long leather lashes, with a sharp piece of steel on the end of each lash. It was used by Prussian officers upon the bare backs of soldiers who had offended them. It was devised to put fear into the hearts of the common soldiers and make them obedient to discipline.

The other object was a kamerad pistol, emblem of treachery. It was so constructed that it could be hidden in the hand and fired through the fingers. The Prussian soldiers were instructed to surrender with the cry of "Kamerad," and then to shoot the unsuspecting doughboy as he came forward to claim his prisoner. It is a fact that many of our American boys were murdered in cold blood by those who used this despicable weapon.

That is Prussianism—built on the twin pillars of brutality and treachery. The cat-o'-nine-tails showed a denial of humanity, putting fear of authority, instead of respect for authority, in the hearts of men. The kamerad pistol showed a denial of the common decency to be expected even in war and made it impossible for credit to be placed in any offer of surrender, lest a show of kindness be met with a murderous attack.

I contend that this Graham sedition bill is a Prussian cat-o'-nine-tails and a kamerad pistol in one.

It is a measure framed for the purpose of making the people fear the Government. It would advance the welfare of America by robbing the people of self-respect and independence. It holds before every man the threat of punishment if he advances radical ideas of betterment of political and social conditions. It would substitute enforced obedience to authority for truthfulness. "To speak the truth and fear not" are corelated sentiments. One can not exist without the other. Truthfulness comes from self-respect, and self-respect can only arise from the maintenance of personal rights. With the fundamental rights of free speech, free press, and free assembly destroyed, with the cat-o'-nine-tails upraised over every American, you are seeking to produce the same servility and slavery here in America which marked the realm of Prussia under the Kaiser.

To maintain their system it was necessary to perpetually threaten every German soldier, just as this bill threatens every American citizen. Its provisions are so vague and general that its enactment will mean that many innocent persons will be brought to the bar and condemned. If you are to rule through fear, you must use the cat-o'-nine-tails lavishly, even though innocent men are lashed, so that the guilty minded may not be emboldened to resist authority.

Section 4 of the Graham sedition bill makes a felony of any printing or circulating of a publication in which the use of force or violence is "suggested."

Could anything be more far-reaching than the use of such a word as "suggest" in a criminal law? Could any self-respecting American, interested in his country's welfare and progress, ever hope to accomplish anything without using expressions which some reactionary official could construe to "suggest" the use of force? It would be interesting to have Patrick Henry's views on that provision of the measure.

However innocent a man might be, however patriotic his motives, he could not escape such a sweeping provision as that without supinely submitting to have his lips padlocked and his pen put away.

In listening to arguments of those who favor this measure and declare we must beat down expression of honest opinions lest they incite the people to rebellion, I can almost hear that grim old Prussian, Bismarck, repeating his famous slogan:

Not by speeches and resolutions of majorities are the great questions of the time decided, but by blood and iron.

Here on this floor of the great American Congress men are saying exactly the same thing when they urge the passage of this measure. "Not by speeches and writings and resolutions of assemblies and enlightened public opinion are the great questions of social unrest and industrial injustice to be decided, but by the iron hand of government threatening fine and prison and scaffold to the discontented."

Yes; this measure is the cat-o'-nine-tails. It would hold the whip over every American citizen, so that those who are ruled may fear the punishing power of the rulers.

But it is more than that. It is a kamerad pistol of treachery, far worse than that of Prussian fashion, for it was only turned against foes. This bill levels its muzzle against friend and foe alike.

It takes all Americans off their guard. It has been America's proudest boast that this was a land of free speech, free press, and free assembly. The fathers wrote it into the Constitution as the very first provision of the Bill of Rights. They expressly prohibited Congress from passing laws suppressing those rights.

That assurance has been wrought into the very bone and sinew of our Americanism. Never in time of peace since 1798 has there been any attempt to touch these fundamental rights, and the way in which the people dealt with those who attempted it in 1798 seemed to give good grounds for safety in the future. That they should be taken away has been an incredible thought to American citizens.

And now comes this measure, with the unsuspecting people resting in the belief that their rights are secure. Could anything be more treacherous than such an ambush laid for a free people?

Then, too, it is a measure calculated to sow the seeds of treachery in all the land and to put a kamerad pistol in the hands of thousands. Secret agents, under its authority, will open letters—to find what? Opinions which may be twisted into a threat against the Government. They will stop travelers and search their baggage to find what? Opinions in books or papers which might perhaps be distorted into a dangerous expression. They will stand guard on printing houses—to find what? Opinions that some judge on a bench may feel will imperil the Republic. They will infest every meeting place where Americans meet—to find what? Opinions expressed which might "suggest" force and violence or a "change" in a law.

This measure would let loose countless informers to secretly carry tales of their neighbor's alleged seditious utterances. No man would be safe, for he would be at the mercy of any person who would seek his injury and who would rush to some petty Federal official with accounts of private conversations.

Does anyone say there is no chance of persecution to a good American citizen with the best interests of his country at heart? Read section 5 of this bill as reported from the committee. It provides that—no person shall display or exhibit at any meeting, gathering, or parade, or in any public place, any flag, banner, emblem, picture, motto, or device which tends to incite or indicates a purpose to overthrow by violence or physical injury to person or property the Government of the United States or all government * * *.

That is sweeping enough in all conscience, but you will note that the word "overthrow" is qualified by "force and violence" in this sentence. Then the section continues with a new provision, not qualified by those words at all:

or to overthrow, change, or defeat the Constitution of the United States and the laws and authority thereof.

Under the strict construction of that provision, the man who wears a button on his coat lapel, as an emblem of an organization seeking to secure a change in some law or the adoption of some constitutional amendment, would be guilty of violation of this section and be subject to a prison term of 20 years and a fine of $20,000.

Mr. Chairman, however much I may admire and esteem the collective wisdom of Congress, I am not yet willing to say that every one of its multitudinous acts is so infallibly wise that any suggestion of a change should be made a felony. I will not go so far as to say that every item in a tariff law, for instance, is divinely inspired, and that the man who would add or subtract 5 per cent on the rates on agates or zinc is guilty of sedition and should be put behind prison bars.

Section 5 is simply an illustration of the perils in such legislation as this. No one intends that any legislation should mean that the advocacy of a change in the laws or Constitution shall be a felony, but that is exactly what this provision means in the Graham bill. Take this provision out and there still remain weapons for the unscrupulous to use against the innocent. Even aside from any convictions under it, it creates a net to entangle every citizen. It can be used to suppress strikes, no matter what their justification; it can and will be used to destroy agitation and protest against unjust conditions.

It is Prussian, not American. The first amendment to the Constitution, written by the fathers, is American, and it expressly forbids the passage of such a law as this. It was a Prussian, Emperor William Frederick IV, who, in a speech from the throne, April 11, 1847, said:

All written constitutions are only scraps of paper.

Can there be any doubt as to whose leadership will be followed in the passage of this bill? It is not Washington, with his abiding faith in the protecting power of the Constitution, as a compact of the people. It is the Prussian Emperor, with his contempt for democracy and his scorn of that sacred agreement which begins, "We, the people * * * do ordain and establish this Constitution."

Its un-American character can be best understood if one can bring himself to imagine what the history of the Republic would have been had this measure been in force from the beginning. We may pass by what Patrick Henry, Samuel Adams, John Hancock, and all the rest of the patriots of seventy-six, who risked the penalty of treason for their defiance of George III, would say, and how they would have fared under such a law.

But what of the history of the United States since the adoption of the Constitution?

Washington, the Father of his Country, President for eight years, said:

Government through force and fear is like fire, a dangerous servant and a fearful master. Never for a moment should it be left in irresponsible hands.

In view of his love of liberty and independence, is it conceivable that he would have remained silent under such use of force and fear by government.

Thomas Jefferson, author of that Declaration of Independence which has become so seditious lately, served as President for eight years and changed all the currents of our history by his Louisiana Purchase. Before he was elected President he said:

The spirit of resistance to government is so valuable on certain occasions that I want it always to be kept alive. It will often be exercised when wrong, but better so than not exercised at all.

That statement of his opinion is so seditious, weighed in the balance of this sedition bill, that Thomas Jefferson must certainly have received the full sentence of 20 years in the penitentiary and $20,000 fine. Any person who printed it or sent it through the mails or quoted it with approval would have followed the Sage of Monticello to his prison, where in such forced retirement they might have watched the history of America unfold without their participation.

Andrew Jackson, in his Old Hickory style, advocated a change in the Constitution and Government by changing the method of election of President and Vice President. With this legislation in force he would have served a term in a Federal penitentiary instead of in the White House.

John Quincy Adams, doughty old champion of the right of petition in this House of Representatives and President of the United States, violated many sections of this bill, countless times. He acted on his own belief as follows:

Freedom of speech is the only safety valve which, under high pressure, can preserve your political boiler from a fearful and fatal explosion.

Under this bill he would have been indicted on a hundred counts and would have suffered the full penalty for his "sedition."

Daniel Webster, formerly regarded as an exponent of Americanism, would have been branded a felon under this measure. He said:

Given a free press, we may defy open or insidious enemies of liberty. It instructs the public mind and animates the spirit of patriotism. Its loud voice suppresses everything which would raise itself against the public liberty, and its blasting rebuke causes incipient despotism to perish in the bud. The contest of the ages has been to rescue liberty from the grasp of executive power. On the long list of champions of human freedom there is not one name dimmed by the reproach of advocating the extension of executive authority.

What would have happened to Webster, with his vigorous protests against slight extensions of executive authority, under a measure which puts arbitrary control of opinions in the hands of executive agents?

Under this measure, how would have fared the Liberator, that little abolitionist sheet, which William Lloyd Garrison issued from a garret in Boston? He declared in his first editorial that the paper would advocate the immediate emancipation of the slaves.

Of course, that declaration "suggested" violence, and it was so construed by many well-meaning conservatives in the North. But Garrison gave his answer to them in one of the bravest messages ever penned:

I will be harsh as truth and as uncompromising as justice. On this subject I do not wish to think or speak or write with moderation. No! No! Tell a man whose house is on fire to give a moderate alarm; tell him to moderately rescue his wife from the hands of the ravisher; tell the mother to gradually extricate her babe from the fire into which it has fallen, but urge me not to use moderation in a cause like the present. I am in earnest. I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retreat a single inch—and I will be heard.

When requests came to the mayor of Boston that this incendiary newspaper be extinguished, Garrison answered in words which made a shield of safety against oppression in his dynamic way:

I am an American citizen. I know my rights and dare maintain them.

Pass this bill as it comes here and that shield is gone forever. That proud boast, "I am an American citizen," will be laughed to scorn by petty officials. Despotic power will take the glory from American citizenship and the protection from the Bill of Rights.

Of course, these words of William Lloyd Garrison were inflammatory. Of course, they stirred the emotions and passions of men. But they were demanded by the conditions, and they aroused the conscience of the Nation against human slavery. Under this bill he would have been led to the scaffold instead of being recognized as a benefactor of oppressed humanity.

Then, what should we say of the seditious activities of the American Anti-Slavery Society, which held its convention in Philadelphia December 4, 1833? It issued a declaration of sentiments, declaring that the Nation was guilty of the traffic in human blood and that a campaign should be waged to secure freedom for the slaves.

That instrument closed with a pledge on the part of the signers to do everything possible to overthrow slavery:

Come what may to our persons, our interests, or our reputation—whether we live to witness the triumph of liberty, justice, and humanity or perish untimely in this great, benevolent, and holy cause.

They dared martyrdom indeed in their advocacy of a cause which was practically outlawed. But no one dared suggest that they should be martyred by the Federal Government because they spoke out of honest conviction their honest thoughts.

But if this Graham sedition bill had been the law, the American Anti-Slavery Society would never have formulated its declaration, which, Whittier said, "will live as long as our national history."

No. Immediately upon their coming together, if they had dared to meet in such a cause, agents of the Federal Government would have rounded up these seditious disturbers of the status quo. They would have been sent in a body to the penitentiary, to dream behind prison bars their iridescent dreams of "liberty, justice, and humanity."

Abraham Lincoln, greatest of all Americans, the very personification of Americanism, would, in all human probability, have been in prison from 1861 to 1865 instead of in the White House had this legislation been in force.

Not only did he oppose the Mexican War but raised a powerful voice against the possibilities involved in it. Not only did he declare concerning the slavery, which was protected by government and laws, that if he "ever got a chance to hit it he would hit it hard."

He laid down a doctrine of government which, under the terms of this bill, would be the very acme of treason, the essence of sedition. He said:

> This country and its institutions belong to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they grow weary of existing government they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it.

That declaration of the martyred President is a flagrant violation in this bill. It certainly could be construed to suggest, aid, and encourage the use of force and violence. The man who uttered the words would be guilty. The man who printed them would be guilty. The man who sent it through the mails would be guilty. The member of a society or organization that affirmed its truth would be guilty. The man who gave a dollar to such a society or organization would be guilty.

Is there any need to go further to prove the character of this bill? It is impossible to conceive the passage of this measure in any of the great heroic periods of our history.

Thank God, even in the darkest hours of American history no measure was passed by Congress to prohibit utterance and publication of the truth. Thank God, Americans have always acted on the belief that—

> To sit in silence when we should protest,
> Makes cowards out of men.
> The human race has climbed on protest.
> Had no voice been raised
> Against injustice, ignorance, and lust,
> The inquisition yet would serve the law
> And guillotines decide our least disputes.
> The few who dare must speak and speak again
> To right the wrongs of many.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the whole purpose of this democracy on which America is founded is that citizens may take counsel with each other to determine the common good. In an autocracy the ruler may act himself, but where the people have the power of the ballot it is necessary to depend not on one understanding but on the common intelligence of all.

You can not have a democracy nor free government without freedom of speech and press and assemblage. It is a contradiction in terms such as free slavery. The true object of the American Government is not to make men into puppets controlled by outside forces and opinions handed down to them, but to encourage them to develop their minds and bodies in security.

There is an absolute assurance in our form of government that the minority shall have the rights of free speech, free press, and free assembly, so that in orderly manner it may, if possible, convert itself into a majority. Deny these rights and you force the minority into secrecy, conspiracy, and the use of force and violence. The one bond of unity in a popular government is the right of a minority of the citizenship to freely express its opinions within the bounds of order and decency, so that it may become the majority whenever it convinces the reason of the majority. Therefore, the attempt to take those rights away is an assault upon the very foundations of American Government.

The fathers were right. The cause of true Americanism can never be hurt by temperate and honest discussion. Any cause that can not bear such discussion must be bad. I will not believe that this Government and its institutions require that honest citizens be silenced and prohibited from meeting together in order that they be preserved. I think that we rather need an army of citizen critics, to show up every wrong, indict every evil, and pillory every injustice.

If such a bill as this is necessary, then God help us, for the Republic is doomed. As old Wendell Phillips said:

> If there is anything in the universe that can not stand discussion, let it crack.

Make no mistake. If our industrial and social and political system, our laws and the acts of public officials, can not stand discussion, then the end is wreck and overthrow.

The fact is that the American system will stand discussion. The mind of man can not conceive a better system of government than one where the majority rules, in orderly method, through the ballot in the box on the day of election. Give the decent, patriotic Americans a chance to meet the speakers of falsehood in a fair field. Give them a fair chance and you will find that there are a hundred patriotic lovers of American institutions to every red advocate of revolution and overthrow.

But the proponents of the Graham bill say they do not desire to interfere with proper discussion, only they must decide what proper discussion is. Well, a reading of the bill will show that they have outlawed about every possible criticism, with their vague and general prohibitions.

They want to be prepared to penalize anything said or written. They are as generous as the Bolshevik peasant in Russia, who refused to allow a crowd to shout down an unpopular speaker. He argued with them: "Comrades, you know that we have free speech. We must listen to this man and let him say anything he pleases. But, comrades, when he has finished we will smash his head in."

Then the advocates of this Graham sedition bill say that no official will use the powers granted in it to persecute the people. That is one of the most dangerous fallacies in the world. Put power in the hands of officials and they will use it. The whole course of history, and our own history in particular, shows that officials constantly aim at extending their power, escaping control, and transforming permission into command.

Here is a great arbitrary power and unrivaled power of intimidation, and it will be used. As surely as the sun rises, the placing of arbitrary power in the hands of any man or group of men will make despots of those who have it.

For my part, I believe that it is time to begin limiting the power of certain officials instead of increasing it. It is time to affirm that the United States can not be made a hunting preserve for autocrats and bureaucrats. I am willing to give the people themselves the sovereign power on every question that affects them, but public officials are only their agents, hired to guard their rights and liberties.

Mr. Chairman, we have just come victoriously through a war which was fought to make democracy safe around the world. That democracy means government by the people, and it was never possible until the people became critics of existing social and political conditions. The people had to believe that governments were human devices subject to change and improvement before there could be democracy.

On that basis America has progressed until she stands preeminent in the world. Americans will not now permit irresponsible officials to put them in strait-jackets, to censor their books and papers and speech and assemblies. They know the danger of anarchy and bolshevism and all the red gospel of overthrow, and they desire to protect American institutions against such attacks, but they will not tolerate the destruction of those institutions on any pretext whatever.

Will this Congress, through the enactment of this Graham sedition bill, undo the work of the men who framed the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution? Will you cast dishonor upon those who have died amid the storms of battle that government of the people, for the people, and by the people should not perish from the earth? Will you attempt to prove now that the Nation dedicated to liberty can not endure and that those who gave the last full measure of devotion to that ideal died in vain?

No; a thousand times no. In the dawning of this new day of triumph over the mightiest autocracy the world has ever seen, when democracy has proved its efficiency on field of battle, it is a time for more faith, not less confidence, in the wisdom and the patriotism of the people. Let us widen the freedom of Americans instead of restricting it. Let us profit from the teaching of history that every nation that had any form of self-government and went down in wreck in all the past came to their destruction through encroachments upon freedom of speech and assembly. Let us meet the problems of our time with faith and hope, assured that the remedy for the evils in democracy is more democracy.

Mr. Chairman, I want the proudest boast of this world to be the simple statement "I am an American citizen."

I want American citizenship to mean prestige and power, not servility and shame.

I want it to mean intelligence and freedom, not weakened wills and spirits dwarfed and deformed.

I want it to mean the development of the intellect and the cultivation of the heart, not a brand upon the forehead of the thinker and a hot iron through the tongue of truth.

I want it to be a treasure better than silver and gold, not a debt of dishonor which can never be finally paid.

I want it to be a priceless privilege, not an enforced partnership with bloodhounds and heresy hunters.

I want it to represent the triumph of sunlight, not of darkness; the victory of frank and honest dealing, not of espionage, spying, and talebearing.

I want it to be symbolized by the eagle soaring in the sunlight, not by the snake crawling through the grass.

I want American citizenship to mean a shield of protection to every possessor, wherever he may be, at home or abroad, not a target for the assault of every enemy of honest speech and action.

I want it to be the safest, strongest, securest possession within the gift of any nation in the world, not a tawdry thing to be scorned by men of freer lands.

I want it to mean equal rights for all, not special privileges for the favorites of an intolerant bureaucracy.

I want it to be worn proudly by the strong and self-reliant, not by servile souls who lick the boots of official tyranny.

I want it to mean that any censorship applied is by the public, not censorship by a few officials filled with the infamous spirit of intolerance and repression.

I want American citizenship to be a heritage from the Continentals and the Federals, who died for liberty, not a burden entailed by the Tories and Copperheads, who fought for slavery.

I want it to be the worthy gift of the fathers, who freed body and brain and made free men of slaves; not the wretched grant of those who would put chains on mind and muscle, and make slaves of free men.

I want it to mean that the man who has it, though he dwells in the rudest hut, has the same rights which are claimed by the dweller in the loftiest mansion; that it means tolerance and cooperation, not tyranny and caste.

I want American citizenship to mean the sovereign right of the ballot in the hands of men who know the truth and act fearlessly on that knowledge, not in the hands of human rubber stamps, who place approval on ideas ready-made by a few officials.

I want it to mean the will of the enlightened majority, expressed on election day; not the will of the encroaching minority, ruling through control of channels of expression.

I want it to mean responsibility; yes; but also liberty; the obligation of duty; yes; but also the ownership of American rights.

I want it to mean the rich reward of self-respect and the path of social peace, not the coffin of honor and the cradle of rebellion.

I want it to mean loyal obedience to just laws, expressing the will of a free people, not enforced acceptance of laws which can only be read with shame and defended with dishonor.

I want it to mean plaudits for fearless patriots, not prisons; a sanctuary for dreamers of betterment, not a scaffold.

I want it to mean free speech, not padlocked lips; free press, not muzzled publications; free assembly, not repressed ideas in guarded meeting places.

I want it to be itself—American citizenship, the right to a free voice and an uncontrolled vote in the Great Republic, where the self-determined steps of the people follow close and sure the onward stride of Almighty God Himself.

I want it to be American citizenship, nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. Chairman, I add a compilation of Federal and State laws dealing with sedition, and so forth, as prepared for me by the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress. They are as follows:

UNITED STATES LAWS RELATING TO TREASON, SEDITION, ETC., IN FORCE APRIL 1, 1917.

(Constitution, Art. III, sec. 3.)

Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or on confession in open court. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.

(Criminal Code; 35 Stat., 1088ff.)

SECTION 1. Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States, levies war against them or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason.

SEC. 2. Whoever is convicted of treason shall suffer death, or, at the discretion of the court, shall be imprisoned not less than five years and fined not less than $10,000, to be levied on and collected out of any or all of his property, real and personal, of which he was the owner at the time of committing such treason, any sale or conveyance to the contrary notwithstanding; and every person so convicted of treason shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

SEC. 3. Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States and having knowledge of the commission of any treason against them, conceals, and does not as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the President or to some judge of the United States or to the governor or to some judge or justice of a particular State, is guilty of misprison of treason, and shall be imprisoned not more than seven years and fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 4. Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years or fined not more than $10,000, or both; and shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 6. If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 21. If two or more persons in any State, Territory, or District conspire to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat any person from accepting or holding any office, trust, or place of confidence under the United States, or from discharging any duties thereof; or to induce by like means any officer of the United States to leave any State, Territory, District, or place where his duties as an officer are required to be performed, or to injure him in his person or property on account of his lawful discharge of the duties of his office, or while engaged in the lawful discharge thereof, or to injure his property so as to molest, interrupt, hinder, or impede him in the discharge of his official duties, each of such persons shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 37. If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 140. Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States, or other person duly authorized, in serving, or attempting to serve or execute, any mesne process or warrant, or any rule, order, or any other legal or judicial writ or process of any court of the United States or United States commissioner, or shall assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person duly authorized, knowing him to be such officer or other person duly authorized, in serving or executing any such writ, rule, order, process, warrant, or other legal or judicial writ or process, shall be fined not more than $300 and imprisoned not more than one year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order on the section.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I can not refrain from saying a few words in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the subject matter before the House. Under the five-minute rule we have to confine ourselves to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not want to push a man on a point like that?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I insist that everybody who speaks shall speak to the measure before the House during the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLANTON. On both sides?

Mr. MADDEN. On both sides.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is fair. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] has introduced a bill at the instance of the Attorney General of the United States, drawn by the Attorney General of the United States, and that bill has been attacked and the proposal——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. How did the gentleman from Texas get the floor?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] be permitted to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to speak five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not going to object, but I give notice now that, so far as I am concerned, I shall object to further requests to speak out of order on the Agricultural bill.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Ohio permit me to have, in the way of an interrogatory, three-quarters of a minute out of his five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] is recognized for five minutes to proceed out of order.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I had not intended to say anything on this subject for a little while yet, but I can hardly allow the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go by unchallenged. He paints a picture of rosy Americanism, and waves the flag over all the anarchists in this country, all the enemies of this Government, and seeks to give them the limit of freedom to carry on their dastardly work. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. I can not yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I trust the gentleman will be fair enough to allow me to say that I do not seek to do anything of the kind and that nothing I have said bears that construction.

Mr. DAVEY. It is a fine thing to wave the American flag—and I love it as much as any man in this House. I love it too much to have that flag and the Constitution which it represents challenged by any bunch of traitors. [Applause.] It is significant that most of those who oppose antisedition legislation are opposed to every move that will curtail the activities of the enemies of this country. [Applause.] Unfortunately we face a real fact in the existence of a group of men whose sworn objective is the destruction of the American Government, a very obvious fact to those who will open their eyes. [Applause.] I believe in free speech and a free press. I believe in those things which have existed in this country from the foundation of the Government. But there exists in America to-day not the old conditions that we have known from the beginning of the Republic but a new condition growing out of war, a condition which represents an imported theory used largely by imported propagandists who aim a death blow at the very things which you and I love and which we have sworn to protect and defend.

Mr. KING. Will the distinguished gentleman from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. DAVEY. I regret that I have so little time.

Mr. KING. It will be pertinent to the gentleman's bill, I assure him.

Mr. DAVEY. Very well.

Mr. KING. Suppose a man should make a speech in which he used these words:

That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that when any form of government becomes destructive of these things it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it.

Would a man be punished for using those words in a speech?

Mr. DAVEY. My dear colleague, there exists in America to-day a group of men who would destroy that Declaration of Independence, who would destroy the Constitution that followed it, and I am one who seeks to oppose their damnable doctrines. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. There is nothing in the Davey bill to prohibit lawful procedure in the changing of a form of government, is there?

Mr. DAVEY. Certainly not. I am perfectly willing that certain clarifying amendments be inserted to make perfectly clear the purpose of the bill, which is only the prevention of the use or advocacy of force and violence for the overthrow of this Government. [Applause.] That is the only purpose which this bill seeks to accomplish, and any amendment which will limit it to that purpose is in harmony with my own desire.

Oh, this talk about free speech is so nice, so pretty. Some would perhaps allow men to continue their purpose to overthrow this Government, giving them the limit of free speech, and then, in the name of God, where will be your free speech? If in an unhappy day the ideas imported from Russia could gain a foothold in America, if it were possible for them to do in America what they have done in that sorry land of Russia, then where would be your free speech? One of the first acts of the revolutionary government in Russia was to prohibit and destroy all free speech. I seek to preserve and protect that blessed free speech that has made this Nation great. [Applause.] I am against those who would destroy the foundation and the superstructure of liberty and self-government, which is America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a reservation of a point of order pending. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desire to make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the chairman a question or two with regard to the necessity for so many messengers as are provided for in this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. What page and what line?

Mr. DOWELL. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not raising a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Iowa opposed to a Member of the House finding out a little information from the chairman of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I was going to ask the gentleman if he would not permit me to get some light.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the regular order has been demanded, which makes it the duty of the Chair to ascertain from the gentleman from Texas whether he makes the point of order, and if so to make a decision upon the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, then, if the gentleman forces me to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. That there is no law providing for the number of messengers sought to be put on the pay roll in this section of the bill. And upon that point of order, with the permission of the Chair, I would like to ask the chairman a question or two.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let us dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Pending the disposition of the point of order, the decision of which is wholly within the bosom and breast of the Chairman, and that being the case, I ask the Chairman, in his discretion, to permit me to ask a question or two, following which I may withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman state specifically what part of this section is not authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, there are 13 messengers at $600, 7 messenger boys at $600, 22 messenger boys at $180, and 1 messenger boy at $360. My point of order is lodged to the number of those messengers, upon the ground that that number is not authorized by law. I want to ask the chairman of the committee about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let us dispose of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The organic act provides authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint certain employees, including chief clerks and such other employees as Congress may from time to time authorize and provide, and to provide the salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that Congress never authorized that many messengers.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, yes; the language of the organic act is very broad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to certain items on page 2. I note that there is a provision here for 3 attorneys and 27 law clerks, 30 in all. May I inquire what is the specific duty of these law clerks with reference to the work in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. HAUGEN. Their services are required in the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act, and a number of other acts, including in part the oleomargarine act.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not the law so well defined that there is but little need of such work?

Mr. HAUGEN. The laws must be enforced.

Mr. DOWELL. Does it require lawyers to enforce the law?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; they are required to prepare the cases for trial.

Mr. DOWELL. The cases are tried by the district attorneys, are they not?

Mr. HAUGEN. The department attorneys prepare the cases before they are tried by the district attorneys.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that the lawyers provided in the Agricultural bill try the cases for the enforcement of the food and drugs act?

Mr. HAUGEN. They prepare the cases for trial.

Mr. DOWELL. How many?

Mr. HAUGEN. The number has been increased from time to time. The attorneys referred to were previously carried in the bill as law clerks, but last year we changed the designation to attorneys.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not the duty of the district attorney where the offense is committed to prosecute the cases?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is true.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not this a duplication of attorneys in the prosecution of cases?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is not a duplication. They prepare the cases, and in that way assist in the trial of the cases. I am sure that every attorney and law clerk employed in this department is well employed.

Mr. DOWELL. I did not understand the necessity for 30 lawyers in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is a large department, and it is charged with the enforcement of many laws.

Mr. DOWELL. Would it not be a better policy to place the lawyers in the Department of Justice and have them prosecute the cases instead of establishing a department of justice within the Agricultural Department?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have had a good deal of experience with these special acts, the pure-food act, the oleomargarine act, and others. The Agricultural Department has all the facilities to investigate infractions of the law. These law clerks do a large share of the business after the information comes from the inspection service. If there is to be an actual prosecution, then it is turned over to the Department of Justice, to the district attorneys. But somebody has to examine these matters and determine whether there will be a prosecution or not, and gather together the data on which the prosecution is based.

Mr. DOWELL. And these law clerks are the ones that secure the data.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The inspectors largely do that, but these men go over it and put the data in proper shape for presentation. Nobody else would enforce the law if it was not for this branch of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. DOWELL. I was merely seeking information, and am glad to have this explanation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion. I want to call attention to page 3, where there are 14 messengers provided in the bill, also 12 messengers, also 1 messenger, aggregating 27 messengers; and then, on page 4, 13 more messengers, 7 more messengers, and 22 more messengers, and 1 more messenger, making a total of 70 messengers for the Secretary's office alone. I want to submit to the chairman that that is entirely too many flunkeys for any one Secretary to have when you take into account the number of porters and other servants in his corridors.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the further fact that in the Weather Bureau there are provided 6 messengers, 22 messengers, 11 messengers, and 99 messenger boys.

Mr. BLANTON. I had not gotten down to that yet. I am gradually coming to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman was speaking of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. I had not gotten down that far in the bill. I want to find out from the chairman whether he is in line with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GOOD] on the policy of economy; and if he is, if he does not believe that we can dispense with four-fifths of these idle, useless messengers provided for in the various offices under the Secretary of Agriculture?

The new Secretary of Agriculture, who has just assumed his duties, comes from the gentleman's State of Iowa. I presume that the chairman and the new Secretary are in line with each other. The new Secretary publicly in the newspapers says that he is in favor of retrenchment, taking off extra employees and sending them home and cutting them off from the pay roll. Seventy messengers in the Secretary's office, and those that follow on the other pages of the bill, over 600 more, does not look like retrenchment to me.

Mr. HAUGEN. I trust the House will follow the suggestion of the Secretary and the action of this committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I am afraid that the new Secretary of Agriculture, too, has merely a case of this lip economy and that it does not go any further. It is talk economy preceding the approaching elections; but, after all, it depends upon the action of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with respect to these matters as to whether there is going to be a real, true, genuine, sure-enough economy. Are these messengers necessary?

Mr. HAUGEN. Speaking of economy, the estimates of the bureaus of the department amounted to $41,953,483, the Secretary estimated $37,528,102, and the committee reported this bill carrying $30,540,034.

Mr. BLANTON. Regardless of that, I am trying to get at this particular matter. The point I am raising now is that they are asking for a total of 742 messengers, and if 20 are enough, why on God's earth is it that we do not cut them down and save this enormous waste?

Mr. HAUGEN. This bill carries $30,540,034. This is a decrease of $3,359,727 below the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, a decrease of $7,132,823 below the regular and supplemental estimates submitted by the department, and a decrease of $11,558,204 below the estimates of the bureaus.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not want the chairman to take up my time with these figures. There are figures that may overwhelm anybody. It is the point of the 742 messengers. On whom do they wait; for whom do they carry messages? They have not that many chiefs down there who could write the messages that these messengers would carry—742 of them every day on the pay roll.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am trying to impress the gentleman with the importance of this department and with the necessity for these 30 messengers——

Mr. BLANTON. Not 30 messengers, but a total of 742 in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well, there are hundreds of them. The estimates called for many more, but we have reduced the number considerably; in many instances the gentleman will find we have greatly reduced the number, besides a number of the salaried positions can not be filled. We dealt more liberally with the estimates for the office of the Secretary than with any of the bureaus. We thought that we should take his estimate for the number required in his own office at least. If it is necessary to have that number of messengers in the office of the Secretary, he should be provided with the proper number, and his judgment should be relied upon in this small matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Farm Management: One chief of office, $5,000; 1 assistant to the chief, $2,520; 1 executive assistant, $2,250; 2 clerks, class 4, 2 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, class 2; 8 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,100 each; 4 clerks, at $1,080 each; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,020; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; 9 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk or map tracer, $840; 1 messenger or laborer, $720; 1 messenger boy, $660; 3 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 charwoman, $480; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; 1 library assistant, $1,440; 1 library assistant, $900; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 cartographer, $1,500; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,440; 1 draftsman, $1,200; 2 draftsmen, at $900 each; in all, $72,130.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is rather an awkward thing to do, but I am going to try, with the indulgence of the committee, to continue the discussion interrupted when we were in general debate. I shall speak especially to you gentlemen who are interested in reducing the cost of living. I stated when we were in general debate that in order to reduce the cost of living we must somewhere reduce the expense between the farm and the table, and I undertook to show why that is necessary. I suggested that in order to do that it is necessary to standardize agricultural commodities, so that they may have a commercial status at the point of first concentration. There is nothing more absurd than the custom in this country of sending these commodities, many of them perishable, under the high expense of refrigeration, around the country to find somebody who wants to buy them. You must pay that unnecessary expense, and it is reflected in the cost of the table. When these commodities shall have been standardized, it would be necessary to establish a produce exchange system where these commodities may be listed by their description for sale. Third, it would be necessary to have that intermediary supervision and inspection required to give confidence to entire strangers that they may trade with each other, with reference to a commodity which the purchaser has never seen. That may seem visionary, but there is not one visionary thing about it. The utility of every single one of these suggestions has been demonstrated. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the Federal farm-loan act we did exactly these three things. We standardized farm credits, established a farm-credit exchange, and we provide the intermediary supervision and inspection which makes it possible for a man in New England to buy a mortgage on a Texas farm which he had never seen. When we shall have put this marketing machinery in operation, then what will be the effect?

These standardized commodities will move from the point of first concentration to the point of use, and under prior sale will reduce the physical deterioration and prevent the rotting of great quantities of food after production, for which, in a large measure, we now have to pay. When we put that marketing machinery in operation a route around the present instrumentalities of distribution would be opened up. Then it would not be necessary to have this bureaucratic legislation, which is so fashionable these days, for the reason that we should substitute the law that God has made, economic law for the main-strength-and-awkwardness legislative policy by which we are trying without success to deal with these matters. Then the distributors would be compelled to limit the total of their distribution charges to the economic value of the service rendered because we would take from them the toll-levying power by creating an available practical route around them. There is no choice of routes now. Every producing community that can produce a shipping unit would be put in trade relationship with every market in the United States, and it would be possible then for every individual buyer and every group of buyers who want to buy a shipping unit to buy through this instrumentality and be certain of integrity of transaction. The necessity for this legislation has grown out of the fact that when the railroads came and steam and electricity were applied to the activities of mankind, an industrial revolution occurred. The manufacturing industries of the country, formerly scattered broadcast, concentrated in the great cities. These manufacturing organizations, these great distributing organizations, became necessary in order to bridge the distance between production and consumption. There is no bridge to-day over which the little man and the little community can independently operate with regard to the general market. These antitrust laws of ours, these laws that destroy these big organizations, are absurd if we do not put something in their place. It is just as if we were to go down here, supposing there was a private bridge over the Potomac, and we should dynamite the bridge because it is big, without putting anything there over which the people could go. There must be a big bridge, because the river is wide.

If we are to preserve democracy in government, we must preserve democracy in business opportunity, and just as soon as we complete the present evolution in business control and business administration so that the little fellow is entirely shut out of the general market, then the pressure on this Congress will be irresistible for the Government to take control of big business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I will try to continue under the next paragraph if I can get recognition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, I will make the point of order the next time. If the gentleman wants an additional five minutes now I shall not object, but I am in favor of proceeding with the bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request to extend the time of the gentleman from Texas for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank the gentleman. I would much rather proceed now. Now, this would be the practical operation, gentlemen; this would be the saving. First, you would save in physical waste. Then you would save in the enormous and unnecessary intervening charges. There is in the price you gentlemen who live in the cities pay a toll levied by reason of the fact that these great distributing organizations necessary under modern conditions have the power to levy toll and there is no route around them.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. HERSMAN. Does the gentleman know statistics show that of every dollar that the consumer pays for his product that the producer only gets 33½ per cent of that dollar, that two-thirds of that dollar is used in tolls of various kinds or commissions of various kinds before it gets to the consumer?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is very large. Now then, with this organization in operation, gentlemen, you not only would be able to limit the intervening charges by the operation of economic law, but you would be able to throw back into the channel of production the unnecessary accumulation along the avenues of distribution. We need distributers but we have too many. We need cities but they are growing too fast. This country is growing top-heavy by reason of the accumulation of the fellows who do not produce, but who draw their living between the man who does produce and the man who eats. We need some of them but not so many. If we keep piling up population at this point, there is going to be a tumble one of these days and everybody is going to get hurt.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the gentleman remembers far enough back to remember when at certain seasons of the year it was impossible for the people of the country to get certain food supplies. Now they can get them any season of the year because the facilities have been furnished by men who had the courage and the vision to see the need——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is absolutely true, and it is in that direction which lies the danger of much of this bureaucratical legislation we have. These men have done a great service and are doing it and are entitled to fair reward therefor.

But I want to bring to the attention of the gentleman this fact: With this system in operation and every producing community in trade relationship with every center of consumption this reserve could be held more largely at the point of first concentration; and the fact that the public and the small operator would have free trading access to each other, the occasion to complain and whatever cause to complain against these people would be largely eliminated. This demand to increase governmental control and for the Government to take over these plants would lose much of its force, while at the same time the removal of the toll-taking power, if it does exist, would remove the suspicion that it is exercised. I believe big distributers make a mistake if they oppose what is now suggested.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I have been very greatly interested in the gentleman's speech. Would the gentleman in his time tell how his theory or his idea or plan could be applied to the marketing and distribution of live-stock products?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All right, sir. In regard to live stock we have generally had the idea in this country that we could not standardize live stock. The gentleman is a practical cowman.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will venture the assertion that the gentleman can go to a herd of a thousand white-faced cattle and cut them into five bunches of greater uniformity than any expert cotton man can grade a thousand bales of cotton to save his life.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman just permit a question? Does the gentleman know how many different grades of cattle go into Chicago in a day ordinarily?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman deny my statement that he can go into a herd of a thousand white-faced cows and cut them into small uniform bunches better than any expert cotton man can grade a thousand bales of cotton?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I do not claim I can do it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All right. I have it upon the authority of practical cowmen that it can be done. Now, then, if you can not do it you would have to get somebody else to cut your cows.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I do not believe I could.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then the gentleman is outside, and I can not help him.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let the other fellow in.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When you have done that, and I am supposing you may—why, I was talking with a man in Georgia who buys hogs for a packing house, and he told me that the State of Georgia had grades for the farmers' hogs, and he pays for the graded hogs a half cent a pound more than he pays to the farmer for the same hogs where they had to get them together. I do not know whether that is true or not. If this can be done, then we take away the demand that is being made for the Government to take over your great packing plants. These animals would move from the ranch under prior sale, and every little packer would have a chance to buy on an equal basis of advantage. Nobody ought to object to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; let me make this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCKENZIE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3472. An act for the relief of the owner of a drill boat known as drill boat No. 3 and a dredge known as dredge No. 9; and

S. 3381. An act for the relief of Gertrude Lustig.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. FRANCE and Mr. WALSH of Montana members of the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Commerce Department.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Weather Bureau: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 assistant chief of bureau, $3,250; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 chief of division of stations and accounts, $2,750; 1 chief of printing division, $2,500; 3 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 8 clerks, class 4; 11 clerks, class 3; 23 clerks, class 2; 33 clerks, class 1; 26 clerks, at $1,000 each; 10 clerks, at $900 each; 1 foreman of printing, $1,600; 1 lithographer, $1,500; 3 lithographers, at $1,200 each; 1 pressman, $1,200; 1 printer or compositor, $1,440; 5 printers or compositors, at $1,350 each; 14 printers or compositors, at $1,300 each; one printer or compositor, $1,200; 6 printers or compositors, at $1,080 each; 5 printers or compositors, at $1,000 each; 4 folders and feeders, at $720 each; 1 supervising instrument maker, $1,620; 1 instrument maker, $1,440; 3 instrument makers, at $1,300 each; one instrument maker, $1,260; 1 skilled mechanic, $1,300; 3 skilled mechanics, at $1,200 each; 5 skilled mechanics, at $1,000 each; 1 skilled mechanic, $840; 6 skilled artisans, at $840 each; 1 engineer, $1,300; 1 fireman and steam fitter, $840; 2 firemen, at $840 each; 1 captain of the watch, $1,000; 1 electrician, $1,200; 1 repairman, $1,200; 1 repairman, $960; 1 gardener, $1,000; 4 repairmen, at $840 each; 6 repairmen, at $720 each; 4 watchmen, at $720 each; 28 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 22 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 11 messenger boys, at $600 each; 99 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 charwoman, $360; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $346,910.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the chairman a while ago to the fact that on page 3 there are 27 messengers provided for the Secretary's office; that on page 4 there are 43 additional messengers provided, making a total of 70 messengers for the Secretary's office alone; and I now call attention to the fact that on page 4 there are 5 additional messengers given another small office, and on page 6 there are 166 more messengers provided for another office; on page 7 there are messengers to an unlimited number provided; and on page 10 there are 42 more messengers provided; on page 11 there are 38 more messengers provided; on page 19 there are 69 more messengers provided; on page 20 there are 98 more messengers provided; on page 34 there are 49 more messengers provided, and so on down through the bill. I have not time to enumerate all of them now, though I will do so a little later; but I want to say if this is economy, and if this one Department of Agriculture is going to hoodwink and mesmerize this Congress into allowing it all of these hundreds of messengers who absolutely clog up every corridor of that department so that it is hardly possible for a Member of Congress to pass, and who are not needed, then, my God Almighty, I do not know what is to become of the people, the heavily tax-burdened people of the country, in regard to the payment of their taxes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has reference now to the Weather Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, not to the Weather Bureau. Here is one office that has 167, and it is not the Weather Bureau; it is the Bureau of Plant Industry, here in Washington.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will discuss one item at a time I will try to explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the explanation of the gentleman. It merely gives the demands of this department. What I want is to know the necessity for it all.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well.

Mr. BLANTON. Because his explanations merely go around in a circle and you can not understand them.

Now, on page 19 and on page 20 there are 69 and 98 messengers, making 167 for the Bureau of Plant Industry alone. That is not the Weather Bureau. It is 167 idle, useless, unnecessary messengers for the Bureau of Plant Industry alone. Are we not going to change this? Is the great Republican Party, that tells the people through lip service as the elections approach that it is for economy, going to sit here and let all this waste stay in the bill? I could offer an amendment to strike some of them out, but if the chairman is not with me I realize that I could not get them out, because he has got his party whip cracking and all his colleagues are going to follow him and do exactly what he tells them to do. But, after all, is he "toting fair" with the people of this country when he talks economy on one side of his mouth and then twists his chew of tobacco over on the other side, and keeps all these idle, unnecessary salary-drawing messengers in the bill?

I say it is a digrace to the Agricultural Committee to bring in a bill of this kind, with hundreds and hundreds of messengers in it that have no business in this bill, and the chairman knows it. You have not got that many messengers in the State of Iowa and in the five States surrounding Iowa. You can not go home to Iowa and square yourself with your people on this question. You can not do it. You had better get busy and cut some of them out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made his speech. He stated that he did not care for any explanation on the subject, but, nevertheless, we are now discussing this item and I desire to offer an explanation of the number of these messengers and thus dispose of all at one time. I will read the statement of Mr. Marvin, Chief of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care about his statement. It is time for us to sit down on these departments and disregard their statements and teach them that we want economy and are going to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman wants the facts on the subject, I will give them to him; besides, the House may want to know the reason for the number of messengers reported in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] must not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor unless the gentleman consents.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the Weather Bureau we have 200 stations, scattered over the country. The department is asking for 166 messengers for the Weather Bureau. It is necessary to have one or two messengers at most of these stations. For instance, in the city of Pittsburgh and in other large cities more than one messenger is required to assist in the preparation of the forecast cards, distribute the bulletins, and similar work.

I will read from the hearings:

Mr. JONES. There are 166 messengers.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but I am referring only to those under item 45, at $720.

Mr. MARVIN. There seems to be a large number of the messengers, but most of them are in the field. We have 200 stations, but not every station has a messenger. Very many of them have one messenger at least, and sometimes we are obliged to put in two messengers under the existing conditions. We have difficulty in securing them at the low salaries allowed.

Mr. TINCHER. What do they do?

Mr. MARVIN. They work in the offices in connection with the preparation of the forecast cards and operate addressographs and distribute maps and bulletins. They also do other work about the station in connection with the maintenance of the instrumental equipment and things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. How many are employed at each station in each town?

Mr. MARVIN. We have a small number of stations with only one man on duty.

The CHAIRMAN. About how many?

Mr. MARVIN. I should say there are 15 or 20 that have only one man. The rest of the stations, with a few exceptions, have from 2 to 7 men, and a few of the large ones from 10 to 15.

Do you want to cut out the Weather Service?

Mr. BEGG. I would like seriously to take the chairman's statement absolutely for my guidance. We have some of these stations in my State, and I am very much in sympathy with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. What do the messengers do?

Mr. HAUGEN. They assist in the preparation of the forecast and distribute the weather bulletins.

Mr. BEGG. To whom?

Mr. HAUGEN. To the telegraph office, to the printing office, and to places where the weather bulletins are displayed. In addition, they do the same work that messengers in any other office are required to perform. If the gentleman believes that we should spend the money to gather information on weather conditions and prepare forecasts, and then not disseminate it through the messengers and other sources, I would suggest that whole service should be discontinued.

Mr. BEGG. I do not believe that these messengers do what you say in all places.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has asked a question. Here is Mr. Marvin, who says:

They work in the offices in connection with the preparation of the forecast cards and operate addressographs and distribute maps and bulletins. They also do other work about the station in connection with the maintenance of the instrumental equipment and things of that kind.

Now, then, are you going to discontinue that service?

Mr. BEGG. Not if it is necessary.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then why object to these messengers?

Mr. BEGG. I was not questioning the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. There are a number of these positions of clerks and messengers that are not filled.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington for the printing of weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications, including the pay of additional employees, when necessary, $12,800: Provided, That no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau: And provided further, That the proviso contained in section 11 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not prohibit the printing in the printing office of the Weather Bureau in the city of Washington of the maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications herein authorized.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso, beginning on line 2 and ending on line 9. It repeals existing law and is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order on the proviso, beginning on line 2 and ending on line 9, on page 9, on the ground that it changes existing law. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is subject to a point of order, but I desire to say it is quite necessary that this should be done, and it has been carried in the bill heretofore.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the proviso ahead of this gives the department permission to have all the printing that is necessary to be done by the Weather Bureau, and clearly this further proviso is not necessary, because it would be possible for them to get an order from the Joint Committee on Printing if they could show it was necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the establishment and maintenance of additional aerological stations, for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena, in the aid of aeronautics, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $81,020.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, last year, for the current year, we appropriated $85,040 for the establishment and maintenance of additional weather stations. Is it necessary that we make this appropriation every year? Can they not get along with the stations which they now have for a year? I assume that this is for the purpose of establishing new aerological stations. That is what it says, although that is no guaranty that that is what it is used for.

Mr. HAUGEN. The estimates were additional, but we cut them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know how much the estimate was; I do not recall; but we carry for the current year $85,040, and in this bill we carry $81,020. I do not know what that $20 is for.

Mr. HAUGEN. The estimate is $281,020. We allowed $81,020.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, then, the department will expect to go to the Senate and add the $200,000. What do they want the money for, may I ask?

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, it is for cooperation with the Signal Corps.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the Weather Bureau people claim that it is for maintaining stations where they can prognosticate the conditions of weather for the boys who are going up in airships. There is some question with the people I have talked with who have made flights as to whether it would be of any real service.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have many aerological stations in the United States and many other stations that are not important, except for weather stations. The main aerological service is either now in the Air Service of the Army or the Post Office Department, and certainly they do not need any additional weather stations in connection with the Postal Service. They ought not to need any additional stations in connection with aeronautics in Texas in connection with the Army or elsewhere. It may be that the aeronautic experts will have to study the subject of weather service, but my impression is that the weather service has very much deteriorated in the last few years. I got into the habit last summer of invariably going on the theory that the weather predictions made by the department were wrong each day, and I do not think I missed it one day in five. The other day we were notified by the Weather Bureau bulletin that it was going to rain the next night and the next day, and instead of rain we have had the worst sleet storm that we have yet experienced this winter. They hardly ever guess right; they seldom do.

Mr. MADDEN. Perhaps it started to rain and turned into sleet on the way down.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not see why we should establish new stations this year in order to economize.

Mr. TINCHER. Perhaps if they had these new stations up they could have told whether it would rain or snow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They do the best they can under the circumstances, I suppose.

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything on this matter, but the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has brought the matter to my attention. I believe in the Weather Bureau. I think they do the best they can. They ordinarily render excellent service. We had a terrific storm at Corpus Christi, Tex., last September, and unfortunately the prognostication in that case was so erroneous that it lulled into security the people of the coast country, and the people believed that the storm had spent its force and would not reach the subsequently devastated area. The result was that when the storm did come, with a tremendous velocity and a power unequaled and unheard of in that section, thousands of human lives were lost and millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed. I do not say that all of that damage could have been avoided, but somewhere in this bureau, somewhere in one of the agencies, there was a failure to make the proper observations, the result of which was that the service on which the people of this section had learned to lean and depend proved to a great extent the cause of their undoing.

I mention that in furtherance of what has been said here, in the hope that hereafter these scientific investigations that have been pursued by the bureau in the solution of these problems may be so conducted that such a situation may not again cause loss to the people of a part of this country.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. Speaking of the proposed appropriation, it seems to me that the very fact that has been brought out here by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] only emphasizes the need of this appropriation. The Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture was called upon for an explanation why this condition obtained; why it was that they were not able to give sufficient warning of the approach of this storm and where it was going to strike. They stated that one of the difficulties that they had was in getting enough reports to determine the course of the storm in the Gulf; that many of the ships on which they relied ordinarily to send their warnings, wireless warnings, warnings to their stations, kept out of the track of that storm because the reports of the Weather Bureau in advance had indicated at least a part of the course of that storm, and the vessels kept in harbor and there were no vessels out there, and there was no station sufficiently near to give them essential data in order to advise the people and give them the necessary warning as to where this storm was going to strike.

The appropriation, in my opinion, is one of the most essential in the bill. It is one calculated to do inestimable benefit in enabling the experts of the Weather Bureau in the Department of Agriculture to be more accurate.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand, then, that if we make the appropriation sufficiently large and give them the power they will not be dependent on the vessels to give them warning of storms, but will have their own instrumentalities with which to report?

Mr. BRIGGS. They will not be dependent to the same extent. They will be very much less dependent, to the best of my information, than they are under the existing conditions. Therefore I hope the point of order will not be pressed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I do not think there is any authority of law to provide for any new stations. I can not recall the rulings at this time on that subject. It certainly would not be in order to make a provision for a special station. It used to be a controverted question. My recollection, although it is not very fresh on the subject, is that this item providing for new stations used to be ruled out of order except where it was specifically authorized.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will this dispense with any officials mentioned by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not say. I should say that nothing would dispense with any officer who holds a position under the Government if there was any appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the department would not have authority to purchase land or to build buildings. But it has authority to establish stations and provide the stations with equipment under this item. It would also have authority to hire buildings and provide equipment to maintain stations; but the purchase of land and erection of buildings requires specific authority. This language has been carried in the bill for a number of years and it is essential that it should remain in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has been carried in the bill, and under it they have purchased land and put up buildings. That is what this would authorize, and that is the reason I make the point of order.

If they are given an appropriation to establish new stations, that carries the authority to build and to buy.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, this language does not authorize the purchase of land nor the construction of buildings. It does authorize the establishment of stations and therefore the right to use buildings necessary in carrying on the work. I know of no case of the purchase of land by the department, in recent years, without express authority of the Congress. Authority to purchase land and erect buildings has often been included in the annual bill, but that was after the committee had considered the advisability of the purchase and approved the request. Some requests have been granted and some refused. I think there is now no intention to use any of this money to buy land, and, as I say, I think this does not give such authority. For that reason I do not think it is out of order.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Has the Weather Bureau heretofore, without specific legislation, established additional stations under the authority of this provision in the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It has established additional stations under this authority, but in no case that I know of has real estate been purchased.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think that the bureau could go out and establish a new station, provided it was not necessary to buy the land or erect the building?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Would the bureau have authority to rent a building?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. But not to buy land or to erect a building?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the paragraph, beginning on line 18 and ending in line 22, as follows:

For the establishment and maintenance of additional aerological stations, for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena, in the aid of aeronautics, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $81,020.

In the view of the Chair the language used is broad enough to permit the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building which would be necessary for an aerological station. Under the precedents upon this bill and upon other appropriation bills the establishment of a new station upon an item in an appropriation bill is held not to be in order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, after line 17, insert: "For the maintenance of aerological stations, for observing, measuring, and investigating atmospheric phenomena, in the aid of aeronautics, including salaries, travel, and other expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $81,020."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. There is no authority of law under the act creating the Weather Bureau for the maintenance of weather stations in the aid of aeronautics.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well, I will strike that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this amendment and come back to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that we may pass by this and return to this place in the bill later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 9, line 17, to offer language in lieu of that stricken out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman include in his request returning later also to the next two lines, 23 and 24, which carry the totals?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; I include that in my request. I ask unanimous consent also that the Clerk may correct the totals throughout the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman includes in his request that the Clerk may correct the totals of the bill. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for general expenses, $1,532,100.
Total for Weather Bureau, $1,879,010.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining some information from the chairman of the committee. Will the chairman, in order to show how the bill is made up, indicate definitely, if he can do so, the manner in which the total in this paragraph was arrived at as compared with the estimates of the department?

So far as I am concerned, I desire to see the provision for the maintenance of the Weather Bureau service continued. If the argument we have heard about erroneous weather predictions were carried to its logical conclusion, we would eliminate everything for the support of the Weather Bureau. I do not believe anyone would indorse that proposition. But in order that I may have the information I have requested, I hope the chairman will give us some idea as to why and how the estimates of the department were cut.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the gentleman reference to the total or to each item?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have reference particularly to the total indicated and am assuming that the reply to my inquiry will make clear what items have been reduced from the estimates.

Mr. HAUGEN. The total appropriation for the current year is $1,888,210. The estimates were $2,228,150. The amount reported by the committee is $1,879,010. The estimates of the department were cut $349,140.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I quite understand that those are the final figures; but what items were cut?

Mr. HAUGEN. We give the Weather Bureau practically what was carried for the current year. For the current year the bureau has $1,888,210 and the committee reported for next year $1,879,010.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that, but I desired the details. Mr. Chairman, I asked the question for this reason: A few minutes ago I heard the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] boast that this bill effects a cut of 10 per cent as compared with the present fiscal year and a cut of something like 30 per cent as compared with the estimates of the department. The committee itself in its report, in a rather restrained way, expresses the hope that if the bill is passed carrying the reductions it will not result in "seriously crippling the work of the department." I do not believe that is the correct basis upon which to legislate for the support of the Agricultural Department. While I am very much in accord with the policy of the House to economize as far as possible, my own view is this, that when we come to provide for the Agricultural Department we should give the benefit to the department of any doubts that may prevail, because to make reductions which might cripple the department would be one of the most undesirable things that could happen, so far as the general interests of the country are concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman's argument suggests the question whether in this bill we are appropriating for the Department of Agriculture or for the promotion of the agriculture of the country?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You can not disconnect the two matters. The Agricultural Department is the great governmental agency that looks after our agricultural interests, and we all recognize that the fundamentally important thing at this time is to stimulate and encourage production as far as it is possible to do so by legislation.

We fully realize that agriculture is under a great handicap at this time. All the reports that come from numberless sources indicate that this is the fact. For instance, a questionnaire was recently sent out by the Post Office Department to 40,000 persons with reference to that subject. The replies have been summarized, and they afford indisputable evidence of the disadvantage at which the agriculturists of the country are now placed. If it is possible by legislation now being enacted, or that may be enacted, to lighten the burdens resting on our farmers, we ought not to hesitate to do it, and to take the contrary course would plainly be false economy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would not the logic of the gentleman's argument tend to the conclusion that the committee should not have reduced at all the estimates of the department?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. By no means, and that is the reason why I inquired of the distinguished chairman how the bill was made up and how the reductions were effected.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In a minute. Now, we have been declaring that we want increased production, and yet since Congress assembled in extra session there has not been one line put upon the statute books nor one measure adopted by the House in that direction. Any promise to legislate in that direction is a promise that has been kept to the ear but broken to the hope. England, in dealing with the great postwar problems, has acted in a comprehensive way by constituting a ministry of reconstruction——

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose that is the reason that British exchange is falling every day.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; that is not the reason. There are other reasons for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia this question: He referred in very glittering generalties to the questionnaire that was sent out by the Post Office Department, I assume by Mr. Blakslee. I would like to have the gentleman answer whether if all that Mr. Blakslee claims for the development of agriculture through any effort of his would help to raise an additional pound of potatoes or an additional bushel of wheat or to reduce the cost of food to the consumer?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not know that the official referred to makes any recommendation. What I have in mind is the summary of the replies to the questionnaire, from which I quote:

The most serious cause for complaint is the shortage of farm labor, it being stated that in view of the great demand for labor in the cities, with shorter hours and higher wages, not only has the hired help been driven from the farms, but also the farmers' sons and daughters, and that as a consequence they will have to curtail production greatly next season, and some will cease farming entirely.

Mr. MADDEN. There is some truth in the statement with respect to the shortage of labor. What remedy does he suggest? He suggests the employment of Government trucks at enormous public expense to move the commodities of the farm to the consumer, and in every case where he has made a pretense of doing that he has never moved a single pound of farm products to the ultimate consumer but has always sent them to the middleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think when we had a bill under discussion the other day, as to which the question was raised whether or not the Post Office Department should be allowed to maintain the motor-truck service, it was shown that the products of the farm not only reached the middleman but reached the consumer directly.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, as a member of the Post Office Committee, having made a thorough investigation of the activities conducted under the direction of Mr. Blakslee, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, that I can give the gentleman absolute assurance that not one single pound of farm products has ever reached the ultimate consumer directly, except it may be some in the Post Office Service, in the general post office here. They could probably get something direct from the trucks.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Whatever may be the truth as to that, and I do not contest the gentleman's statement based upon his personal knowledge, I repeat that during the extra session and this session we have done nothing for the farming interests. We have not handled that subject in a systematic and comprehensive way, as they have done in other countries, nor have we taken up in a systematic and comprehensive way any of the great problems created by the war.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that anything we do here in the matter of legislation will reduce the cost of living and raise an additional pound of farm products?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I contend this, that if you had followed the advice of a very distinguished statesman at the other end of the Capitol, and had done something analogous to the creation of the ministry of reconstruction in England, you would have had a full inquiry into the situation that we are talking about now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield to me for two minutes more only.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very glad to yield, as the gentleman seldom addresses the committee, and we are always pleased to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Virginia proceeding for two minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In mentioning what was done in the Senate I was referring to Senate concurrent resolution No. 3, introduced by Senator CUMMINS on the 29th of June, which contemplated that Congress should take hold of our great problems, not in an incoherent and desultory way but in a full and comprehensive manner, and which provided for the creation of several joint committees on reconstruction. One of the committees was to deal with this very matter of farm labor and to ascertain if possible if there was any method of relieving its shortage; and the matter of distribution, to which my friend from Illinois has alluded, was another matter that was to be dealt with. But no action was taken and the difficulty is that we are now simply marking time. Despite the pressure to which the producers of the country are subjected, we are simply marking time, or, to change the figure, we are in a Micawber-like attitude, waiting for something to turn up. What I am saying is not for the purpose of antagonizing the bill, but rather for the purpose of indicating that when substantial amendments are offered, designed to increase certain appropriations, we ought, in support of the agricultural interests, to vote for those amendments, unless we are clearly of the opinion that they should not be made. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Virginia has just called our attention to our failure to comply with the request made by a very distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Avenue, and I assume he means the President of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I said at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. MADDEN. In any event, the President of the United States came here some time ago, before he was unfortunately taken ill, and made a recommendation which he told the country would reduce the cost of living if it were enacted into law. The Congress promptly enacted his recommendations into law, and what followed?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. I decline to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order; the gentleman will have to yield to that?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to say that he was going to insist on this argument being confined to the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we are doing now.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's argument is not confined to the bill, at least the political part of it is not. It is not confined, as required by the rules, to the last paragraph which was read, which was about the Weather Bureau. That has nothing to do with the high cost of living; but I love to hear the gentleman from Illinois talk, hence will not stop him with a point of order and withdraw it, though I would like to see some consistency over on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], and we always listen with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who never pretends to pay much attention to the item in the bill under discussion when he rises to address the committee. We did enact the legislation recommended by the President of the United States, and the next thing that happened was a request from the Attorney General for an appropriation of $3,000,000 to enforce the law, which he said was going to reduce the cost of living immediately. I have always maintained that every time you pass legislation to reduce the cost of living and make appropriations to enforce the law you add to the cost of living by the amount of the appropriation. That is the only thing that happens, and that is what happened in this case. Every morning for a long time the Attorney General announced in the public press that the cost of living had been reduced yesterday or would be to-morrow, and he even went so far as to congratulate the country upon the fact that the cost of living was not any higher in December, 1918, than it was in August, 1918!

But he stopped talking about that because the cost of living ever since we enacted the law recommended by the President of the United States has gone higher and higher.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for two minutes more in order that I may be in harmony with the rest.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to speak for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply want to say, in connection with the attitude of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, that no statement ever made by Col. Sellers had anything on him. He is the biggest dreamer who ever walked anywhere on earth. He makes no pretense whatever in stating facts in connection with any of his activities, and as to the truck service which he attempted to inaugurate, it was proved beyond any question whatever that hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense has been incurred in comparison with the revenues received, and if he had been permitted to extend the service as he wanted to extend it it would have cost more money to have run the truck service of the Post Office Department than the cost of running the whole department now. And so I believe that these dreamers who are always pretending to do something for the agriculturist or the farmer or the man who toils anywhere only thunder in the index, never produce any results. They do not get anywhere except in the newspapers and in the magazines, and the man whom they are pretending to relieve from the burden is the man who has to carry the added burden on account of their activities. And so I say that you do not get anywhere by legislating in the matter of raising more crops or better crops or bringing better prices for the crops raised or putting them more directly out of the hands of the producer into the hands of the ultimate consumer. If the farmer had the facilities of distributing his crops to the ultimate consumer, why he would deliver them there; but everyone knows that it is only an irridescent dream; you can not do it. Some facilities must be furnished by somebody somewhere to meet the demands for the distribution of the products of the labor of the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I rise to move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman has spoken once on the paragraph and he is not entitled to speak again.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I desire to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has offered one pro forma amendment to the paragraph, and the Chair does not think he can offer another——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wish to oppose the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, the gentleman would not be entitled to the floor against somebody else, but the fact he has spoken on one amendment to this paragraph does not prevent him offering another amendment to the paragraph if nobody else is seeking recognition.

Mr. ANDERSON. He did not offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last four words?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia rose in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, who moved to strike out the last word. Of course, that is a conventional motion, but he made the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last four words?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and he pursues what seems to be the usual course, and that is when it is stated that we are not legislating, or not legislating adequately, there is immediate reference to some supposed delinquency with which somebody connected with the executive department is chargeable. Now, I submit that will not do, because Congress has its own responsibility. It may be that we will have to confess that we can not do anything, but nevertheless we have a responsibility and must answer as to whether we can or can not function.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In one minute. I am free to say that the responsibility is upon the minority as well as upon the majority. The whole duty does not rest with the majority, nor the entire accountability. To reiterate, the only point I desired to make is that in view of the unusual condition that exists, if we can do anything to bring about more production of the necessaries of life, and if we can do anything to facilitate their distribution, we ought to do it.

What I respectfully submit is that we ought to face the situation and determine whether we can or can not find and apply remedies. We have not done that yet because we have not taken up this or any large subject except in a piecemeal way——

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will not deny, however, that we did grant the legislation recommended by the President, and it has not resulted in any material advantage—the extension of the food-control law.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The recommendation was in part approved and in part rejected.

I do not care to be diverted by some discussion of the President or the Postmaster General or Attorney General Palmer. If Mr. Palmer and those who agree with him are incorrect in thinking you can control the cost of living by pursuing the profiteers, then that merely heightens our duty and our responsibility. [Applause.]

As to increasing production and facilitating distribution, I repeat that not one step have we thus far taken in that direction, and we must not think the country is applauding our course. The country is full of discontent, and the criticism of Congress is universal. The people are not contented with the inaction of Congress. What may be the result of their opinion I have no means of predicting, but I am absolutely sure they do not approve the indifferent and do-nothing policy observed by Congress up to this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], that this Congress faces the responsibility at this session of doing something to take care of the food supply of this Nation. I want to direct the attention of the members of this committee to the fact, which ought to be well known, that profit to the farmer is the nerve center of agriculture. And no man on this earth can stimulate production save as he stimulates profit to the man whom we must depend upon to produce. And I want to call to the attention of some of my friends who live in the great cities, that the difficulty about the situation seems to be that when we see the hungry multitudes appealing to us for relief, and we see some interest taking a toll it is not entitled to, we forget the call of the men and women and children asking us to put cheaper food on their table. We are afraid to do it, because we fear offending somebody who wants to make a few million dollars more out of his business. You can not eat your cake and have it too. If you are not willing to cut these unnecessary profits from the people who are taking the toll, who are taking the bread out of the mouths of the men and women and children of this country, you are going to face before the next harvest time hunger-crazed crowds on the streets of your big cities, and then where will be the people who want to make a few more millions of profit off the business they pursue?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman suggest his remedy. I would like to join with him in some practical scheme.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have told you what the practical scheme is. You want a scheme that will reduce the cost of living without taking the profit from anybody now. It can not be done.

Mr. MADDEN. I want a real scheme. Will the gentleman suggest it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I suggest the only scheme on earth, and I make the statement without fear of contradiction. The only way you can do it, to save your life, is to cut down the expense between the farm and the table, and the only way you can do that is by the method I suggest—and I do not want to make this statement egotistically—the only way you can do it is to make it possible for these farm commodities to move from the point of first concentration to the point of use, in quantity and quality, in accordance with the demand for use, by the shortest route of freight movement, and through the fewest number of hands and the fewest number of profits, and hold the total of intervening profits to the basis of economic value of service rendered. And you can not do it until you create a route around the distributing agents of this country and force the distributor, if he wants to serve, to base his charges upon services rendered instead of his ability to take toll from the people who are concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. How long would it take to put the plan in operation and how soon, under that plan, would we get a cheaper food supply?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It depends on the disposition of Congress and how few people there are throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery. Of course, gentlemen, if we want to do this, we can do it in a hurry, but, mark my words, just behind this question of the high cost of living widespread hunger is coming to this country and no power on earth can prevent it. I have been so interrupted by attempting to discuss this proposition under the five-minute rule that I will here insert a more connected statement.

Whether we come from the country or come from the city, whether we be Democrats or Republicans, there is a unity of interest among us with regard to the great economic problems of agriculture. It is a fact which all Members ought to recognize that agriculture is compelled to bid for its necessary share of the productive energy of this country against every industry, every profession, and every vocation in this country, and that, therefore, in order to hold in the country the necessary share of our productive energy to provide for us the required food and clothing material, agriculture must pay to those engaged in its pursuit as great a net profit as any other industry offers to them.

Individuals change their vocations and change their residences under all sorts of influences, but the mass vocational and residential movements among every free people in every age has been toward the centers of best financial opportunities. They move under the operation of an economic law that is as irresistable as the law of gravitation. The fact that vocational and residential mass movement in this country is away from agriculture demonstrates that agriculture does not constitute a center of best opportunity. In dealing, therefore, with the problem which is so vital in this country at this time, the high cost of living, it is essential for the safety of our Nation, for the production of its food supply, that not only shall the bid of agriculture not be further reduced but that agriculture shall be enabled to increase its bid for productive energy.

From all over this land there comes to us an appeal from those upon whom the cost of the table rests to-day with mighty weight. There comes to us the appeal from those who, due to the cost of their food, are not able to provide proper nourishment for their bodies and for the bodies of their growing children. It is generally understood in this country that between the producer and the consumer there is enormous food waste and many unnecessary profits and charges, and it ought to be perfectly apparent to us as practical men that the only way the cost of the table can be reduced is by bringing to the table those commodities which rot after production and which must be paid for and the price which we give for that which we eat and by eliminating the unnecessary intervening charges and profits.

I wish I had time, gentlemen, to tell you of the enormous food waste after production. On the farm, in congested markets, in the long, haphazard line of physical movement. We have tried to reach this situation by antiprofiteering legislation, by antihoarding legislation, and by bureaucratic administration by departmental regulations. Many other suggestions are made embodying the same general idea of arbitrary bureaucratic control. Whatever of good there may be in the legislation which we have enacted and in the propositions of this character which have been submitted to us, it must be admitted in view of our own experience and the history of the operation of this character of legislation that it should bear the skull and crossbone label with which the druggists mark medicines which are dangerous in their use, though they may sometimes be necessary. These propositions and this character of legislation at best can never reach the seat of our trouble. It does not rest upon the foundation of economic law.

I submit to the judgment of the House that, whatever else we may do in a legislative and regulatory way, there can never be the economic sale and distribution of farm products; there never can be safe relative reduction in the cost of the table until we bring the activity of our National and State agricultural departments, which have been created for the purpose of aiding agriculture, to deal with its big problems into a practical recognition of the fact that agriculture is a business compelled to compete with all other business and that it has not been able, up to this time, to do as its competitors have done—organize and systematize the selling end of its business. We must recognize that profit to the farmer is now the nerve center of agriculture. We must recognize that farmers are no longer producing primarily to feed and clothe their families from the products of their respective farms, and as an evidence of this recognition the machinery of the Agricultural Department of the Federal Government and of the several States must be coordinated and must commit themselves to the construction of a marketing machinery through which agricultural products may move from points of first concentration to points of need in quantity and quality in accord with the demand or need. Practically all the necessary parts of this machinery are now in existence. There is needed to be done three things:

First, the completion as thoroughly and as rapidly as possible of the standardization of agricultural products. By this standardization we would translate into concise trade terms a universally understood description of the commodity. This, in turn, would give these commodities a commercial status at the point of first concentration and would make them capable of being traded in without an examination of them by the purchaser prior to the trade.

Second, there must be established a system of produce exchange wherein these commodities by description may be listed for sale.

Third, there must be the necessary intermediary inspection of the commodity and supervision of transaction to inspire the required confidence to make possible transactions between entire strangers in commodities which the purchaser has not seen. And there should be an advisory dispatching service similar to that now in operation in the Bureau of Markets, to aid in the sale of nonstandardized commodities. The standardized commodities would move under prior sale by the shortest route to the points of need.

There is nothing visionary in any of these suggestions, the feasibility of each of them has been demonstrated, but in a disconnected way, by the Agricultural Department of the Nation and of the several States. In the Federal farm loan act we have demonstrated the feasibility of all of them. The Federal farm loan act embodies the identical features of all the suggestions here made. In the Federal farm loan act we standardize farm loans, we establish an exchange for farm loans, and provide the necessary supervision and inspection of transaction to make it practicable for a man in New England to buy a mortgage on a Texas farm which he had never seen and never will see, executed by a man whose name he does not know and never will know. This machinery in operation, it must be apparent to each of you gentlemen, would shorten the line of physical movement, would dispense with the absurd and highly expensive custom incident to the long, haphazard movement of agricultural products to great concentration centers, and their reshipment from them frequently back over the very line of their ingoing movement; the physical deterioration incident to their delayed delivery and the expense incident to their being held under the high expense of refrigeration while a consuming market is being found would be eliminated. The waste now taking place in congested markets would be greatly reduced, and the exorbitant prices charged for food in markets inadequately supplied would be reduced, but the most important saving, in my judgment, would result from the fact that the power of distributors to levy toll would be destroyed and the total of intervening profits under the operation of economic law would be held to the basis of the economic value of the service rendered, for the apparent reason that this machinery would constitute a route around any distributing agency seeking to impose a charge greater than the value of the economic service.

Every producing community in the United States which could get together a shipping unit could, through this agency, put it in trade relationship with every market in the United States and through our consular agents abroad, together with the facilities afforded by the local marketing machinery, every producing community would be put in trading relationship with every market in the world. On the other hand, every purchaser or group of purchasers requiring a quantity composing a shipping unit could get in trade relationship with every producing community in the United States. Merchants and distributors could use this agency to the reduction of the charges which they are now required to impose, but they could not do it to the exclusion of private purchasers, and in order for them to serve private purchasers they would have to perform the service of distribution on the basis of value of service rendered. With such a machinery in operation we could dispense with the pestiferous bureaucratic activities which have come so much in vogue of later years. Not only could we dispense with those activities but we could reduce most materially items of expense connected with the operation of our agricultural departments incident to the maintenance of the large field force now engaged in undertaking to instruct our farmers in the mysteries of production. Not one class of agricultural commodities alone would move over this machinery, but the wheat and the cotton of this country and the live stock of the country could move through that agency as well. I have been told by ranchmen that a good cowman can cut a thousand head of white-faced cattle into five bunches of greater uniformity than any expert cotton man can separate a thousand bales of cotton in two. In Georgia now hogs are being sold upon grade.

In my own mind I am certain that it is possible to standardize to a considerable degree manufactured food products as to quality and hygienic condition of production. If this should be found to be feasible, it would be made possible thereby to preserve real democracy in business opportunity in this country. The small manufacturer, through this instrumentality, could be put in trading relationship with the general market, and there would be still remaining enough business advantage to those producing a superior article to keep alive the necessary incentive to improve the quality of manufactured articles.

I wish I had time to present to you in proper sequence the influence brought by the application of steam and electricity to the activities of men, which has made necessary the construction of a bridge to span the distance which now lies between production and consumption. If we are to prevent the business of this country from being monopolized by great business organizations which have within themselves such strength and power that they can exercise arbitrary toll-making power, I respectfully warn you, gentlemen, that we have but one choice in this country—either we must construct this bridge so as to preserve the opportunity of the little man or we can not preserve a democracy of opportunity. And there can be no governmental democracy among a people where the democracy of business opportunity is lost. If this is lost, the next step, and the one which we have been urged to take, would be to have the Government take them over and operate these great agencies under the exercise of bureaucratic power. With this machinery in operation—I do not want this—it would be possible for a city abattoir or for a little packing house to buy its supply of animals and have them shipped directly from the farm. This, in turn, would give the big packing plants a chance to continue to operate under private control, for the reason that whatever opportunity they now have to monopolize the purchase of live stock now held in the great stockyards and to monopolize in the sale of their output, and the prejudice which results therefrom, would be destroyed.

To-day they have but one choice, in my judgment, and that is to submit to the possibility of competition and to depend upon holding their market through their ability to pay as much for live stock and to sell as cheaply as the small plant could do or to come under that degree of governmental control which will eliminate practically all elements of private ownership. As I believe it ultimately would be applied, every little manufacturer would not only have access to the general market but would have purchasing access to the general supply of raw material. With this machinery in operation, the present tendency to develop an agrarian party in this country would subside, because there would be no need for other than community cooperative organizations affiliated for limited general advantage.

There can not be among a people divided along lines of vocational cleavage that degree of national unity and solidarity required to properly stand the strains which from time to time come to test the strength of every nation. But it is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, at this time to emphasize these considerations, tremendously important as they are. With regard to their importance gentlemen of the House may differ, but with regard to the importance of dividing between the purchaser and the consumer the savings which every practical man must know can be made there certainly can be no difference of opinion. Through the division of this saving we can help agriculture hold those engaged in its pursuit and for whose retention agriculture is now fighting with its back to the wall, fighting against every industry, every profession, and is losing in the fight that can help reduce the cost of the table of the man who lives in the city, that can help to keep the bodies of our people well nourished, which everybody must appreciate is more important now than ever before while we are trying to pass through this world crisis and reach a state of national sanity.

I have introduced a tentative bill embodying these suggestions. The country has not been ready to receive it nor acknowledged its importance. I make this observation not with the purpose of criticizing anybody. I understood full well when I introduced the bill that the thought and energy of the country was so absorbed in city building and had come so generally to regard agriculture as an inexhaustible commissary useful only to feed business; that it would take time for the realization of the importance of this proposed legislation to impress itself upon the country with whatever persistency possible and with all the patience upon every practical occasion, I have submitted this provision to the consideration of whoever would give me attention. It is impossible, of course, in a brief length of time to discuss analytically a great economic proposition such as is embodied in the suggestions which I have made, but I now make these suggestions to you, gentlemen, and urge that the time has come when we can not afford much longer to delay their enactment into law. The high prices paid for farm products has made us all think; the common sense of the country I believe recognizes the probable efficacy of the suggestions made. I trust that before long this great Agricultural Committee, of whose membership I have the highest respect, will see fit to propose their enactment by Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to do it, but I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I was not trying to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 editor and compiler, $2,250; 1 executive assistant, $2,500; 4 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 10 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,680; 15 clerks, class 3; 7 clerks, at $1,500 each; 36 clerks, class 2; 3 clerks, at $1,380 each; 4 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 3 clerks, at $1,260 each; 161 clerks, class 1; 15 clerks, at $1,100 each; 10 clerks, at $1,080 each; 12 clerks, at $1,020 each; 72 clerks, at $1,000 each; 14 clerks, at $960 each; 53 clerks, at $900 each; one architect, $2,000; one illustrator, $1,400; one laboratory aid, $1,200; one laboratory helper, $1,200; 2 laboratory helpers, at $1,020 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,000; 1 laboratory helper, $960; 2 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 1 laboratory helper, $720; 2 laboratory helpers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory mechanician, $1,440; 1 carpenter, $1,140; 2 carpenters, at $1,000 each; 2 messengers and custodians, at $1,200 each; 1 quarantine assistant, $900; 1 skilled laborer, $1,200; 3 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; 11 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 1 painter, $900; 2 laborers, at $900 each; 11 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 3 laborers, at $780 each; 29 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; 24 laborers, at $600 each; 32 laborers, at $540 each; 30 laborers, at $480 each; 2 messenger boys, at $660 each; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 25 messenger boys, at $480 each; 8 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 charwoman, $600; 2 charwomen, at $540 each; 17 charwomen, at $480 each; 5 charwomen, at $360 each; 2 charwomen, at $300 each; 7 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $656,390.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to give the chairman of the committee some specific information regarding one subject of appropriations in this bill, concerning which, apparently, he exhibits dense ignorance.

Mr. HAUGEN. What paragraph is that?

Mr. BLANTON. That is concerning the subject of messenger service. The chairman confined his——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order we are not on the messenger-service proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, we are on the messenger service; because this very section, as the gentleman would know if he had read the bill or had listened to the reading clerk read it, provides for 30 different messengers here, on the top of page 11.

Mr. Chairman, in this bill, besides these 30 messengers, in the Secretary's office there are 70 messengers provided. In the Farm Management Office there are 5——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not talking to the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I am, because I am going to show that these 30 messengers in this particular paragraph are unwarranted and not needed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman. The gentleman can talk about the 30 messengers, but not about the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order the gentleman from Texas is not in order, that the gentleman made a pro forma amendment and is not discussing the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. And I do that for the purpose of reaching this messenger service that is not needed. Proceeding, I wish to state that for the Secretary's office alone there are 70 messengers allowed in this bill, in the Farm Management division there are 5 messengers, and in the Weather Bureau there are 166 messengers, and following, on page 7, an unlimited number of messengers are authorized. In the Bureau of Animal Industry there are 80 messengers authorized.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I regret I can not. I have not the time. In the Bureau of Plant Industry there are 167 messengers. In the Forest Service there are 49 messengers. In the Bureau of Chemistry there are 24 messengers. In the Bureau of Soils there are 4 messengers; in the Bureau of Entomology there are 12 messengers; in the Bureau of Biological Survey there are 3 messengers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his motion. I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that he is dealing with five or six paragraphs in the bill, when he only moved to strike out the pending paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking of the enormous number of useless, idle, messengers allowed in this whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman can refer to other sections of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the Chair will not take this interruption out of my time. This is only attempted facetiousness on the part of the gentleman from Illinois, and it is so seldom that we have any facetiousness from him that I hope the Chair will not take it out of my time. [Laughter.]

In the Division of Accounts and Disbursements there are 2 messengers; in the Division of Publications 41 messengers; in the Bureau of Crop Estimates 8 messengers; in the department library—there is a library provided by generous Uncle Sam and a foolishly generous Congress for every department—5 messengers; in the State Relations Service there are 26 messengers; in the Bureau of Public Roads 21 messengers; in the Bureau of Markets 53 messengers; in the Bureau for Enforcement of the Insecticide Act 3 messengers; and in the Federal Horticultural Board 4 messengers, making, in all, a grand total of 743 messengers drawing salaries from a maximum of $960 down. And, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in addition to that salary each one of these 743 idle, useless, salary-drawing messengers is drawing, as the chairman of this committee knows—each one of them draws—a bonus of $240 each year in addition to his salary; each one of them.

Seven hundred and forty-three messengers in the Department of Agriculture alone! And yet the leader of this Congress—of the majority, at least—tells us that they have cut down, they have cut off, all possible extravagance out of this bill; and because the department asks the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] for all these 743 messengers, and because, I presume, there is such a feeling of courtesy—not senatorial courtesy, but Iowa courtesy—existing between the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of this committee, and the gentleman from Iowa, the new Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, one Iowa man can not turn another Iowa man down. [Laughter.]

We ought to cut these 743 messengers down to about 43, and thus save the money of the people, and send the other 700 messengers to the farms of Iowa, and then you would have smaller taxes to be imposed upon the people. [Applause.]

Have we not heard complaint being made of farm labor being scarce in Iowa? Do not the farmers of Iowa need laborers? Is it not a fact that maximum food production is highly essential and necessary? Is there not entirely too much congestion of food consumers in the cities, who are producing nothing? Are not these idle, pampered, dandy-dressed messengers in our way every time we try to walk through the halls of the Agricultural Department? Is every chief and subchief, every head and subhead, every clerk and stenographer, and every subclerk and substenographer in the Agricultural Department to be furnished by us with a whole coterie of these highly paid flunkies, drawing Government salaries from $960 down, with an additional bonus of $240 added to it, when we are facing a deficit of over $3,000,000,000, and we have already taxed the people until they can hardly bear it? I say, are we going to do it? It is up to the Republican majority to answer. I am against it. I will vote with you to stop it. I will help you to economize. I will help you to reduce taxes. You will find other Democrats over on this side of the aisle who will help you. Why can you not swing your Republican colleagues into line? Your Iowa voters and constituents will approve of it, even though we do have to turn down the requests of the new Iowa Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the paragraph, and in connection with that I want to say this: An examination of the Department of Agriculture in regard to the messenger work will disclose this fact, that probably nine-tenths of the so-called messengers in the Department of Agriculture are actually doing clerical work. They are doing a whole lot of other work besides simply running about and carrying messages. The name "messenger" is a misnomer. That is the sum and substance of the situation. They can not get clerks over there for $900 or $1,000 or $1,200. They have to get these low-salaried clerks from the Civil Service Commission under the title of "messengers," and they put them in to do that kind of work. They are doing a class of work that somebody has got to do.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I notice that the language is quite often used, "messengers or laborers."

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Are there laborers who are called "messengers"?

Mr. RUBEY. There are messengers who are doing laborers' work.

Mr. BEE. That is what I wanted to know. What proportion of these messengers that my colleague [Mr. BLANTON] has referred to are laborers in the department?

Mr. RUBEY. I can not say, but a large part of these 743 messengers mentioned by the gentleman are doing clerical work. If they were really messengers there would be too many, but they are, many of them, simply doing clerical work.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Are these laborers worthy of their hire?

Mr. RUBEY. Oh, sure; no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control and eradication, for the tuberculin testing of animals, and for researches concerning the cause of the disease, its modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and such other means as may be necessary, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State, Territory, or county authorities, $1,300,000, of which $800,000 shall be set aside for administrative and operating expenses, $100,000 of which shall be immediately available, and $500,000 for the payment of indemnities: Provided, however, That in carrying out the purpose of this appropriation, if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion and in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere out of the moneys of this appropriation such sums as he shall determine to be necessary, within the limitations above provided, for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, Territories, counties, or municipalities as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter, and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, Territory, county, or municipality where condemnation of such animals shall take place; nor shall any payment be made hereunder as compensation for or on account of any such animal destroyed if at the time of inspection or test of such animal, or at the time of condemnation thereof, it shall belong to or be upon the premises of any person, firm, or corporation to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered: Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as compensation for any tuberculous animal destroyed shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, Territory, county, or municipality where the animal shall be condemned; and that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations: And provided further, That the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stat. L., p. 31), be, and the same is hereby, amended to permit hereafter cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test to be shipped, transported, or moved from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for immediate slaughter, in accordance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, permit cattle which have been shipped for breeding or feeding purposes from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and which have reacted to the tuberculin test subsequent to such shipment, to be reshipped in interstate commerce to the original owner.

Mr. RUBEY and Mr. TILSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee.

Mr. TILSON. I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. RUBEY. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RUBEY. I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making just a brief statement. A little while ago, when I was speaking under general debate, one of the members of the committee on the other side seemed to take me to task with a statement that I was hardly fair. Now, I always want to be eminently fair. When I suggested that we might very well appropriate $200,000 or $300,000 additional for this work I did it on my own responsibility.

We began this work three or four years ago. We brought in a small appropriation; I believe it was in 1916 or 1917. The next year we brought in an appropriation for $500,000, and last year we made an appropriation for $1,500,000. Now, when we made the appropriation of a million and a half the committee provided that $500,000 of that should be used for the actual demonstration work, the work of eradication, and that $1,000,000 of it should be used for the purpose of reimbursing owners for cattle slaughtered. Now, when the department put that into operation it was very soon demonstrated that it would not take that proportion of the money to pay for the cattle that were slaughtered, and the committee found out—and we were a unit on it—that we could divide that sum of $1,300,000 and devote a less sum for the payment of slaughtered animals and a larger amount for the actual work of eradication. So by giving them $1,300,000 the department will be able to do as much work in the coming year as it did with the $1,500,000 last year, because they have got their organization formed and they have the benefit of a year's experience, and they can do more work with that sum of money than they could a year ago.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUBEY. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. For the current year we appropriated $500,000 for administrative and operating expenses. Why has not the department lived within that appropriation? When a certain sum is appropriated for certain purposes, why does the Agriculture Department, like other departments, immediately proceed to form an organization that will take more money than we have appropriated?

Mr. RUBEY. They have lived within the appropriation, except that, as the gentleman says, they have organized so extensively that they will run out before the year winds up.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I understand they have not spent more than the $500,000.

Mr. RUBEY. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have not ended the year yet; but they have an organization that will cost more than $500,000 before the end of the year.

Mr. RUBEY. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And they deliberately organized it.

Mr. RUBEY. I would not say deliberately. I can not agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, perhaps hastily, perhaps temperamentally. I supposed that what they did was done deliberately.

Mr. RUBEY. The proposition, as I understand it, is that they perhaps organized with a force which they thought would practically consume the $500,000 by the end of the year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The law requires them to apportion that money, I take it?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And to expend not more than one-twelfth of the appropriation in any month, or more than one-third of it in any quarter, unless the Secretary certifies otherwise. Why have they not made some pretense of living within the law?

Mr. RUBEY. The probabilities are that when they began their organization it took for the first few months more than would be required afterwards, and that necessarily thereafter they would spend a smaller amount each month.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then they ought to have something saved instead of making an organization that in the end would spend a good deal more than the amount appropriated.

Mr. RUBEY. I agree with the gentleman in that regard. We have made available here $100,000 of this money in order to carry out that very organization that the gentleman speaks about. I agree with the gentleman that the department have not properly balanced their working force.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was disposed at first to make a point of order on that $100,000. As far as I am concerned I do not intend to do it. But I am utterly tired of seeing every department and branch of the service, when it is given a certain amount of money for a certain purpose, deliberately proceed to expend that money in a portion of the year, so that in order to continue its organization it must have a deficiency appropriation.

Now, there are many deficiencies that arise naturally, but this sort of a deficiency arises from violation of the law. I doubt whether we ought to condone it. It is a good service and we can not afford to stop it. I do not know how much of a rasping the committee gave the department officials, but I hope it went to the raw.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. I agree in part with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, but I would not say that the department has deliberately organized its forces for the purpose of getting additional money. The department has no doubt allowed its enthusiasm to do its work properly to lead it to create an organization greater than it will have enough money to provide for during the time covered by the original appropriation. I simply wanted to make this statement for the purpose of showing my coworkers on that side on the committee that I did not intend to be unfair. I agree with you thoroughly that with this $1,300,000 they will be able to accomplish as much in the coming year 1921 as they have in 1920, but I do believe that with this splendid work now organized throughout the country we can very well afford to add to it $200,000 more. I am not going to make the motion. I simply am presenting my views on this particular question. I did not agree with you entirely on this question when you first started out. Three years ago I voted in the committee against the increase, because I was not satisfied concerning the character of the work that could be done; but I have studied it, I have obtained all the information I can upon the question, and I believe the work of eradicating tuberculosis in cattle is a great work and that we ought to carry it on as rapidly as we possibly can.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is comparatively new work. It was begun about two years ago, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] says, over the protest of himself and a number of other members of the Committee on Agriculture. It is good work and ought to be continued, but I have some criticism of the extent to which the bureau is going.

The bill last year provided $500,000 for administration and $1,000,000 to pay indemnities. It is clear that enough money must be made available for indemnities; that there must be no considerable cut in that, because it would be a serious matter if we were to fall short of the amount of money necessary to pay the Government's part of the indemnity. The $1,000,000 provided for indemnities is in all probability a larger amount than will be needed, but it is a sort of insurance fund. This year, up to the time the officials of the bureau appeared before the Committee on Agriculture, only about $200,000 had been used for paying indemnities; but it appeared that by the 1st of February they would have used up the entire $500,000 set aside for administration, so they asked us to provide $100,000 to be available for administration for the rest of the fiscal year, and to make the amount available for administration for next year $1,000,000, or $500,000 more than was available during the current fiscal year. The committee refused to do that, and I was one of those who advised refusing it.

I said I had some criticism to make of the work. The work is good work; the officials of the bureau are capable, earnest, and conscientious, but in my judgment more of the work ought to be done by the Department of Agriculture by way of working out remedies and teaching the people by demonstration how to use remedies than by doing the actual physical work of administering medicine. A proper remedy has been worked out, and the method of applying it is so easy that any veterinarian knows how or should know how to apply it.

In my judgment it is not necessary for the Government to have an immense force all over the country engaged so largely and at such great expense in doing work that almost anyone can do.

The answer to that, as we learn by the testimony of gentlemen appearing before the committee, is that the State employees and veterinarians employed by the State are incompetent and that some of them are dishonest; that they are careless, or worse, in making tests and in the issuing of certificates; that evidently, sometimes, by collusion between a local veterinarian and the owner of cattle the work is improperly done and the certificate is not reliable, with the result that when stock is bought in one State for shipment to another the certificate to the effect that the stock is free from tuberculosis, issued in the State where the animals are bought, is not accepted by the purchaser in the State to which the shipment is made. The upshot of this unfortunate state of affairs is that Federal inspectors and Federal officials are asked to go into the States to do the quite simple and easy work which the State men fail or refuse to do. Purchasers of cattle shipped across State lines demand certificates issued by Federal authority because only such certificates can be safely accepted.

It is insisted by sincere friends of the work the bureau has done that continuation of it by the present plan and on the present scale is neither necessary nor proper. As long as the Federal Government will do the work, that unfortunate condition in the States will continue. It is, in fact, putting a premium on inefficiency in the States. All they have to do is to encourage or permit these veterinaries or others employed with the State's money to do the work to do it carelessly and improperly, and then in steps the Federal Government with the men and money necessary to do the work. Just as long as that situation is permitted to prevail, as long as we listen and answer the call of the States for money to do the work that they ought to do, just so long immense appropriations of this kind will be necessary.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman believe that it is a wiser division of the funds as proposed in this bill than that in last year's bill—increasing the administration and operating expenses from $500,000 to $800,000 and decreasing the amount available to pay indemnities by one-half?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In answer to the gentleman from Connecticut I will say that in my judgment more money is asked for than should be appropriated. It is evident that $1,000,000 available for indemnity is much larger than necessary, but only such part as is necessary will be used.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think that $100,000 should be made immediately available?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The officials of the department have done the very thing that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] spoke of. Five hundred thousand dollars was made available by the last bill for administration. Officials deliberately—and I use that word to the gentleman from Missouri—the officials of the department deliberately laid out a plan involving an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars more than the amount appropriated. They knew that they had only $500,000, but they laid out a plan that would make necessary an expenditure of $700,000 or $800,000, and then they come to Congress and ask for an increase of that amount so that the men employed in a kind of work that almost anybody can do shall be continued in their places.

Mr. BENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BENSON. The gentleman knows that those same officials saved the Government in other sections $800,000 on indemnities, does he not?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They paid indemnities only where it was necessary. They had expended $200,000 up to the time they appeared before the committee. They did not save the States any money, because the States had to contribute in the same proportion as the Federal Government contributed. When the deficiency bill was before the House it was evident that many of the department bureaus were doing just as the Bureau of Animal Industry has done. There was no limit put on the work in accordance with the appropriation; they did not lay out the work in keeping with that amount, but deliberately laid out work on a larger scale, trusting to being able to come to Congress later on and get more money. In my judgment—and as I felt when the bill was before the committee—we ought not to accede to the demands of the bureau and provide them with the full amount they asked for next year. I am, however, in favor of supplying immediate needs. The bureau has men out in the field who must be discharged in a few days unless money is made immediately available. The work going on is good work. My criticism is that the States ought to do more and ask less of the Federal Government, but if Congress determines it shall be done and that we shall go on supplying the deficiency, well and good. Under no other circumstances is so much money necessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Our Government is spending large sums of money endeavoring to discover serum which will inoculate against various diseases. In some cases they are successful. If they could discover a serum to inoculate these officials against this infection which seems to be spreading among them of spending more money than is appropriated, I think it would be more valuable than any so far discovered. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEE. Would the gentleman make it retroactive, so that it would go back to the Republican administration?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would go back as far as necessary.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this about the tuberculosis item in this bill in answer to the criticism of the department made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. The department is not justly subject to this criticism. A few years ago when the tubercular item first came before this body Congress itself, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] knows, made a great appropriation here and said to that department, "You go after tuberculosis among stock." We gave them a sum of money that they did not ask for. Why did you give it to them? We said to them that the herds of cattle throughout the Nation were dying of tuberculosis, that the hogs were dying of tuberculosis, that the disease was going into the families of the country by reason of the tuberculosis in cattle and stock, and we told the department to go ahead and spend this money and stamp out this disease and protect these herds and protect the people. How are you going to do this through this department if the department does not do it through its employees and experts which it has on the pay roll? Congress is responsible for it. We expected them to get the machinery together, and they did get it together. They laid out their program, and they have undertaken to do this work and have made headway in it. I do not think we ought to cripple them, because these herds are at stake and the health of the people is at stake. Of course in attacking so great a problem as this, being human beings, some of the money must of necessity have been wasted, but I undertake to say they have done the best they could with the money that we gave them. Now, since they have set up the machinery we forced them to set up we should not criticize them when they come and say, "Here is the machinery, we are doing this work, and it is going to take such and such a sum of money to do it."

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the work the Federal Government ought to engage in, in cooperation with the States, the States matching dollar for dollar. We set up all sorts of quarantine regulations as a Federal Government, and say that the people can not ship cattle in interstate commerce under certain circumstances, and we shut out a State or a community by the power of the Federal Government in order that we may stop the disease from going into sections of the country where it does not at present exist. Since we exercise this extraordinary power through the Federal Government, in stopping from commerce cattle and hogs, then, I say, there comes coincident with the exercise of that power by the Federal Government the corresponding duty that as a Federal Government, representing all of the people, we should appropriate from the money of all of the people to relieve against the increase of diseases in stock that threaten the whole live-stock industry.

This department has done great work. It has done great work with respect to hog cholera and tuberculosis in cattle, with respect to the Texas fever from the cattle tick. They have done a wonderful piece of work. This is a great national problem, because unless you stamp out these diseases among our stock, our people can not be fed. I am tired of this eternal criticism of the department, when, as a matter of fact, we asked them to start these enterprises and when we say now we will withdraw these funds. They have expended and have wisely cooperated with the States, because these are great propositions that affect every citizen of the Nation, and my friend Mr. MCKINLEY, who has been so zealous in behalf of this item, will agree with every word that I have said in respect to the tubercular item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to ascertain whether the gentleman from Connecticut desires to make the point of order.

Mr. TILSON. I reserved the point of order for the purpose of asking some questions not only concerning the item which the gentleman from Illinois has called to the attention of the committee, but also in respect to the item on page 15, where an amendment is proposed to the act approved May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry. I do not wish to make any captious points of order, and if the matter is explained to me perhaps I shall not make the point of order at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman withdraws his reservation, he can get all of the information that he desires.

Mr. TILSON. Then it would be too late to make the point of order if I discovered that in my judgment the point of order should be made.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We have been drifting along here for quite a while. Has the gentleman gotten that information?

Mr. TILSON. I have not had a chance to get the floor. Members of the committee have claimed the floor and this is my first opportunity.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman has the right to the floor under his reservation of the point of order. I think we better get along. If there is anything in the point of order, let it be ascertained.

Mr. TILSON. It is clearly an amendment to the act mentioned and is not in order.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no question about the point of order if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will wait a while, and perhaps the gentleman will pick up his information, but if he does not get along any faster I shall insist upon the regular order.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman makes the point of order I wish him to make it only as to the word "hereafter," so that it will not be permanent law.

Mr. TILSON. It may be that it ought to become permanent law, and that is the reason for my inquiry.

Mr. HAUGEN. The language explains itself. It is an item generally agreed to by the department and everybody interested.

Mr. TILSON. Why has it not been done before?

Mr. HAUGEN. We did carry it in the annual appropriation bill, and now desire to make it permanent, so as not to make it necessary to carry it in every bill.

Mr. TILSON. How long has it been carried in the annual appropriation bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. One year.

Mr. TILSON. And the gentleman is convinced that that act ought to be permanently amended?

Mr. HAUGEN. That part should be amended. It simply gives permission to ship cattle back into the State from whence they come for immediate slaughter. It was agreed upon by all the stockmen and by the department and the department and the stockmen agreed upon the language and we put it in exactly as they wanted it. I do not know that there is any objection to it.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. Mr. Chairman, I should not take time at this time to indulge in any remarks were it not for the fact that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], a member of the committee, stated that his remarks on this subject were prompted by my question to him during general debate. I understood the gentleman in general debate to criticize the committee for reducing the appropriation, and on the face of the bill it does have the appearance of reducing the appropriation, for the appropriation last year carried a million and a half dollars and this year $1,300,000. However we should consider the fact that $1,000,000 of that appropriation last year was confined to the payment for cattle destroyed in the eradication of this disease, and the department said that only $200,000 of that money would be used, and the appropriation this year carries $500,000 for that purpose, and the appropriation of $500,000 last year for administration was increased to $800,000 for this year, $100,000 being made immediately available for this year. So it is hardly fair to say that the appropriation was decreased. However, there is a principle involved in this proposition that the House of Representatives might just as well face now as any other time. It is impossible to eradicate the disease of tuberculosis among cattle, in my judgment. It is as impossible to do that as it would be to eradicate climatic conditions in the United States. However, a test for tuberculosis has been discovered and is practical, and it is possible to eradicate from dairy herds by test tuberculosis, and it will be possible with the meat-inspection laws that we have and with proper laws with respect to milk conditions to have pure milk, but it will never be possible, in my judgment, to eradicate tuberculosis. Now, stop and think for a minute. We have a test. The amount of the appropriation depends upon how many cattle you test. A man who owns a dairy herd can have his cattle tested. The Government will join his State in paying him for eradication of tubercular cattle. He can hire his own veterinary to have them tested or he can wait until the Government-paid veterinary gets there. I say to you gentlemen of the committee that over two-thirds of the men having tests made to-day are paying for it themselves. The other one-third are waiting for the Government veterinary to make the test. We might just as well figure next year and the year after there will be an application for an increased appropriation for Government veterinarians to do this individual work, and the principle involved is whether the Government is going to do it. It is unfair to do it for one man and not to do it for another, and if we are going to do it for every man, then this bill must call for a billion of dollars instead of a million, and that is something I would suggest, gentlemen, is worthy of the consideration of the Members of this House.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in speaking on this section of the Agricultural appropriation bill I speak as one coming from a district that is about half rural and half city. The city people are just as much interested in this particular legislation as those who own cattle, and everyone realizes that although it might be desirable to have the State and local veterinarians do this work, which they now do to a certain extent under local regulations, yet if it is not done there is nothing to prevent the shipping of milk into the cities across the State lines and infecting the people of the communities with tubercular milk.

We also know that it is practicable to test the herds of high-grade cattle, and it is from the herds of high-grade cattle that most of the breeding is done.

I read an editorial in the Baltimore Sun the other day that called attention to the possibility of the farmers striking. This they will never do. But there are many farmers who, as soon as they have the opportunity, are going out of the farming business. There are many of their sons leaving the farm. Up in Harford County, as well as in the other two counties in my district, old experienced farmers are selling their farms, not because they really desire to quit farming but because they are forced to do so. One prominent farmer, who was formerly a canner, and who has made a success of the farming and canning business as well as raising cattle, recently sold his home, consisting of a large farm, for no other reason, in my opinion, except that it was impossible for him to do all the work himself, and he did not have the cooperation of others which would enable him to continue farming.

The condition of the farmer to-day is more uncertain than any gamble that I know of, and if there is anything the Department of Agriculture and Congress can do that is practical to help the farmers it ought to be done and done without question, not only for the benefit of the farmers but for the benefit of this country at large.

Representing, as I do, a constituency half city and half country, I think I am in a position to realize that one is absolutely dependent upon the other, and that the success and prosperity of this country depends upon the reduction in the price of food. The farmer is entirely willing to have it reduced within reasonable bounds if he can produce it at reasonable cost. And what use is it for the farmer on his farm to have his herd tested and part of it destroyed if the farmer on the next farm does not do the same thing, although his herd is tubercular?

And this educational work that these men are doing throughout the country is the best work, in my judgment, not only for the farmers, but the best work for the people throughout the country. I have heard a good deal of discussion to-day that is very foreign to this bill, discussion in way of criticism of Congress and of the President of the United States, because nothing has been done to relieve the present conditions throughout the country. But I do say that we have here in this bill a practical thing that we can do for the benefit of all the people, and that is what we ought to be looking for in every piece of legislation that we produce. If we spend money to get practical results for the farmers and for the people throughout the country generally, you will find no criticism about high taxes because of anything in this provision of the bill. The farmers are for this legislation, because they have been educated up to it by the Department of Agriculture and now appreciate the beneficial results from this work.

There is no more important conservation measure than this section of this bill in its effort to reduce and ultimately eliminate tuberculosis in cattle. This is essential in order that pure milk may be furnished to the people and to keep the price of meat within reasonable bounds. To allow the further spread of tuberculosis in cattle is unthinkable.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last few words. What the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] said is very true, indeed, in regard to this matter. The bill three years ago carried, I think, only $170,000 for the prevention of tuberculosis. The Central West, the States that raise the hogs and the cattle, brought great pressure to bear down here to have the amount increased, and it was increased not at the recommendation of the department, but on the recommendation of the cattle and hog raisers. I think that we appropriated $1,500,000 last year; that was divided up and $500,000 used for administration and the balance to pay damages. The department asked $2,000,000, and spent $1,000,000 for administration and $500,000 for reimbursement of damages. Many cattle are found to be affected with tuberculosis, and consequently the amount for administration, which means for inspection, settles the amount that must be paid out for damages. The department came before us about the middle of December. They reported for five months' administration, which had taken about $200,000. They will probably need for the year about $500,000 to repay damages. When we stop to think, we people who eat the meat and we people particularly that eat pork, that in some of the packing houses in some of the cities as many as 25 per cent of the hogs were found to be affected by tuberculosis, and even in the large packing centers like Chicago as many as 10 per cent or more were affected by tuberculosis, it certainly seems right that something should be done to stop that. It is not pleasant to think that we possibly are getting hold of meat of that kind. I would deprecate very much, indeed, to see the amount of money which we have asked for administration, and which means inspection of cattle herds, reduced, and I hope it will not be done.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKINLEY. I will.

Mr. TILSON. The use of this $800,000 for this purpose would, after all, be only what we might call a "drop in the bucket." They could examine such a small portion of the hogs and cattle of the country that it would nothing like meet the situation. Must not the situation be met by the owners of cattle and hogs themselves, by having the test made by their own veterinarians?

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, 45 out of 48 States are now operating. They are getting thoroughly alive to the matter, and in the last two years, in which this active work has been done, they have reduced the percentage to about 20.

Mr. TILSON. Is it the expectation of the gentleman that the Government shall do all of this inspecting work?

Mr. McKINLEY. Oh, the Government is not doing all.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not cost, as the gentleman from Kansas said a few moments ago, a billion dollars instead of a million if it were required that the Government should test for tuberculosis all the cattle and hogs in the country?

Mr. McKINLEY. It is not doing all. A billion dollars is really too much for me to consider what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of hog cholera, and for its control or eradication by such means as may be necessary, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and other methods, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State or county authorities, $510,000: Provided, That of said sum $188,280 shall be available for expenditure in carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913, regulating the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment of any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product manufactured in the United States and the importation of such products intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals: And provided further, That of said sum $29,520 shall be available for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of this disease.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 18, line 1, strike out "$510,000" and insert "$585,000."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to detain the committee. I want this question to be voted upon.

We began the hog-cholera work in 1912. In 1913 we appropriated $500,000 for it. We have carried on this work now ever since that time. We have our organization in almost every State of the Union—in all the hog-raising States. I simply ask this committee to put this item back to $585,000, which is less several thousand than we had last year. Last year we appropriated $641,045. The subcommittee this year reported to the full committee $585,000, and I am going to ask this committee to restore that sum—$585,000.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is one item where we are doing something that will benefit the farmers of this country. We began away back yonder when hogs were dying at the rate of 137 for every thousand. We have reduced the number until it is now 37 for every thousand. The Government has saved the American farmers hundreds of millions of dollars by its hog-cholera work.

Now, it may be stated on the floor of the House that this work is simply done by sending out men here and there to make speeches, and so forth. The work is not done in that way. Every State has its organization, with three or four Government men there cooperating with the State. My State has built a station. My State is spending thousands of dollars every year in this work. I am not asking this appropriation to help Missouri, because Missouri is the best organized State along this line of any in the Union. I am asking this appropriation to help the farmers in other States, where they have not had the benefit of this work. I want you gentlemen to help out on the hog-cholera proposition. I do not desire to take any further time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it is now nearly 5 o'clock, and I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LINTHICUM, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEVENSON (at the request of Mr. DOMINICK), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. RAINEY of Alabama, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3381. An act for the relief of Gertrude Lustig; to the Committee on War Claims.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3327. An act granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 7, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriation to provide for a Federal office building at St. Louis, Mo., and for a customhouse at Sitka, Alaska (H. Doc. No. 643); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting report in response to House resolution 394, in connection with the fixing of prices for sugar (H. Doc. No. 644); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting report on necessity for the construction of tenders for destroyers and asking that appropriation be made to utilize certain fabricated ship material now at the Hog Island Navy Yard for that purpose; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

4. A letter from the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting reports on the various public utilities under its jurisdiction; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. NOLAN, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7157) to amend section 5 of the trademark act of February 20, 1905, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 601), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARRISH: A bill (H. R. 12375) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 12376) to control the exportation of helium gas; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 12377) to amend the act approved July 11, 1919, being an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H. 1397. Also, petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., relative to the railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 7, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father in heaven, we look up to Thee in faith and confidence, for guidance in this hour of great problems, which confront us as a people. Guide those, we beseech Thee, in authority to a wise solution of all the questions which confront us.

A great epidemic is sweeping the land, bringing death and sorrow to thousands. Comfort those in distress and bring health and happiness to our people. Many of the Congressmen are indisposed and we pray that health may come to them and their families. In the name of Him who said to a suffering world:

"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: And ye shall find rest unto your souls.

"For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light."

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE ON MONDAY.

The SPEAKER. It is possible that I may not be able to be present at the opening of the session on Monday, and in the event of my absence I designate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to act in my place. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3813. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain between the towns of Shoreham, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y.

S. J. Res. 154. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC IN KANSAS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 154, authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table and considered by the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to consider a joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, I want to make some inquiries of the gentleman as to the hospital supplies that are now in the possession of the War Department. I have had some inquiries made by gentlemen in Texas who seem to be under the impression that the supplies that are now held by the War Department in excess of the amount that they will need for the Regular Establishment will be finally donated or given to hospitals that do a public service; that is to say, to charitable hospitals. Is any such proposition in contemplation by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. The only legislative proposition before the Committee on Military Affairs is one to turn over a certain amount of that surplus material to the American Red Cross.

But let me say to the gentleman that this Senate resolution covers a very serious situation in the State of Kansas, where there are double the number of cases of influenza that there were last year. All the available hospitals are filled, and the State is converting several large school buildings into emergency hospitals, and it asks for such surplus hospital material as there is in the State for temporary use under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. GARNER. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I wanted to direct the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], as well as the other gentlemen on that committee, to the fact that there may be other situations of a similar nature in the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we ought to meet them if they arise.

Mr. GARNER. And there ought to be some general policy of the War Department with reference to those supplies. They have sent out a letter in which they price these articles and give the location of each article, enabling those who desire to buy them to purchase them at that price; but if you are going to say that on account of an emergency existing in Kansas, that on account of the "flu" you are going to let them have certain supplies, then the whole policy of the Government with reference to these supplies ought to be considered.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that whenever the War Department sends a letter to the committee about these matters, it is the invariable rule to introduce the necessary bill and to take action thereon in the committee. Of course, the committee can have no knowledge of the amount of material that is on hand or whether there is surplus material until the War Department furnishes the information.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I am sure that the gentleman and his committee probably do not know anything about this, because the War Department wants to sell it.

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. GARNER. Well, they wrote me a letter to that effect.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department wants to give some of it to the Red Cross, and that is as far as they have communicated with the committee.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman if he will make inquiry as to the supply, its location, and the probable disposition of it?

Mr. KAHN. We will be glad to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me just a moment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. In answer to the inquiries that have been made by the gentleman from Texas, I will say that a resolution has been pending for some time authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the American Red Cross such medical and hospital supplies as may have been declared surplus. That resolution is of a character that raises some question as to its wisdom as a matter of policy and with a view of determining the amount, the nature, the location, and general character of the supplies that would be affected by that resolution, I corresponded with, and have had several personal interviews with, a representative of the Red Cross, and have had considerable correspondence with the War Department. So far neither the correspondence nor the interviews have been entirely satisfactory.

The fact is that we had somewhere between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 in estimated value of supplies undisposed of at the time that resolution was introduced, in addition to about $25,000,000 original cost of supplies returned from France, making $35,000,000, or possibly $40,000,000, of supplies on hand.

Under that resolution that entire volume of supplies would have been levied upon, and it seemed to me that it would have been necessary for the department to hold them indefinitely at the call of the Red Cross. Now, we want to be generous to a fault with the Red Cross, but, in my opinion, in dealing with the Red Cross or any other organization we should not tie up a great amount of surplus material which they may not need. Yesterday, in a final effort to secure something definite on which we could promptly act at the very earliest moment, I again addressed letters to Gen. Burr, of the War Department, and to Mr. Kepple, of the Red Cross, with whom I have had correspondence in regard to this matter, and I hope within a few days more to be able to furnish the House such definite, concrete statements relative to the material on hand, its character, its location, and such a statement as to the needs and desires of the Red Cross, that we may be able to offer the resolution in an amended form and have action taken upon it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad that the gentleman from Wyoming has made the statement he has. It may be taken cognizance of by the Committee on Military Affairs and they may give the matter such consideration as it deserves.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say that I have had some information on the surplus material, but I am in the same condition as the gentleman from Wyoming; I am trying to get a little more data.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Now, in reference to another matter, there was a resolution introduced and reported from the committee as to other material that is being held by the War Department in which counties and States are interested.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman means road material.

Mr. GARNER. Yes. I want to ask the gentleman what is the prospect of getting final legislation on that subject?

Mr. KAHN. That bill has been reported from the Military Affairs Committee. In fact, the Senate bill on the subject has been substituted for the House bill and is now on the calendar. We are trying to get a rule to have it considered at an early date.

Mr. GARNER. What seems to be the prospect of getting the rule?

Mr. KAHN. So far as I have been able to learn, the members of the Committee on Rules have promised to take it up for action at an early date.

Mr. GARNER. Perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming can give us some information.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have been endeavoring to get the same sort of information in regard to the road-making material that I have been seeking in regard to the medical supplies and stores. So far I regret to say that I have not made as much progress as I hoped to make. I do not believe it is good business for the Congress to legislate in a blanket way, turn over an indefinite amount of material of undetermined character to people who may or may not need it, but who are quite likely to be perfectly willing to take it if they can get it without any cost.

One of the subcommittees of an investigating committee that went quite early into the matter of automobiles has also been considering this matter with a view to determining how much material we have, where it is, its character, and how quickly it could be made available. I trust the chairman of that subcommittee may very soon be in a position to make a definite recommendation in the matter. As a matter of fact, the chairman of the subcommittee, I understood, was to take the matter up with the gentleman from California, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, a day or two ago. Perhaps he has not been able to do it.

Mr. KAHN. He has not.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope to get a recommendation which the House can intelligently act upon as to what is needed, where it is, and how much the States have requested.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I join with the gentleman in the hope that they will get the information and report from the subcommittee to the full committee at an early date. I am wondering if the procedure in the future is to be like the procedure in the past, and if so, we will never get any action. I am wondering why it is that in the War Department, with their method of keeping books, it takes five or six weeks to ascertain a single fact as to how many automobiles and the material that the counties and States in this country want to utilize for building roads. Is it the fault of the War Department, or is it the fault of the Committee on Military Affairs, or is it the fault of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. I am willing to take my share of the responsibility. Let me say that in this case we have discovered material that the War Department did not know it possessed. In one case a very considerable number of very fine trucks, in excellent condition, that the War Department did not know were in existence. I am not saying that in criticism of the War Department unless the fact does involve a criticism.

Mr. GARNER. I should think it did.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARD. I desire information about the resolution which the gentleman from Kansas has introduced Does it contemplate the use of Government camps as hospitals?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it contemplates the use of hospital supplies such as cots, blankets, and equipment of that kind. They are using the public-school buildings as hospitals. The resolution provides that they shall be furnished under rules and regulations to be drawn by the Secretary of War. They always prescribe that they shall be furnished without expense to the Government.

Mr. GARD. Furnished from supplies within the State or without?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are to be furnished from the supplies within the State.

Mr. GARD. Is it intended to compensate the Government for these emergency supplies?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is presumed that the Government would be glad to aid a stricken population.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be reported.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 154, authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes:

"Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to place at the disposal of the governor of Kansas, for temporary use, such emergency hospital equipment as is not needed by the Government and as may be required to meet the needs of emergency hospitals in the State of Kansas in their efforts to check the present influenza epidemic in that State."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BEE. With the permission of the gentleman from Kansas, I want to continue the catechism of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee on another matter. Some time ago we had a promise of cannon that was captured from Germany, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was littered from top to bottom with bills for that purpose. I want to continue the catechism of the gentleman by asking what the prospects are for any community in this country to ever get one of those cannon?

Mr. KAHN. That is another matter in which we have been trying to get information from the War Department, and the effort has been going on for a period of almost six months. We have been asking periodically how many cannons were captured or surrendered to the American forces in the World War. We have been endeavoring to find out how many heavy machine guns were captured by the American Army or surrendered to it, so that we might know approximately how many of each class of ordnance we would have for distribution. I have not had the information as yet.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman a further question. Are those cannon and machine guns, as far as the gentleman knows, in the United States at this time, or are they still in France, subject to shipment and transportation?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand, relatively few are in this country as yet.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman has no present hope, then, of fulfilling his promise?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I think that in the course of a few months we may be able to get the information, and it is the intention of the committee to pass general legislation upon the subject so that every Member of the House will have an opportunity to get some of these very desirable trophies for his district.

Mr. BEE. Will there be one cannon for each Member or will they be able to get one for each county in his district?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether there will be one cannon for each county in every district, because I am told there are about 4,000 counties in the country in the various States. The latest figures that I get about cannon seems to show that we have about 1,300 captured heavy large-caliber guns. But we have about 4,000 heavy machine guns that can be distributed, so that there is hope of getting something for the Members of the House for their constituencies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to the fact that there are influenza epidemics existing in other States than Kansas at this time. For instance, in certain parts of Illinois and Missouri and certain parts of New York and Pennsylvania and other States there are epidemics of influenza. I do not see why 1 State out of the 48, when influenza is epidemic in a great number of them, should be singled out to receive hospital equipment at this time, when other States are not so provided for. Also I would call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact that we have had several very vicious speeches made on the floor of this House within the last few days asserting to the people of the country that we are without necessary hospital equipment to take care of wounded soldiers and sailors throughout the United States. I can not see why 1 State only of the 48 should be singled out in this way, and I object.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I withhold it; but I think the committee ought to look into the question of how many other States are in immediate need of hospital equipment to meet epidemic emergencies.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman let me say to him that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House has looked into this question? That committee was assured that the influenza epidemic in Kansas to-day is such that double the number of people are stricken that were stricken last year, and that the situation is very serious indeed. All of the existing hospitals are filled to overflowing. I am sure that the Representatives of Kansas will be very glad to help relieve the State of Texas or any other State similarly afflicted.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that to-day States other than Kansas——

Mr. ANTHONY. None of them has asked for this relief.

Mr. BLANTON. And other States have taken precautions to use their own means to provide equipment for their influenza-stricken citizens.

Mr. ANTHONY. The State of Kansas is doing that.

Mr. BLANTON. Why has not Kansas been as alert as it usually is on every other question in providing proper hospital treatment for its own citizens the same as the other 47 States of the Union have?

Mr. ANTHONY. The State is now providing emergency hospitals in addition to the existing hospitals, and this equipment is needed to do this thing. The State is converting public schools into hospitals.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I understand that the gentleman and the Military Affairs Committee are going to be just as liberal with every other State that may see fit to call on this military committee for aid and assistance?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is merely to use the surplus supplies for the emergency?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARD. And the supplies will be returned when they are no longer needed?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that this resolution covers hospital supplies.

Mr. ANTHONY. Equipment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that is to be loaned?

Mr. ANTHONY. Emergency hospital equipment to be loaned under regulations to be provided by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman whether he has any theory of why the broad prairie lands of Kansas, with fresh air blowing over them all of the time, should be worse afflicted with influenza, according to the State lines, than Nebraska, Texas, Colorado, and Illinois?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. It is a very mysterious thing; but it is the case. There is probably no more healthful part of the country than Kansas, but it is now stricken with this epidemic.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would say that the topography of a country has very little to do with the spread of any epidemic that I have ever heard tell of.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have had a great many epidemics in Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk again reported the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. I am in receipt this morning of a communication from the Red Cross out in our section of the country, where they have an epidemic of influenza. They are asking me to ascertain whether it would be possible to secure from the War Department or some one here one of the surplus hangars which they could establish there as a temporary hospital.

Mr. ANTHONY. No doubt the gentleman's State authorities, if they made the request, could do so if such material is surplus.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of Senate amendments numbered 114 and 115 in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement to said amendments and had agreed to the same.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what these amendments are?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs the Clerk of the House drew to my attention the fact that there was a discrepancy in the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill as adopted by the House and as adopted by the Senate. The facts were that two——

Mr. GARD. The Clerk of the House or the enrolling clerk?

Mr. ELSTON. The enrolling clerk of the House—the facts were that two amendments which were receded from by the House were not noted in the agreement to the conference report made by the Senate, although the action taken and the facts are as I have given them. The clerical error was noted in the enrollment of the bill by the clerk, and he prepared the resolution to correct that clerical mistake.

Mr. GARD. This resolution is intended to conform to the actual conditions of the conference report?

Mr. ELSTON. The resolution tends to conform to the actual condition of the conference report and the actual acts of the conferees.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What amendments are they?

Mr. ELSTON. They were amendments numbered 114 and 115, and in the report made by the conferees, by a clerical error, those two amendments are left out and no mention is made of them at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are in the House report as the House receding, and in the Senate report they were accidentally omitted.

Mr. CARTER. The House report was correct in that respect?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ELSTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3813. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain between the towns of Shoreham, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

AMENDING ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8819, an act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," to disagree to the Senate amendments to the same and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference on the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8819. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from California, I would like to ask him a few questions.

Mr. KAHN. Go ahead.

Mr. McKENZIE. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs understands that this House bill was reported after the recommendations of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which has visited the various camps in the country. That committee came back and recommended the adoption of the provision as it is in the House bill. That bill passed the House. Among other things that committee recommended adversely to continuing the holding of certain of the camps. I understand, although I have not had an opportunity of seeing the bill, that in the Senate they amended the bill by including among other camps Camp Gordon, Ga., to be held for one year longer before a final determination as to whether we shall continue to hold that camp or not. Now, I want to ask the chairman if any such amendment as that is included in the bill?

Mr. KAHN. I believe it is.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then, I want to ask further, if the chairman of this committee will agree, or at least give us the assurance, that unless he is able to get that amendment excluded from the bill in conference he will bring the bill back to this House, where we may have a chance to express our views upon that proposition?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to give that assurance; but, if the request is granted, it is the purpose of the gentleman to appoint as conferees upon the part of the House three of the subcommittee that visited these camps, so that they will be able to give the Senate conferees full information regarding the proposed amendments of the Senate.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. We want to facilitate business. It is evident that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs themselves do not know what these amendments are. I think it is asking too much of the House, when we know that the committee knows absolutely nothing about the amendments of the Senate, and I will ask the gentleman to allow this to go over until later in the day.

Mr. KAHN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from California——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order. Objection was made.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAUGEN. May we have that amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, in that it is unauthorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order comes too late. The gentleman from Missouri began debate on the amendment yesterday.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] whether he desires to be heard further on the amendment?

Mr. RUBEY. There are one or two gentlemen on this side who would like to be heard.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman now care to discuss the amendment further?

Mr. RUBEY. If further amendments are offered I shall be glad to speak in opposition to them, but I do not care to be heard further on this particular one.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the item under consideration appropriates $510,000. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty dollars will be available for inspecting the various plants that are manufacturing serum, toxin, and virus; $29,520 for research; and $292,000 for demonstration, investigation, and so forth.

This is not a new item. It has been carried in the bill for a number of years and has been discussed in practically every Congress since first inserted. The serum has been manufactured. It is admitted to-day that it is perfect and its potency has not been questioned. The question is, Shall the amount for salaries, traveling expenses, and hotel expenses for the specialists traveling over the country be increased?

Much has been said about the farmer and encouraging production.

The representatives of the farmers came before the committee and offered suggestions. One request was that we would reduce the appropriation for experts or specialists that are traveling over the country. The item is practically for that purpose. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] believes that this proposition has merit. He is sincere in that belief. But there are differences of opinion as to how the money should be expended. No one has questioned the potency or the value of the serum. After all these years of demonstration and education on the subject it would seem that when we provide for the proper inspection, proper serum, and exhaustive research that that is all that should be necessary.

There are, of course, differences of opinion as to the merits of the proposition and as to the value of the item.

Let me read to you an extract from a letter received from a veterinarian in Iowa. He says:
